JAMES V. RITCHEY, Pres. DANIEL PETIGOR, Vice-Pres.

THE GREATEST ORGANIZATION OF POSTER ARTISTS AND POSTER PRINTERS IN THE WORLD

Telephone Chelsea 8388 ~ 406 west 31st. Street. ~ New York.

To the Industry in general:—

The primary—the essential—object of everybody connected with the motion pictures industry is to keep the auditorium full!

We are doing it in the only way it can be done: By producing posters that are so powerful, so strong and so convincing that the passing public is literally forced to enter the theatre that has them on display. To get the maximum box-office receipts, RITCHEY posters must be used! No matter how much time, thought and money is expended upon a program, it is all wasted if mediocre posters are used, for the public judge a show by the posters that advertise it!

The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is the greatest organization of poster artists and poster printers in the world! Our poster advertising specialists are the only ones who can make the kind of posters that pack auditoriums. All the great poster artists of the country are in our organization. These are the men who are responsible for every great poster that has appeared upon the boards in the last twenty years.

Great posters are inevitably RITCHEY posters!

James V. Ritchey.

A THOMAS H. INCE PRODUCTION

Vengeance!
Deep as the Ocean!

IT STARTS THE THRILL ALONG THE SPINE!

In all the history of motion pictures there has never been a picture like "Behind the Door."

In its slashing boldness, its eloquent daring, its gigantic theme—above all, in its terrific punch—"Behind the Door" stands absolutely and unqualifiedly alone!

It is the very heart and soul of a great passion laid bare with consummate art, to stir to the depths the hearts and souls of grown-up men and women.

"Everywoman"

USE IT!

The following prologue was spoken by "Nobody" at the opening performance of "Everywoman" at the Rivoli, New York. It was written by Dr. Frank Crane

Underneath the wonderful stars, and in all this wonderful world, there is nothing so wonderful as love.

Being the greatest thing in the world, love is the most abused, most perverted, most beset with dangers.

Therefore in this vision you will see how the woman tempted by flattery, by wealth, by luxury, comes at last to see that only love is worth while, is safe and beautiful and everlasting, when it goes hand in hand with truth.

I am Nobody! And Nobody can tell you how divine and glorious love is when love clings to truth, 'for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer,' even unto death; and how terrible the fate of that love, which, losing the companionship of truth, drifts down to the rocks of ruin.

O, Soul of Woman, look! In this picture you will see yourself. And well for you if you shall also see that underneath the wonderful stars, and in all this wonderful earth, there is nothing so wonderful as love, when love's other name is truth!

So wrote Miss Harriet Underhill, in the New York Tribune, after she had seen "BROKEN BLOSSOMS." And so have countless thousands said after her.

The appreciation of things beautiful varies; no great work has ever found universal praise; even the Bible has its defamers—but the whole world of art recognizes that the greatest screen achievement, the supreme contribution to cinema progress, is "BROKEN BLOSSOMS."

And every theatre that seeks to foster the best traditions of the motion picture, every house that is growing with the art of the film, must number among its presentations

GETS

PICTURES

WHEREVER motion pictures are shown, there the name of R. A. Walsh is known! "Regeneration" was his. And "Carmen," "Blue Blood and Red," "The Silent Lie," "The Serpent," "Evangeline" and "The Honor System," too! Milestone after milestone of achievement marks the long trail of successes this pioneer director has blazed!

He was a member of the old Biograph family. He trekked across the Continent with the first Griffith caravan. He sought locations in the Rockies, on the great Western plains, through New England, in the Seminoles, writing, directing and editing romances that have entertained millions throughout the world.

And now—at thirty-three, a veteran when most men begin work—he comes into his own—severs all other ties and joins Mayflower Photoplay Corporation to make R. A. Walsh Productions!

A Mayflower achievement!

A Realart triumph!

REALART PICTURES CORPORATION
469 Fifth Avenue — New York City

R. A. Walsh is to make super-features exclusively. And when Realart says super-features it means just this. Mr. Walsh is to be provided with the biggest stories available, and will be unhampered by financial or time restrictions or the whims of film editors. He will choose his own stories, do the casting, direct his productions to meet his own ideas, and personally cut, edit and title all of his film.

This is Realart production policy—to make pictures in the studio, rather than in the counting room. It is Mayflower policy. It is the policy that has made possible Mayflower's partnership with some of the world's greatest directors. It is a successful policy—as witness "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Miracle Man."

In the past, R. A. Walsh pictures frequently have bulged the lid of the box office cash box. Mr. Walsh now promises to rip it off altogether. He will be backed to the limit in production by Mayflower faith and Mayflower cash. Realart expects from him one of the greatest series of productions ever offered to exhibitors.

Create Happy Hours

THESE are your stars—not ours.

They are stars because their talent won your favor.

No one can successfully force stars upon you. We simply listen to the voice of public demand, and give you your own favorites.

And so SELZNICK PICTURES have opened the door of opportunity for many a youthful genius.

They say SELZNICK stars become famous over night. This is true only because the SELZNICK organization is close to the public, quick to recognize its wishes, and thorough in carrying them out.

By discovering your favorites and placing them in worthy productions we arrive at the secret which makes SELZNICK PICTURES create happy hours.

SPECIALIZATION has come in motion picture distribution.

Sound merchandising and good showmanship have become a necessity.

They guarantee the future success and stability of the independent producer.

Fewer and better pictures are here to stay. They have created a condition which requires more concentrated salesmanship and more thorough exploitation.

The "guess" has gone out of successful picture distribution. Haphazard methods belong to the old order.

Clark-Cornelius Corporation offers the services of a staff of experts in motion picture distribution to the independent producer.

THE LORD LOVES THE IRISH

By MONTE M. KATTERJOHN

ERNEST C. WARDE

VARIETY says: For once at any rate we agree with the producer and distributor claims for a picture. "The Lord Loves the Irish" is the best of all the J. Warren Kerrigan pictures. It has a smashing finale that will tempt any exhibitor to tear the necessary amount of rental from his bank-roll. And also: ably directed and photographed.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS says: A clever Monte Katterjohn comedy-drama is "The Lord Loves the Irish." It touches all the elements of dramatic fare with flashes of melodrama and notes of pathos and sentiment. Kerrigan looks his old self again in this picture.

THE LONE WOLF'S DAUGHTER

Combining the famous characters of
"THE LONE WOLF" & "FALSE FACES"

Wid's SAYS:

"'The Lone Wolf's Daughter' is without doubt a big picture. It has all the evidence of a special and surely must have cost quite a bit to produce. Throughout there is considerable display of wealth and it contains some of the best performances on the part of the players seen in some time.

"You can book this and feel safe from a box-office angle for it is that kind of an attraction. It should make money and will probably stand a long run, profiting by word-of-mouth advertising. Use the name of the star liberally in connection with your announcements. There are numerous possibilities for financial return in this production and you should get your share.

"Louis Joseph Vance has written a real mystery story with plenty of secret passages, sliding doors and other intricate things. From a production standpoint 'The Lone Wolf's Daughter' has been picturized in a big way—lavish sets, a magnificent display of wealth in furnishings and enough of the spectacular to create a dramatic climax. There is enough interest and action alone in the short prologue for a complete picture in itself.

"There is swift action here and the spectacular finale, a fire, works up a dramatic climax preceding the happy ending. You can safely make promises for this production."

From the Magazine Story

"The Marriage of Little Jeanne Sterling"

By Charles Stokes Wayne

Directed by William J. Humphrey

Impulsive, trusting, but unsophisticated Jeanne Sterling is one of the most lovable characters seen on the screen.

Her visit to New York, her unexpected midnight marriage and the harrowing events that followed make an unusual story.

A splendid Vitagraph picture, done in a splendid way.

A Film Magazine----A Family Favorite

There is a motion picture that disarms criticism. It is not drama; it is not a comedy; it is not a news film.

No one can say "I didn't like the story in that picture;" nor can anyone say "I didn't like the star."

It has no star nor story; it needs neither the one nor the other.

It is a film magazine—the Pathe Review.

Slow Motion Photography has made a sensation; you yourself have been impressed with the pictures of the galloping horse, moving at a snail's pace, every muscle, every movement clearly revealed; with the record-breaking sprinter who seems to swim across the tape, and other such amazing and instructive things.

Pathe first presented Slow Motion Photography, and you'll find it in the Pathe Review.

Pathecolor is a revelation in beauty. Films in Pathecolor show the scenic loveliness of the earth's wonder spots, in natural colors. Pathecolor pictures are in each number of the Pathe Review.

In Pathe Review are also charming and instructive nature pictures, taken by well known naturalists; pictures revealing the secrets of science; pictures making clear the arts; and others showing ancient, mediaeval and modern dances interpreted by some of the most famous dancers of the world, staged by Julian Ollendorf.

Directed by Hobart Henley. Scenario by Mrs Sidney Drew.

In a turbulent season of films given over to depicting Bolshevist operations and sex music, "The Gay Old Dog," Hobart Henley's initial production as an individual producer comes as a revelation. Not since it is long going to be possible to give such unalloyed pleasure to Dodd as we have in the picture at the Tivoli that is needed to show what intelligent interpretation of an author's original ideas, without extraneous improvement will result in for the screen.

Too often stories ruined by mishandling in the producing office. Here is an absolutely antithetical case in which the original story has been improved by being let severely alone, and by splendidly capable direction and intelligent scenario preparation. It is not too much to say that this is the best comedy feature of the season and should take first rank as the most photoplay of any kind.

The Gay Old Dog" is a screen translation of Edna Ferber's charming story of the same name. It is the history of Jimmie Dodd, whose youth is crippled by a trifle of selfish sisters and who awakens one day to find himself an old man, rich in everything save love the lack of which has left him poor indeed. No more delightful section for the role of Jimmy could have been made than that of John Cumberland, who invests the character with the same appealing humor and clean sense of comedy which have always distinguished his work on the legitimate stage.

Not the least of the charms of this photoplay lies in the convincing and discriminating selection of types which seem to have stepped from the pages of Gedney Bordon Book As absence of the usual over emphasis and exaggeration to which many producers are addicted in this regard is another noteworthy feature of the production Mr Henley could not have done better himself in the fidelity to real life which Mr Henley has displayed.

Mrs Drew's skilful work in the adaptation is enhanced by excellent subtitles in most instances from the text of the original story, and on the whole it is difficult to know how to divide the praise in this altogether supreme production

"The Gay Old Dog" is not only a moving picture, but a living picture as well—choice, humorous, with touches of tenderness of real value. It needs no comment at all a hopeful in all one of the possibilities of the screen.

Such pictures as this will go far to popularize the movies. It is the picture of a class of people who have never "put their feet" into the room of conventional theatre and of general life at all in the surrounding

All the Cards

To the self-styled Executive Committee of the so-called Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America:

Let us have facts.

It is about time that certain facts be brought to the attention of the Exhibitors of the United States, so that they may determine how best to conserve their present and future interests in securing a just revenue from the use of their screen for industrial and advertising purposes.

That Exhibitors are entitled to this revenue is now universally recognized.

It is clearly apparent now, for reasons that have since developed, and which will be alluded to hereafter, that the delegation from the New York State Exhibitors League to the St. Louis Exhibitors Convention, attended for one of two reasons: Either to gain control of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, so that it could be run by a handful of men—or, to do everything possible to break up the League. Both purposes were intended to serve the purely personal ends of the delegation.

The ensuing controversy has been well aired in the trade papers, and needs no further comment here.

Early in the fall the writer, feeling that it was for the best interests of the Exhibitors of the United States, held several conferences with Messrs. Cohen, Reilly and Berman, in the hope that all differences could be settled and that one united exhibitors' organization could be perfected.

He realized that in the many changes now taking place in this big industry that such an organization was absolutely necessary if exhibitors' interests were to be safeguarded.

For a time it seemed as though harmony would prevail. The reason it did not being the insistance of Messrs. Cohen, Reilly and Berman that the chairman of our Tax Committee, against whom these gentlemen apparently had a personal grievance, resign. This request was positively refused. A compromise was made to allow Mr. Berman or another man designated by said gentlemen to act as Secretary of the Tax Committee and such an agreement was very nearly entered into. In support of this settlement several conferences were held by them in connection with our taxation committee prior to going to Washington.

During these conferences the question of the use of the screen for national advertising came up. This was important because we had already attempted in behalf of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America to organize a "Motion Picture Lovers" contest, whereby our treasury would be greatly assisted, and we had also discussed other forms of national advertising that might tend to serve the interests of all exhibitors and bring a very necessary revenue into the treasury of our national organization.

Can these gentlemen deny that they were very much interested in national advertising as affecting motion picture exhibitors of the United States or that they were even more interested as to just where they would personally participate in the revenue from same?

Can they deny that a suggestion was made to perfect an arrangement whereby a favored few could add to their personal gain by getting certain exclusive contracts for national advertising?

Can they deny that the writer stated that in endeavoring to perform the duties of his office as president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, he could not use such office for personal gain, and that whatever could be arranged must be for the absolute benefit of the Motion Picture Exhibitors individually and for the treasury of the national organization?

Can they deny that from that time on there seemed to be a very lukewarm attitude on their part in the matter of one big harmonious exhibitors' movement, or that one or two further attempts at conference to perfect such harmony was side-stepped?

Can they deny that they are not in the national motion picture advertising development for personal gain and that the best interests, so-called, of the motion picture exhibitors of America is secondary to them in this unseemly squabble?

Can they deny that the opening up of screens of America whereby the picture theatre owners will receive a fair revenue for the use of their screens from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and later as they make similar agreements, from other companies that are in a position to offer such services, which will also finance the national organization, is a big progressive step forward?

Can they deny that the theatre owner is not better off in having competition for his screen advertising than he is to have the same controlled by a handful of men, who may or may not work to his (the theatre owner) best interest, or who may or may not work entirely for their own personal gain?

on the Table

The cards are face up. We are clean on this proposition. We are not looking for personal gain but we do want the screens of America to receive the remuneration to which they are justly entitled.

What has this handful of men done to attempt to tie up such screen advertising? This is the age of competition. Most of us face it every day in our picture business.

What have you self-elected saviors of the exhibitor got to offer the national advertisers, who are given credit for being the brightest men in the business world?

What have you to offer the exhibitor?

What reputation have you for making motion pictures of the kind and character that the public will pay money to see?

Are you incorporated—and who are your stockholders?

WHY DO YOU PROPOSE PERSONAL CENSORSHIP WHEN YOU, ALONG WITH THE ENTIRE INDUSTRY ARE FIGHTING EVERY KIND OF CENSORSHIP?

Don't you know it would take you many months before you could give the exhibitors of this country any kind of revenue, even though you were organized to produce pictures today?

Are you prepared to lay all your cards on the table by stating whether you propose to produce these industrial and advertising films, and, if so, by what kind of contract, and who will finance said company or companies, and who would get the profit?

Who is paying for the pages of advertising that you are running in the trade papers, and the postage for sending circular matter to the national advertisers?

Who is paying for the traveling expenses of your representatives who you say you are sending all over the country?

Who is paying for your ads in Printers' Ink, which are written for the purpose of telling the national advertiser that you can deliver to him the screens of the country, when, on the other hand, in the trade papers you tell the exhibitors it is bad business to allow advertising on the screen?

How does it come that in Printers' Ink, a trade paper which the advertising man is in the habit of reading, you call your organization the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and in the Moving Picture World you call your organization The Committee Organized for the Protection of the Screen?

Can you deny that to make good your bluff you have called on the leading industrial producers for films to distribute—and that you have been turned down in every instance?

Had you first consulted the exhibitors of the country and had their permission to do so, as you claim industrial motion picture companies should have done in the past?

What did you have in mind when you started your trade paper campaign asking the exhibitors of the country not to sign a contract with any film company until they had first seen you?

Do you mean to tell me or the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., that after you have censored an industrial or educational picture which you have guaranteed distribution to the advertiser, that you will be pledged not only to run that picture on my screen but on every other screen of the country.

Are you not "putting a mortgage on a piece of property to which you have no title"?

What prompted you to reproduce in Printers' Ink newspaper clippings which misquoted Mr. Tim Thrift regarding the value of screen advertising, and which Mr. Thrift had already asked the newspapers to retract?

If you did not know that as Chairman of the Film Committee of the Association of National Advertisers, Mr. Thrift has heartily endorsed the screen medium; if you are no closer than this indicates to the development and progress of industrial picture production, how can you safeguard the interests of the exhibitors of America?

What pictures have you or your backers ever produced or distributed that qualifies you to speak on the subject, either to advertisers in Printers' Ink, or to the exhibitors in the trade press?

Knowing as you must that the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., arrangement with the Universal has never been advertised as exclusive, why do you distort the facts and what is your object in your holier-than-thou pose?

Why do you not come clean, and disclose your real purpose, your backers and their object?

Industrial pictures are here to stay. The Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., has officially recognized the fact. Having made the first great forward step toward an open screen and the protection of theatre owners; having made public the details of this step, including the name of the first producer to recognize the exhibitors rights, as president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., I demand that you too lay your cards on the table, and let the exhibitors and the advertisers pass judgment.

Dear Sir:-

It has given me much pleasure to witness the exhibition of the moving pictures you have which have evidently been taken from the deck of a German submarine, and showing the sinking of a number of merchant ships.

Close observation of these pictures establishes undoubtedly in my opinion, that they are bona fide, and were taken under the actual conditions which they represent.

This picture would undoubtedly be of great interest in the picture history of the Navy's activities in the war, and I hope that arrangements may be made to secure a copy of this film for this purpose.

A Summons and an Opportunity

THE United States Government, in the person of Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, has issued a clarion call to the motion picture industry—a summons to aid Uncle Sam in his work of Americanization. It is not the first time the nation has sought the assistance of the screen, but in the opinion of men qualified to speak with full knowledge the present emergency is not second in gravity even to that obtaining during the war.

Already the call has been answered. The industry will respond to the summons — respond with all the enthusiasm and all the moral and material forces which it controls. It would have done so in any event, but it will do so with all the greater energy by reason of the hearty compliments showered on the industry in the persons of the motion picture men summoned to Washington for conference December 17.

Here is what was said by Vice-President Marshall, speaking at the luncheon following the conference in the office of Secretary Lane: "No single industry in America did so much to arouse the zeal, the fervor and the patriotism of the country as did the motion picture industry of America. Your loyalty and devotion and your sacrifices to your government enabled it to come out of the war victorious in its purposes. It came out finding itself and you finding yourselves faced with the problem that is to my mind fully as important as the winning of the war — that is, the importance of winning America for Americans."

Another compliment to the visiting film men was that indicated by the 100 per cent. attendance of the Education Committees of the Senate and House at the Capitol in the evening. No greater praise than that uttered by Secretary Lane to the committeemen could be bestowed on any trade.

In saying that the visitors will do for the people of the country what they are unable to do for themselves and what no other single influence in the United States can do the secretary placed upon the shoulders of the men and women in the motion picture business added responsibilities, among these the duty of maintaining in undiminished form the good opinion of the government representatives.

Mr. Brady, the president of the National Association, and an advisory member of the directing committee, composed of Messrs. Lane, Selznick, Zukor, Crandall and Pullman, addressing a gathering of trade paper editors on his return from Washington, declared this was the time for harmony in all branches of the business; that large service was required and large service should be returned.

Let us hope it will be returned.

Catering to Industry's Backbone

THAT many distributors and producers have centered their activities on the large picture houses in the more populous cities is a fact well known. Sam E. Morris, in his timely article in last week's issue, expresses the view that this policy has been a monumental mistake. He points out that his company will in 1920 make a drive on the small towns. Backing up that position Mr. Morris quotes statistics to the effect that 17 per cent. of the distributors' revenue comes from large theatres and that the remainder of the field is left to chance.

If the figures quoted are accurate — and certainly they "sound" that way—there will be no disposition on the part of any one seriously to take issue with Mr. Morris. If the "velvet" in distribution comes from the smaller houses there is every reason why particular attention should be paid to the welfare of the small-town theatre manager. The smaller the house the larger are the problems of the manager—and the more aid that can be given to this backbone of the industry the better off will the industry be.

Matter for Regret

THE controversy over screen advertising now raging between representatives of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is to be deplored. It is neither dignified nor profitable for the respective factions or for the industry. There is an abundance of constructive work to be done, and it cannot be accomplished if two important exhibitor groups are at loggerheads. They should get together.

Buffalo Allows Soloists at Sunday Picture Shows

BUFFALO exhibitors have been assured that they are not infringing on the law by offering vocal or instrumental soloists as part of their Sunday motion picture programs. Recently Shea's Hippodrome, Shea's Court street vaudeville house and other downtown houses introduced soloists in connection with their Sunday motion picture bills and it seems that complaints began to arrive at the mayor's office from private citizens and managers of the legitimate houses, protesting against the practice.

On Saturday morning, December 20, a delegation of exhibitors headed by Ira M. Mosher, president of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers association, and Harold B. Franklin, a director of the association, personally visited Mayor George S. Buck to discuss the proposition. Mayor Buck said he saw nothing in the law as it now stands, which made it illegal or improper for a moving picture house to allow a soloist to give instrumental or vocal selections as part of the program. This holds true even if the performers appear later in the week in vaudeville performances, assuming that their Sunday appearances are in business or evening clothes.

The mayor made it clear, however, that dancing or acrobatic acts, or anything bordering on a vaudeville performance, would be in violation of the statute. The exhibitors said they wanted first-hand information and because of that called personally on the mayor. They wanted to do nothing that would conflict with the law.

Maryland Will Consider Screen Advertising Evil

THE action that the New York State Exhibitors' League is taking relative to the advertising that is appearing in some of the current moving picture productions, and which is shown at the various theatres and from which the exhibitors derive no revenue, was the subject of a discussion that took place on Tuesday night, December 16, when Samuel Bernan, executive secretary of the New York league, visited Baltimore.

Mr. Bernan met Thomas D. Goldberg, second vice-president of the Maryland league, Secretary W. E. Stumpf, and Julius Goodman, a member of the board of directors. He left sample contracts such as the New York league is now proposing to use. It has been decided by the officers of the Maryland league that a special meeting will be called for the second week in January to decide what action will be taken on the matter.

Winnipeg Uplifters Would Purify Films Shown in City

THE City of Winnipeg, in Western Canada, has become "blessed" with a new form of social uplifters who have for their object the purification of moving pictures and who desire to bring the public and film producers "into harmony." These self-selected reformers have organized a self-selected committee of twelve to censor moving pictures and they promise to do a lot of hard work free of charge. They have decided to study all moving pictures brought into Winnipeg and to prepare lists of acceptable features for posting in local schools, libraries, churches and other places.

"We recognize that destructive criticism is both useless and harmful," declared Mrs. Claude Nash, one of the members of the committee, "and none of us has the idea that the moving picture theatre is an education centre."

This committee has made a selection of pictures which are being shown at neighborhood theatres.

The committee is composed of nine women, all of whom are married with one exception, and three men. One of the latter is Judge D. W. McKerchar, one of the local judiciary.

Mary Pickford's Attorney Answers Alleged Interview

THE Exhibitors' Trade Review, dated December 27, carried what purported to be an exclusive interview with Adolph Zukor, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Among other things, Mr. Zukor was credited with saying "that while he personally has no plans in which Miss Pickford is interested, he would not say definitely that the officials in the production department have not in mind some sort of a plan to star her."

Dennis F. O'Brien, attorney for Miss Pickford, when asked for a comment on Mr. Zukor's statement, said, in a statement issued by Hiram Abrams: "I can only assume that Mr. Zukor has been misquoted. Miss Pickford has absolutely no plans beyond her present arrangement for the release of her productions through United Artists' Corporation. Her arrangement with United Artists' Corporation is for a period of three years and during that period Miss Pickford's time and attention will be given to the making of productions for release solely and exclusively through United Artists' Corporation, for exhibition in motion picture theatres.

"I can say for her that she is happier than she ever has been before, so far as her business arrangements are concerned, and her whole thought is to make the kind of pictures the public wants to see her in. She believes that she has now completed, as her first release for United Artists' Corporation, the finest picture of her career, and she is ready to leave the judgment of this to her admirers.

"She is making pictures absolutely independently and all pictures that she makes during the next three years will be released through United Artists' Corporation. No other producing or distributing organization enters in Miss Pickford's plans in even the remotest way."

Theatres Come Out Ahead in Battle with Buffalo Papers

THE threatened war over theatre advertising in the Buffalo newspapers has been averted and all is once more serene, with the theatres the chief beneficiaries.

The casus belli was the announcement from the "Courier-Enquirer," on top of new set of rules put down without consulting the theatre managers and that free reading notices would be held down to a minimum.

The "Express," the rival morning paper, stepped into the field at this opportune moment to corral the theatre advertising. Its representatives promised the theatre men a page devoted to show houses on which the theatres would be given free reading notices, inch for inch, for the amount of advertising carried.

The proposal looked good, and at any rate it offered the theatre men an opportune shot reply to the "Courier-Enquirer" and it was accepted. As a result the daily theatre advertising in the "Express" jumped from 216 inches in the first week of November to about 300 inches with the first appearance of the daily theatre page.

This week the "Courier-Enquirer" made peace with the theatres and things have gone back to a peace time basis, the "Express" for the second week of December carrying 248 inches in the daily, a slight gain that was offset by an equivalent decrease in the Sunday display. The inch-for-inch agreement still holds, however, and during the second week of December there was a gain for the theatres in the "Express" of 271 inches in free reading notices, exclusive of reviews, with no additional cost for advertising.

F. & R. Affiliate with Loew.

Affiliation with Marcus Loew has been confirmed by Finkelstein & Ruben, of Minneapolis. The affiliation, which will take place January 1, will be to replace attractions offered by the Western Managers' Association, controlled by the Orpheum Theatre interests.

The Loew attractions will be placed in the New Palace and New Grand at Minneapolis; the New Palace at St. Paul, and the New Palace and New Grand at Duluth. The policy of running a strong serial in connection with the vaudeville will be maintained.

OF AN ALERT FIELD

Exhibitors Will Fight License Fee Increase

POSTPONEMENT until after January 1 of action on the proposed increase in picture house license fees in Minneapolis, has been ordered by the legislative committee of the city council. The action was to give the motion picture and other theatremen sufficient time to compile data showing the effect of the proposed increase.

The ordinance, which was introduced November 26 by Alderman C. H. Rudsill, Socialist, provided for increases in license fees ranging from 100 per cent. on suburban theatres to more than 1,100 per cent. on downtown houses. It was avowedly for the purpose of raising revenue to replace saloon licenses, regardless of the effect on picture theatres.

The motion picture men, after much discussion, were prepared to offer to submit to a 100 per cent. flat increase in fees. Now, they declare, they will fight any attempted raise in fees.

Sam Spedon's Son-in-Law Killed in Motor Accident

IT was a sad Christmas at the home of Sam Spedon, in Ridgewood, N. J., made so by an accident that resulted in the death of his son-in-law, Herbert Titlar, and the serious injury of Mr. Spedon's daughter, Bessie. Mrs. Titlar miraculously escaped death in the crash that killed her husband.

The Titlars were motoring from their home in Ossining to Ridgewood, their automobile loaded with presents for the Spedon family's Christmas tree. On Broadway Hill, Dobbs Ferry, a motor-truck driven by Christopher Letzler, of Albany, became unmanageable and struck the Titlar car, which Mrs. Titlar was driving.

The touring car was badly smashed, Mrs. Titlar was rendered unconscious and husband and wife were hurried to the hospital suffering. Mr. Titlar's skull was fractured and he died within a short time. Mr. Titlar was in the automobile business in Ossining.

Samuel Byerley to Manage New Annapolis Playhouse

THE Circle Playhouse, Inc., which is now under construction in Annapolis, Md., is to be a very high-class theatre if the plans are carried out as planned. The land and building will cost about $75,000. The structure is being built from the designs of Henry P. Hopkins, architect.

The officers of the company include Samuel Byerley, president; Dr. J. Oliver Purvis, vice-president; James A. Welch, secretary, and J. Newton Gilbert, treasurer. Mr. Byerley will be the manager of the playhouse. Both Mr. Byerley and Mr. Welch were in Baltimore recently, visiting the exchanges here.

This theatre has a fine location opposite the State House in Annapolis. It is built of brick and tile on Colonial lines and measures 53 by 102 feet. The seating capacity will be 1,000. There will be a balcony with mezzanine boxes and the latter will be equipped with wicker chairs. The heating system will be of the blower type. The interior color scheme will be gray and blue. The music is to be furnished by an orchestra and an organ, which will cost approximately $4,000.

Incorporations Indicate the Industry's Prosperity

THE exceptional prosperity prevailing in amusement circles is reflected in the fact that in one week sixteen new amusement enterprises were incorporated in New York with a capitalization of $2,997,000, exceeding any week in the history of the secretary of state's office. The largest of the concerns is the Mir-America Corporation, with a capitalization of $2,050,000. The new concerns are all located in New York City.

Among the new companies entering the business are the following: Ritz Motion Pictures Corporation, $10,000, Jules Bakos, D. A. Sterling and Charles C. Ritz; Murray Hill Photoplay Corporation, $10,000, William and Mary Yoost and Harry Weltfisch; Haring Amusement Company, $250,000, Irving E. Meller, Charles L. Raskin nad Helen P. Smith; Mir-America Corporation, $2,050,000, George A. Enright, James L. Burks and Samuel H. Hadley; Popular Educational Film League, $1,000, Sol Klapper, Dale Hanshaw and A. B. Carrick; American Sensitfilm Company, $500,000, N. H. Testa, Sol Klapper, A. B. Carrick; Forest and Stream Film Corporation, $5,000, John T. Wood, Clara A. Read and John P. Holman.

Queens Borough Is Seen as Future Production Center

QUEENS BOROUGH of Greater New York is rapidly becoming the "Motion Picture Center of the East," according to Queens Borough, the monthly publication of the Queens Borough Chamber of Commerce, which shows that within the last six months two prominent production companies have purchased large tracts of land and are erecting buildings to cost at least $3,500,000.

The latest companies to locate in Queens Borough are the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which has purchased an entire block in the Astoria section and which is now erecting a $2,000,000 studio, and the Selznick Pictures Corporation, which has purchased a block on Queens Boulevard, Long Island City, and will break ground January 1 for a $1,500,000 studio. In addition, the Gaumont Company and Supreme Pictures, Inc., are established in Flushing; the G. M. Film Printing Corporation is erecting a building in Long Island City; the Pathescope Company of America has been established in Long Island City for several years, and the American Industry Motion Picture Production Company is situated in the Aqueduct section.

Queens Borough is an attractive periodical that contains news of real interest. The editorial of the September-November number declares that picture production companies are gradually quitting California for New York, with the scientific development of the use of artificial light. On following pages, President Adolph Zukor, of Famous Players; Lewis J. Selznick and Myron Selznick, of Selznick Pictures Corporation and others tell why they are building immense studios in the East.

Exchange Men to Fight State Censorship Laws

FOLLOWING a conference of the managers of all local exchanges on December 21, announcement is made that the Exchanges Managers Association of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce had been organized with Harry M. White, Goldwyn, chairman; George Denbow, Fox, vice chairman, and John Clark, Paramount, secretary and treasurer. Plans for this organization had been under way since last April, but nothing definite was accomplished until yesterday's meeting, which was attended by representatives of eleven exchanges.

It is understood that the first step the association will make will be to act in conjunction with the National Committee on Censorship for the modification of the Pennsylvania censorship laws.

Fire Damages Solax Studio.

Moving picture players in costume at the Solax studio, Fort Lee, N. J., became firemen on December 20 when electric wires or spontaneous combustion caused a fire in the factory building. This structure was destroyed, but the hard work of the actors and of firemen saved the other buildings. The damage is estimated at $75,000.

Many films were destroyed, but all reels of "The Fortune Teller," which was in the process of making and which stars Marjorie Rambeau, were saved by Albert Capellani, the producer, who lacerated one hand when he broke a window to get at the film, which was in its "bath" in the laboratory. The studio building proper was saved.

The "Mysterious Mr. Smith" Who Gave "Tech" $4,000,000 May Be Eastman

IS George Eastman, creator of the thin gelatin strip on which so many roles are portrayed, playing a part in a drama that holds the interest of many thousands of people? Is he "The Mysterious Mr. Smith" who has been heralded up and down the country as the secret godfather of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology? These are questions which many have tried to solve, but unsuccessfully, although all indications point to the fact that the film magnate is playing the role and enjoying himself immensely in doing so.

A few months ago Dr. Robert Cockburn Maclaurin, president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, announced that a friend of the institute had tendered a gift of $4,000,000, provided that other friends of the institute chipped in with a like sum by the early part of next year. This generosity was immediately attributed to Mr. Eastman, but Dr. Maclaurin said that he was unable to give out any information, other than that for the time being the man must be known as "The Mysterious Mr. Smith," that his real name would be divulged when other friends had done their share in raising half of an $8,000,000 fund, and that if it was not raised the identity of the unknown might never be revealed.

Refused to Affirm or Verify.

When Mr. Eastman was questioned he merely referred all inquiries to Dr. Maclaurin, although it was very significant that he did not deny that he was "The Mysterious Mr. Smith" and made no reference to the wide publicity given to his name in connection with the matter. Various newspapers have tried various hunches to disclose the identity of the donor, but so far nothing of a positive matter has been dug up. In addition to this, the combined curiosity of thousands of Boston Tech men throughout the country has met the same puzzling silence and their only recourse has been to pitch in and strive to raise the $4,000,000 to ease their curiosity.

Many people who know Mr. Eastman say that there is little doubt that he is "The Mysterious Mr. Smith." It is pointed out that he has always been one of the most generous contributors to the institute, and this also brings up the fact that when the name of the unknown is given out it may also be disclosed that many anonymous gifts of the past have been made by him. "The Mysterious Mr. Smith" has been a generous friend of the institute for a long time. It is also a significant fact that the Eastman Kodak Company is partial to Boston Tech men, or at least there is a general impression that preference is given to them in the matter of employment.

Vitagraph's New Serial Near Release.

"The Invisible Hand," the new Vitagraph serial with Antonio Morano starred, is about to be released. The first episode is in three instead of the usual two reels. The production is a secret service story and deals with a struggle of the Government, through its secret service, with a strongly organized band of criminals.

The title of the first episode is "Setting the Snare." The remaining episodes are entitled "T. N. T.," "Winged Death," "Gassed," "Dodging Disaster," "The Closing Jaws," "The Submarine Cave," "Outwitted," "A Heathen Sacrifice," "The Fender of Flesh," "Flirting With Death," "The Dungeon of Despair," "The Plunging Peril," "A Modern Mazeppa" and "Closing the Net."

A "Bad M... ...a "Good Girl" to Be Co-Starred by Vitagraph.
Joe Ryan, of the best known and liked "bad men" of the screen, and Jean Paige, featured in many Vitagraph productions, will be co-starred in a new Big-V serial, tentatively titled "Moods of Evil"

Ralph Ruffner says: (page 67)

The characters make the story and the story makes the book, and good advertising will make the grade with all of them.

Another thing I find myself strong for, and that is good newspaper stills of the two-reel comedies. Some of the comedies sometimes have copy which, when played up—like a pretty girl in a fetching costume, and most all comedies now have 'em—will be worth several hundred dollars on the week, but there is not enough attention paid to this essential by the comedy producers. A little more speed in this direction and exhibitors will cash in on fillers, if the so-called feature just doesn't happen to hit.

"Bucking the Tiger" to Be Filmed Immediately

ACTION is the slogan of the Lewis J. Selznick enterprises and it was never better exemplified than in the fact that while "Bucking the Tiger," Lewis J. Selznick's first offering to the speaking stage, was in rehearsal, Myron Selznick was making preparations to have the story filmed for the screen. This is unusual as screen producers ordinarily wait to see whether a play is a success before considering it for their stars.

But after attending a rehearsal of the drama Myron Selznick had no doubt of its success and his judgment was born out by the reception given to the opening performance in the Globe Theatre Christmas Day. So enthusiastic is Mr. Selznick over "Bucking the Tiger" that he has induced the producers to allow it to be filmed almost immediately and work will begin on it soon.

It is expected that members of the present stage cast will appear in the screen version, and Owen Moore will probably be seen in the leading role. The play is from the novel by Achmud Abdullah, and was adapted by May Tully. It is a melodramatic comedy full of suspense and laughs.

Lewis Employs 1,000 Extras.

In filming Andrew Soutar's novel, "Other Men's Shoes," as his first special for Pathé distribution, Edgar Lewis employed more than 1,000 extras, and used nearly 3,000 school children in one of his big scenes. The picture is scheduled for release February 1. Cranford Kent has the leading role.

Instead of spending a week getting his players together for the mob scenes, Mr. Lewis enlisted the co-operation of two big mill owners in New Jersey, and used their employees as "extras." In doing this, Mr. Lewis obtained more realistic atmosphere than he could possibly have gained by the employment of ordinary extra players.

May Allison Wears Many Costumes.

Industry at Government's Call Will Aid in Battle on Radicals; Secretary Lan Heads Committee

FOR the second time the aid of the film and screen toward patriotic ends has been enlisted by the Government, when following an invitation by Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane to a conference with him, addressed to leading executives of the Motion Picture Industry, initial impetus was given to a country-wide screen campaign, to combat Bolshevism and ultra-radical tendencies which endanger the very fabric of American institutions.

The meeting called by Secretary Lane was held on December 17 in his office and was attended by a delegation headed by William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. In addition to Mr. Brady there were present the following representatives of the Motion Picture Industry: John C. Flinn, Director of Publicity and Advertising, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Gabriel L. Hess, secretary and counsel, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation; Lewis J. Selznick, president Select Pictures Corporation and Selznick Pictures Corporation; C. C. Pettijohn, assistant to President Lewis J. Selznick; William Wright, Vitagraph, Inc.; P. A. Powers, Universal; Oscar A. Price, president United Artists Corporation; Harry N. Crandall and Barry Buckley of the Crandall Theatres; Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary, National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; Jack S. Connolly, Washington representative of the National Association; Major Raymond L. Pullman, chief of police of Washington; Peter Brady, Allied Printing Trades Council, New York City, and Clarence L. Linz, of the Washington bureau of the Moving Picture World.

Secretary Praises Industry.

In opening the conference Secretary Lane expressed the appreciation of the Government of the work done during the war by Motion Picture men "constantly and consistently in supporting our Government."

"I had hoped that there would be some kind or form of testimonial given you," said the Secretary after continuing his talk of the work done by the industry. "You did not come within the sphere of my activities during the war, but I had the expectation that at its close—technically we are not yet at peace—there would be a formal recognition made to you of the part you had so generously played."

The suggestion had been made to him by Major Raymond W. Pullman, chief of police of the District of Columbia, a man who is most interested in the motion picture industry and who has in many ways contributed to its upbuilding, that the industry might be willing to carry on an Americanization campaign. Today's conference.

Secretary Lane laid his cards upon the table. During the last half of the War the President had a fund upon which his department could draw for money to carry on the educational campaign. The cessation of hostilities put an end to that, and other assistance must be obtained to keep up the fight on illiteracy. The Government is enlisting the assistance of the churches, the schools and patriotic and other organizations. Two years ago it was estimated that there were approximately 8,500,000 people in the United States who could not read or write the English language. Out of the first 1,600,000 men assembled under the draft there were 390,000 who could not write a letter home, who did not understand such signs as "smoking prohibited." "That is mighty humiliating in a country where we had the first public school system," commented the Secretary.

Industry Can Get Quick Action.

Mr. Lane outlined the legislation that is now pending in Congress, but it will take some time to get that through and then additional time to get the plans under way. "You can do much more immediately," he told the film men. "I do not think it is perhaps wise and justifiable to say you can do more in the long run, or better than the people of the United States can do in the development of the right spirit, but we do not want to wait a generation—we cannot afford to. If you will get together and make a determined campaign, under any leadership that you please, for a better America and for a more confident America, there is no influence that can duplicate the good you can do."

One suggestion made by him was that a map be prepared, showing the State divisions and the principal cities, and that this be flashed on every screen in the United States at each performance coupled with the query "Can you find where you live?" That in itself would create an idea of the size of the country, for the cities would be microscopic spots.

Vice President Marshall Talks.

After Secretary Lane had outlined a number of scenarios that could be worked up into good Americanization projects, an adjournment for luncheon was taken. A delightful dinner was served at the Cosmos Club, following which the film men were addressed by Vice President Marshall, Senator Kenyon, of Iowa, chairman of the Senate Committee on Education, and Congressman Simeon Fess, chairman of the House Committee on Education.

"No single industry in America did so much to arouse the zeal, the fervor and the patriotism of the country as did the motion picture industry of America," said the Vice President. "Your loyalty and devotion and your sacrifices to your Government enabled it to come out of the war victorious in its purposes. It came out finding itself and you finding yourselves faced with the problem that is to my mind fully as important as the winning of the war—that is, the importance of winning America for Americanism.

Must Teach Republic's Principles.

"A man cannot believe without knowledge, and he cannot learn without a teacher—somebody must teach him. A vast number of men in America who have no conception whatever of American institutions must be taught the vital principles of the Republic and must be put to their best judgment and determination on the question whether the Republic in the light of modern life or modern civilization has failed to survive.

"For myself, I am willing—no, not willing, but I shall be reconciled if the Republic goes down at the judgment of educated, intelligent and conscientious American citizens, and I am unwilling to have it go down at the hands of the ignorant, the idle, the shiftless, the vicious, or men who cannot understand that right and duty go hand in hand, and that the old order where men were contending always for their rights must be supplanted for the new order where men are seeking opportunities to do duty toward their fellowmen."

Industry to Have Official Status.

"It is believed that the time has now come when the leading motion picture producing companies can be interested in the Americanization movement, and perhaps induced to get behind it in the same manner which the motion picture industry gave such splendid support to the Government during the war period," said Mayor Pullman to Secretary Lane.

"It also will give you an excellent opportunity as a representative of the Government to express perhaps a little better than has yet been done the Government's appreciation of all that the motion picture people did during the war period.

"Propaganda plays are perhaps necessary, but what is more urgent is the working of thoughts into ordinary plays which will place before our people the best American ideals."

After the dinner the film men returned with Secretary Lane to the Interior Department for an afternoon's session, at which all of the men gave their views on how this work could be accomplished.

Film Men Attend Committee Session.

An adjournment was taken for supper, the film men at 8 o'clock going to the Capitol to confer with the members of the Senate and House Committees on Education. The problem was put before the Senators and Representatives in a general way.

Mr. Brady suggested that the Congress should pass some sort of resolution empowering the industry to act as governmental agents. With such authority all of the companies would be willing to go ahead. Without this, the industry might hold back believing that the men then in that gathering had given over the screen to the Government without consulting all.

It was suggested that, at the request of the Government, trailers would be made carrying such slogans as "Are you a good American?"

To Duplicate Loan Drive.

It was also suggested that films similar to those produced for the Liberty Loan drive could be distributed.

Mr. Flinn outlined some of the pictures made for the Liberty Loan drive. He also told how the films were distributed to the theatres. "The artists are ready and willing to do all they can in this emergency," said Mr. Flinn.

Oscar Price, president of the United Artists, who handled the Liberty Loan drives as an official of the Treasury Department explained how the campaigns were carried on.

Mr. Brady created a great deal of amusement when he told of the competition offered by the motion pictures to the political campaigners. "At French Lick in the last campaign Senator Hoke Smith spoke, but to a very small audience because a movie show was in operation at the same time. Mr. McAdoo tried to speak in another place. He had no audience because Charlie Chaplin was talking to fifteen thousand men at another point and McAdoo had to go on Chaplin's platform in order to reach the people."

Secretary Lane Pays Tribute.

Secretary Lane came to the meeting to explain, as the head of the Interior Department, the purposes of the campaign.

"You have before you as patriotic a group of men and as influential a group of men as can be found in the United States, and our job tonight, yours and mine, is to do nothing more than give them a request and they will do for us what we are unable to do for ourselves and what no other single influence in the United States can do," he told the members of Congress.

Secretary Lane reviewed the events of the morning and afternoon sessions, detailing the Americanization pictures that the movie men can produce and screen. He explained what he means by visualizing and by "Americanization."

Selznick Waives Any Profits.

Lewis J. Selznick, spoke on the financing of the plan. He saw it was not the intention of the producers to make anything out of the films. If anything is made it could be turned over to any purpose the Government might designate.

Pictures have to be made. Fifty-two of them—out of a fund that will be raised for the purpose, this money to be repaid out of the sales or leases.

Senator Hoke Smith, of Georgia, said that a resolution "that it is the sense of the meeting that we ask the co-operation of these gentlemen, should be adopted. It is not often that the Government has an offer of such service so liberally made. I think they can be of a great deal of service to us. I think they can do splendid work. I am glad to be one to thank them for their willingness to give us help."

Crandall Speaks for Exhibitors.

Harry Crandall in a few brief remarks declared that the exhibitors would do their share. "The exhibitors will gladly give twelve minutes of each show to put on an Americanization reel," he declared.

Secretary Lane is some hustler for no sooner had the film men agreed to organize a working committee than he named Louis J. Selznick to represent the producers; Adolph Zukor, to represent the distributors; Harry M. Crandall, to represent the exhibitors and Major Pullman the municipabilities. The secretary will act as chairman and Mr. Brady will assist the committee. It was agreed that all trailers and films to be used for this purpose shall be submitted to this committee.

Committee Calls on Industry.

The following resolution was prepared by the Congressmen:

"Be it resolved that it is the sense of the Joint Committee on Education of the Senate and House that the motion picture industry of the United States be requested to do all that is within its power to upbuild and strengthen the spirit of Americanization within our people."

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

A second resolution, offered by Representative Dallinger, of Massachusetts, expressing the thanks of the Joint Committee to Secretary Lane and the motion picture men was also adopted.

Announces Neilan's First Through First National

IT is definitely announced that the initial independent production by Marshall Neilan to be released through First National Exhibitors' Circuit will be "The River's End," an adaptation from James Oliver Curwood's latest popular novel of the same name.

Mr. Neilan has withheld information concerning this picture until the details had been thoroughly worked out, and now that the production is nearing completion he discloses a number of interesting features.

The release of the film will come at the time when the story has reached the peak of the national popularity it is now enjoying, according to the announcement.

"The River's End," Curwood's novel of the Canadian Northwest, is conceded by those who have read it to be his most sensational success. It is now being sold in book form throughout the country and is establishing new records for book sales. It first appeared in a popular magazine and as a result of its popularity has just been placed on the stands in book form.

Marion Fairfax, who recently signed a long term contract with Mr. Neilan, adapted Mr. Curwood's story to the screen. During her five years of service with the Famous Players-Lasky Company, Miss Fairfax was responsible for numerous productions of that concern.

The interiors are finished and the entire company is now at Bear Valley, Cal., staging various exteriors. In another week the players will journey to the Saskatchewan River in Canada, which gave Mr. Curwood the material for his story, and there the final scenes of the picture will be completed.

Prizma Pictures Monte Carlo.

Prizma's release for the current week should be one of the most popular so far made by this company. If there is any place under the sun that is of more interest than Monte Carlo it would be hard to find that particular spot. To bring the great gambling mecca in front of your eyes in your home theatre, and show you the marvelous beauties of nature in the way of scenery, together with the architecture of this gambling palace and other points of interest in one of the smallest principalities of the world, is a novelty which the motion picture theatre seldom offers.

Brilliant New Star Is Alice Lake In Metro's "Should a Woman Tell?"

By Edward Weitzel

ALICE LAKE has arrived. The screen has a new star. In the front rank of moving picture actresses whose youth, comeliness and dramatic ability have made them greatly admired by the public the dark-eyed girl who plays the part of Meta Maxon in a recent Metro release "Should a Woman Tell?" has won her place by force of merit alone. Unheralded by any loud blast from the trumpet of an industrious publicity promoter her performance of this one character has taken her out of comparative obscurity and from now on her name will be associated with all that is best in the acting of the silent stage.

If this sounds like extravagant praise, it is the unanimous verdict of a jury of hard-boiled reviewers. Whether their judgment counts for much or little with the exhibitor it still remains a fact that every person in the room was charmed and delighted by the unexpected display of histrionic skill and deep feeling shown by the whisp of a girl who has been selected to head the cast of "Should a Woman Tell?" The work of the author has considerable merit as a story of real life, but the acting of Alice Lake is finer and better than anything in the picture itself.

Started in Slapstick Comedy.

It will readily be recalled that Alice Lake has been best known for her connection with the Roscoe Arbuckle comedies. The distinguishing feature of her acting in those cleverly produced comic pictures was the thoroughness with which she did whatever was assigned her. Dependable seems to be the proper word to explain the director's reason for selecting her for the attractive young girl parts she was called upon to play. One thing is certain, no one suspected the extent of the emotional power hidden behind those expressive eyes of hers or lurking back of her winning smile. But she must have been conscious of it herself. At any rate she announced one day that she had secured an engagement to do a serious part and so, in all likelihood, turned her back on straight comedy roles forever.

Her former management had not been blind to how much Alice Lake's unaffected type of winsome young womanhood added to the tone of the Arbuckle productions, and it was this same personal quality which must have dictated her selection for the part of Norah in "Lombardi, Ltd." As Tito Lombardi's faithful little assistant in his Fifth Avenue dressmaking establishment the new member of the Metro acting force was quietly effective, but betrayed no desire to push herself into undue prominence. Her scenes required mostly a note of real sincerity, and the note was never lacking.

New Role an Emotional One.

Then came the selecting of the cast for "Should a Woman Tell?" The star part is that of a young and unsophisticated girl reared in a New England fishing village who is taken to Boston by a society matron and is made the victim of her new friend's dissolute nephew. The girl yields to him but the once and then goes back home overcome by her sense of shame.

Long before the finish of the story she wins the sympathy and respect of the spectator. When the young artist who has always loved her asks her to be his wife she does not accept him at once but sends him a note telling him of the one black page in her life. Her mother intercepts the note, and the truth does not come out until after Meta and the artist are married. He leaves his wife on their wedding night and becomes an aimless wanderer. Deceived by a false report of her husband's death, and urged on by her mother, Meta marries the man who wronged her and soon learns his utter worthlessness. The couple drift down to Mexico City where a chance meeting with the artist involves the two men in a desperate battle, and Meta's betrayer falls from a balcony and is killed. Separation and reflection have convinced the artist that he has been unjust to his wife and he is overjoyed to heal the breach between them.

An Achievement of the Highest Rank.

Such is a brief outline of the plot of "Should a Woman Tell?" A story of so elemental a nature and one involving its chief character in the situation which gives the picture its title must have as the physical and mental embodiment of that character an actress who can respond instantly to every change of feeling and indicate a nature of inherent frankness and freedom from guile. The "betrayed maiden" type wins sympathy in proportion to her own lack of moral defense and to the extent of her girlish appeal. In the realization of these characteristics Alice Lake's portrayal of Meta Maxon is an achievement of the highest merit.

Makes Meta a Living Personality.

But this is only a part of her equipment for the art of the player. Sitting in a darkened projection room and wholly unprepared for the exhibition of rare talent which was to follow it was a rather indifferent body of spectators that prepared to watch the opening scene of "Should a Woman Tell?" The first flashes of Meta are in the midst of a cleverly contrived shipwreck episode with some arresting effects in tinting, and the girl is seldom in the center of the picture. She seemed always to do the right thing and to blend in quietly with the action of the story.

With the coming of the next day and the passing of somewhat commonplace events it began to dawn on the men and women sitting in front of the screen that they had eyes only for the slim figure of the girl in the simple frock who was becoming more and more a living personality, as she went about her share in the narrow life of a New England fisher village.

Her Lovable Simplicity.

It was always a pleasure to watch her. There never was the slightest difficulty in understanding precisely what she felt inwardly or conveyed to others. Her expressive face, aglow with that brilliancy which is a gift of the patron saint of all good actors, mirrored each thought instantly and distinctly. Without self-consciousness and without any suggestion of pose she moved through the episodes leading up to her parting with her youthful sweetheart and her arrival in Boston. The story was familiar enough, but its heroine fascinated one by reason of her lovable simplicity and sincerity.

To watch Meta's introduction to the ways and manners of cultivated people and to observe how well she acquitted herself was also warming to the heart.

Each Scene Given Stamp of Truth.

Her visit to the summer house across the lake with the unscrupulous Morton Sedgwick followed. Here she gave evidence of emotional power that was as unforced as it was convincing. The entire scene has been discreetly handled by the director, but it is the appealing innocence of the victimized girl and the depth of her self abasement that prevent any feeling of offense. And so on through the incident of her return home in disgrace, her meeting again with her old sweetheart, her effort to reveal everything to him when he asks her to becomes his wife, her mother's concealment of the letter of confession and her husband's rejection of Meta when he learns the truth on their wedding night; each scene is given the stamp of reality, and works the author's will on you by virtue of the personality, sincere feeling and beautiful art of Alice Lake. Nowhere in the entire picture does she fail to measure up to the full artistic statue of her role.

And so a deserving young actress comes into her birthright with nothing to thank but her own honest effort. And it is not often that so quiet a stellar debut has resulted in so great a triumph.

Black Defends Action and Assails Cohen Group; Lustig Enters Fight

THE battle raging between the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, over the question of screen advertising waxes hot. President Alfred S. Black of the former organization, in a long statement issued this week, departs from his accustomed mildness of manner and speech. He charges that the delegates to the St. Louis Convention last June from the New York exhibitors were determined either to rule or ruin the league. Mr. Black tells of several conferences held with Messrs. Cohen, Berman and O'Reilly of New York in the hope of solving the differences between the two bodies.

When Harmony Hovered.

For a while it seemed as though harmony would prevail, Mr. Black says, but the insistence of the three upon the elimination of Louis F. Blumenthal, chairman of the League's tax committee, negatived all attempts at conciliation. Screen advertising was under discussion in these conferences, Mr. Black states.

The president of the National Exhibitors denies that his organization has made any exclusive contract with Universal for the showing of industrials for which money will be paid to theatre owners. Mr. Black also asks many questions as to the conduct and the financing of the campaign being conducted by the Cohen-Bullock organization.

Lustig Repudiates League Contract.

H. H. Lustig, president of the Clevelandland Motion Picture Exhibitors League, of which body Sam Bullock is executive secretary, declares the project announced by Mr. Black is not meeting with favorable response throughout the country. He says so far as his knowledge goes the exhibitors would refuse "almost to a man" to be a part of an organization which bound itself to distribute films which were the product of any one producer of films.

Mr. Lustig complains that while he is a member of the League's advertising committee named at St. Louis and appointed by Mr. Black he has not been consulted by the president of the League in the negotiations leading up to the Universal affiliation and declares the step was taken without his approval. The Cleveland official expresses the opinion that any such move would be "business suicide" for the exhibitors. In a letter to Mr. Cohen he is further quoted as saying:

"I can't understand how the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, if such a thing exists, or its executives, could enter such an agreement in such a high-handed manner. Certainly the men most vitally interested, the exhibitors who are to deliver, were not consulted."

Olive Tell Signed by Jans; B. A. Rolfe to Be Director

JANS PICTURES, INC., announces the name of the first star to be featured in the photodramas it will begin producing at once. Olive Tell, who is scoring a decided success on the speaking stage in Morosco's "Civilian Clothes," is the young woman signed.

Miss Tell is well known to film fans for her work in "To Hell with the Kaiser," "Secret Strings," and many others. She began her screen career as a member of the Empire Mutual All Star Company and previously had enjoyed an exacting training on the stage, having been graduated from stock work to that of a Broadway star.

Although Miss Tell's first story has been selected it has not as yet been named and probably will not be until production is well under way. It is said, however, that the leading role provides Miss Tell with a part that fits her like the proverbial glove.

B. A. Rolfe will direct Miss Tell.

Theodore Kosloff Becomes Member of De Mille Staff

THEODORE KOSLOFF has affixed his name to a long-term agreement by the terms of which he will appear in and assist in the production work of future Paramount-Artcraft pictures, according to an announcement just made by Cecil B. De Mille, director-general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The Russian dancer joined Cecil B. De Mille's company several months ago, playing an important role in the special production of "Why Change Your Wife?" which was recently completed at the Lasky studio. According to the original arrangement existing between Mr. De Mille and Mr. Kosloff, the latter was to appear in two De Mille productions and then terminate his connection with the company.

Under the new arrangement, Kosloff becomes a permanent member of the De Mille staff. Whenever possible, he will portray roles suited to his personality and it is understood that these screen appearances will not be limited to De Mille productions alone.

In addition to his work before the camera, Theodore Kosloff will assist Mr. De Mille in a technical capacity. As an authority upon the art of the dance and of Oriental stage settings, he will be invaluable assistance to the director.

Chicago Exhibitors and Public Greet Miss Binney

BECAUSE of the interest evinced by Illinois exhibitors in Constance Binney and her first Realart picture, "Erstwhile Susan," Manager W. H. Willard, of the Chicago office, held a private showing of the picture on December 12 before one of the largest gathering of showmen ever assembled in that city for similar purposes.

"Erstwhile Susan" was already announced for its first Chicago presentation at the Playhouse on December 14, but such was the result of country-wide reports on this picture that the Chicago office deemed it inadvisable to wait even the two days that intervened.

The trade showing held at the Universal exhibition rooms was packed to the doors and many were obliged to stand in the doorway during the screening. It is said to have been the greatest gathering of exhibitors ever assembled in Chicago for the reviewing of a photoplay. Miss Binney was unable to appear in person, although in the city with her stage company, because of a sprained ankle. Manager Willard remained in his office afterwards and attended to the signing of contracts with showmen who were unable to stay over in Chicago. The bookings are reported to be gratifying as the result of the screening.

Two days later, at the Playhouse Theatre, Miss Binney's first Realart picture played to a record house on the same stage where the young actress made her first theatrical appearance several years ago.

Fox News Cameras "Shot" Carlisle, Notorious Bandit

PICTURES of events in the capture of "Bill" Carlisle, the lone train robber, were shown in a recent release of Fox News. These remarkable pictures were obtained by two Fox News cameramen, P. V. Hurd, of Denver, and F. J. Hiscock, of Cody, Wyo., who were notified to "cover" the story by the home office, when news of the apprehension of the bandit was received. The two cameramen traveled hundreds of miles—Hurd to Douglas, Wyo., and Hiscock to Wheatland, Wyo., where Carlisle was imprisoned.

Scenes were taken at William Hill's ranch at Rock River, where Carlisle spent Thanksgiving Day after having escaped from prison and robbed the Los Angeles Limited. The following day he went to Bray's ranch, where he leaped through a window to escape the posse and was trailed through the woods to the cabin of Ed Williams.

Members of the posse that captured the bandit re-enacted the scenes for the cameramen, showing how the cabin was surrounded and how Carlisle was shot when he resisted arrest; also showing Sheriff Alonzo S. Roach with Carlisle's weapons and stolen money pierced with bullets found on the bandit.

Adanac Alone Financed Its Production of "The Shadow"

THE published report that "The Shadow," a propaganda picture made at Trenton, Ontario, was financed by the Canadian Pacific Railway, is denied by the Adanac Producing Company, Ltd., of Montreal, in the following statement:

"For the information of yourselves and the public you reach, it is only fair to the shareholders of the Adanac Producing Company to state that the picture was wholly and solely financed by the Adanac Producing Company, and, furthermore, the Adanac Producing Company has never sought nor canvassed nor received the financial support of the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other railway in carrying out its program.

"As you are interested in Canadian matters, and we are a Canadian producing organization, we invite your best attention to accuracy in the interest of the industry we are interested in."

E. M. Porter Negotiates Contract For Simplexes Worth $1,000,000

WHAT is undoubtedly the largest motion picture machine order that has ever been entered upon the books of any manufacturer and which is a part of a gigantic contract that has been successfully negotiated between Mme. Schuepbach of the Mundusfilm Company, of Paris, and E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, builders of the famous Simplex, is one of the big news features of the year in the motion picture industry.

While in other branches of the motion picture industry contracts involving $1,000,000 have been entered into with both parties thereto posing before a battery of screen and still cameras, yet the one by which the Mundusfilm Company agreed to purchase $1,000,000 worth of Simplex projectors was negotiated without a blare of trumpets and with the characteristically modest and quiet general manager of the large projector plant as one of the participants, and the brisk, sharp-eyed young and attractive representative of Europe's chief film distributors as the other.

Three Years As Manager.

E. M. Porter, whose activities in the film world are well known to the captains of the industry, has worked unceasingly for the establishment of an ideal machine distributing system since his acceptance of the managerial position with the Simplex Company something over three years ago. At the time of E. M. Porter's active entrance in the machine manufacturing line the distributing of projectors was left to many hands in as many quarters.

E. M. Porter, bringing to the Simplex Company a wealth of knowledge gained in film field surveys and fresh from a pioneering survey of the South American market for the Famous Players-Lasky Company, set about to devise a method of distribution of Simplex machines that would enable the distributor to maintain a high-grade establishment and also assure the manufacturer of a yearly number of machine sales to justify the constant improving of the machines themselves. Today, as a tribute to his foresight and perseverance, there are twenty-six Simplex distributing offices in this country, each of which is also carrying with it a high-grade theatre equipment supply house.

Madame Schuepbach
Negotiated $1,000,000 purchase of Simplexes for Mundusfilm, Paris.

Predicted Foreign Trade.

Mr. Porter has repeatedly asserted during the war that a cessation of hostilities would find Europe a splendid field for a repetition of his wonderful program in this country. The sole distributors of the Simplex Projector in Continental Europe for the past several years have been the Mundusfilm Company, of Paris, while J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., has handled Simplex in Great Britain, and in the Scandinavian countries J. L. Nerlien, Akt., handled this popular projector exclusively.

Several weeks ago, Mme. Schuepbach arrived in New York and made her official headquarters with Sidney Garrett, her American representative, the well-known film exporter in the Godfrey Building, where she received all those interested in forming business alliances. Mme. Schuepbach brought with her glowing reports of Simplex business in Europe and was highly optimistic concerning the future machine business in that section of the world, and steps were at once taken to renew the Simplex contract for Continental Europe.

Mundusfilm Officials.

It can well be said that the Mundusfilm Company numbers among its directors and officials the biggest film and financial men of France. The president of this organization is Edwarde Mennier, the chocolate king of Europe. Charles Schuepbach is general manager, while Mme. Schuepbach takes care of all details pertaining to foreign business and its varied alliances.

Mme. Schuepbach reports that at the present time the Mundusfilm Company has offices located in six cities in France. The main office is located at 12 Chaussee O'Antin, Paris.

Other European offices are located and established as follows: Geneva, Italy, 11 Rue Levrier; Rome, Italy, 3 Via Bugamo; Amsterdam, Holland, 530 Prinsengracht; Barcelone, Spain, 91 Calle Da La Universitat. Arrangements are also pending for the establishment of offices in Strassburg, Bukarest, Vienna and Berlin. Connected with each of these offices is a fully equipped theatrical supply house and Simplex agency, each in charge of a well versed projection engineer and each of them equipped to give practical demonstrations of Simplex efficiency.

Extensive Advertising Planned.

The various conferences engaged in between Mme. Schuepbach and Mr. Porter finally resulted in the signing up with Simplex for fully $1,000,000 worth of Simplex machines that are to be distributed throughout Europe within a prescribed period. Mme. Schuepbach was highly gratified with the arrangements made and an active campaign was planned which will carry the name of Simplex throughout Europe by means of trade paper and other mediums. He is a firm believer in the use of printer's ink and the advertising which she has already carried on in Europe and which has resulted in the installation of hundreds of Simplex projectors throughout her territory, have often been marveled at in Europe's theatrical circles.

Mme. Schuepbach was banqueted by many of the leading film executives during her stay in New York and before sailing for Europe a feast was given in her honor by Richard Rowland, of Metro, at which were gathered many leaders in the film industry. One of the most prominent floral pieces among those that filled her steamer cabin was the one sent her by the Precision Machine Company, symbolizing "Good Luck." One of the last to bid her "God Speed" was E. M. Porter, who plans to spend several months in Europe in the spring and is already at work on a plan of distribution which will bring to the European theatres the well-known Simplex projector, and incidentally assure the American film men that their product will be absolutely safe while being shown in this machine.

Big "U" Serial Nearing Completion.

The fifteenth episode of the Universal serial, "The Radium Mystery," is rapidly nearing completion under the direction of Robert F. Hill. Eileen Sedgwick, Cleo Madison, Robert Reeves and Robert Kortman, who portrays the heavy, are the feature players.

Taking a Peek at an Infant Industry

Giving the "Once Over" to Moving Picture World of Ten Years Ago

THE meal of victuals that was presented to Thomas A. Edison on the anniversary of the foundation of the Motion Picture Patents Company, December 20, ten years ago, was an event remarkable for its "fewer and better" speeches. Mr. Edison ducked the responsibility of personally orating and his thanks for the loving cup then presented to him were expressed by Frank L. Dyer, while Thomas Alva Edison sat mute.

Phonographs were vogue then. The mechanical kind me mean. And Edison invented them! Wonder what the great inventor thought of the human "improvement," on his brain-child?

J. J. Kennedy made the presentation speech. The loving cup was 21 inches high and weighed 1,000 ounces of solid silver. Mr. Kennedy's speech was 4 and 3/4 inches high in Moving Picture World 10 point type and was weighed well before being spoken. "The Licensed Manufacturers and Importers of Moving Pictures" contributed to the 1,000 ounces and heavy expense for furnishing the beautiful work of art.

Roster of the "Inner Circle."

The Plaza Hotel was the scene. Those who shoved their knees under the "groaning board" were: Thomas Armat, Washington; Frank L. Dyer, George F. Scull, J. J. Kennedy, H. N. Marvin, George K. Spoor, Frank J. Marion, Samuel Long, George Kleine, Siegmund Lubin, F. W. Shingi, Gaston Melies, Jacques A. Berst, William N. Selig, William T. Rock, J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith. Read the list again and see how many names are familiar to you now.

Ten years ago there were two speeches at the creme de la creme gathering of the industry. The last banquet we attended was in honor of Samuel L. Rothapfel's Unit Program. After the seventeenth speech we lost track.

Of those listed above it may be well to identify (for the benefit of us young fellows) Thomas Armat, as an inventor of a projection machine; George F. Scull, as an attorney and Secretary of the Patents Company; Frank L. Dyer, as a lawyer and general manager of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., the main, principal, and original Edison corporation; J. J. Kennedy and H. N. Marvin as the "big guns" of Biograph. With the exception of those that have died the others in the list are known in pictures—or because of their association with pictures—to this day.

Three fine men of the original group have since died—William T. Rock, Samuel Long and Gaston Melies.

The "Consumptive Lady" Featured.

"Camille," staged and photographed by Pathe, was the feature offering of that Franco-American organization. "For those who have read 'Camile' this picture will be of especial interest—after seeing it," said the advertisement writer. Nothing said about incidental sensations while the picture was being screened.

New York Motion Picture Company, publishers of Bison Films, offered "The Red Cross Heroine." This came at a date when Charles O. Baumann was announcing, in page "copy," a discussion then prevalent between his firm and the Film Import and Trading Company as to who owned, for America, the agency for Ambrosio and Italia films. In these times when a fellow wants to know anything about Italian films he asks Harry Raver.

Getting back to "The Red Cross Heroine" the "still" that illustrated the advert showed the nurse sitting on the edge of a soldier's cot. Music suggestion: "I Don't Want to Get Well."

Making Bids for "Family Trade."

With the commencement of 1910 the Kalem Company declared to release two reels a week. "One of them will be devoted to suitable subjects for women and children." What an amazing innovation!

The editor of Moving Picture World was "taking a rap" at Keith & Proctor because that firm was mixing vaudeville into their pictures. Seemed to have overlooked the fact that vaudeville was first and it was pictures that were "mixed in." But he was putting up a good fight, was Friend Editor!

Incidentally it might not be amiss to state that the editors then were the late J. P. Chalmers and Thomas Bedding. Any fine afternoon you will see Mr. Bedding, until this more advanced age, promenading Fifth Avenue with spats and cane and form erect—carrying a lot of brains under his "topper." From the theoretical side of pictures, he has vacated the editorial chair to take active part in rearing an Infant Industry.

Small Exhibitor Finds World of Great Benefit

PRINCESS THEATRE.
H. Schlomer, Proprietor.

Traer, Ia., December 15, 1919.
Moving Picture World:

Please find inclosed my remittance for Moving Picture World for the year 1920.

I am pleased to say that while I am running only a small show house I find the World of exceeding benefit in my work, and will take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation of your efforts during the recent strike.

H. Schlomer.

Greetings to Old Friend "Open Market."

"He's in again!" Mr. Open Market, most talked about member of the craft.

The International Projecting and Producing Company had "gone up like a rocket and come down stick." Said the editor: "J. J. Murdock, with all his ability, . . . is out of the game." Mr. Murdock's fight for an open market had created no end of comment and engendered strife and discord at many commercial firesides. It was an exciting story—his struggle to "open" the market—and others continued it.

Mr. Murdock, since then, has become a vaudeville magnate but he still shies an occasional nickle into the picture game from the exhibition angle.

The publication in the pictorial supplement of the New York Times of "reproductions of scenes in noted moving pictures" was hailed as a great acknowledgement of the infant industry. In those days the newspapers were ignoring or openly fighting the screen. It's different now—thanks to the "national advertising campaigns" in which the dailies are sharing.

Flirtations with "Wall Street."

The Central Park West Amusement Corporation was formed to erect the Parkway Theatre at 36-38 Cathedral Parkway. A $10,000 proposition—"with slanted floor, a special 20-inch opera chair, Power's No. 6 machine, with double dissolving attachments and Power's inductors." Get this:

"The company feels that the motion picture industry is still an infant and with the strides that are being made to bring it to perfection will prove a lucrative investment for such capital as will invest itself under proper lines."

And in 1919 it is still an infant—but "lordy, lordy how it has growed."

"Dominating the Field."

More "slide" firms were advertising their wares ten years ago than during these modern days—and "lecturers" helped with the torture of their stereopticon projection. The "mirror screen" was coming in just then. As they subsequently retired, the "lectures" possibly got a flash at themselves in the mirror.

"The new mirror screen just placed in the Blue Mouse Theatre, Baltimore, is the sensation of the year" said one writer. "If I was to tell you that the screen improves the picture 100 per cent would you believe me."

That's where "One Hundred Per Cent Pictures" originated. Eh! Wot?

Fort Leavenworth was photographed by Essanay. "U. S. Army Manouvers, Fort Leavenworth, Kan." was the title. Bet a button some of the Kaiser's emissaries copped a print and sent it to the Old Boy. ("O. B." meaning the Devil Himself.)

Chicago News: "Maurice Fleckles, of Laemmle Film Service, is building a magnificent theatre at Waukeagan, Ill. Approximately $20,000. For vaudeville and pictures."

Torrington, Conn., Dec. 8, 1909. Editor Moving Picture World:

"..... Why don't we see better pictures in this country? ..... Why do the film censors pass such pictures as Biograph's 'Nursing a Viper' and the Vitagraph's 'From Cabin Boy to King.' I saw ladies turn from the brutal scenes in both these pictures. .... This town was picture crazy but business is dropping off. 'There's a Reason.'" How about the family trade?

"The Union Film Exchange, of Harrisrisburg, Pa., are building up a good business by taking pains to please all customers." The infant was a sensible weanling, anyhow.

Howdy, Mr. Williams! Discovered!

The Australian correspondent of the World spoke thus, under signature of W. H. H. Lane:

"The Colonial is the Old Oxford Theatre, on George Street, which has just changed hands and has been taken over by J. D. Williams, of Seattle, Wash. Has been beautifully fitted up with an American arched entrance and well illuminated with lots of incandescent lights, tastefully arranged in the arch and front of the theatre, done in pure white in imitation of marble and he has introduced an innovation into this part of the world of continuous performances from 11 A. M. to 11 P. M.

For further details ask Mr. Williams, manager of First National, or Mr. Yearsley, same address, who helped Mr. Williams put the Colonial on the map.

Ralph Ruffner Makes Vigorous Plea for Good Newspaper Stills

Ralph R. Ruffner
Of the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco.

(Editorial Note: Although this came in the form of a personal letter and was not intended for publication, Ralph Ruffner, of the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco, tells so many truths in his communication that the letter is passed along to the various publicity departments. Accompanying the letter were several copies of San Francisco papers carrying the "Mannister" display referred to. The original of the design is reproduced herewith. The reproductions were so poor in the coarser newspaper screen that after the second day the display was thrown out and a reverse cut of the title substituted. The letter was written just after the strike of the printers and has been held awaiting publication.)

THE Mannister copy came out so darned dark, you can use it as a warning—so here's the original to work from. A much better result is that of "Wives of Men"—and by the way—considering the picture, I wish you could see the press sheet on this Florence Reed subject. Here's the sum total of suggestions for lobby:

TRY THESE IN YOUR LOBBY.

In the lobby nothing would be better than large and small photographs of the star, with several of the one-sheet posters framed and possibly a three-sheet framed at each side of the main entrance.

A large wedding ring would be made up by covering a wooden hoop with gilt paper. In this mount a photograph enlargement of the star, or a cut-out made from part of the poster, showing the star and Frank Mills in a scene together.

I agree with them that nothing would be better—it would attract more attention. And do you think their exchange had any star photos—any which would do the Reed lady justice? Their representative had to go outside to other exchangemen and borrow what they happened to have from old pictures.

Same exchange was held on an advertisement from New York on a current feature—"Mannister"—and when the package finally did arrive, we were all on our toes to get some of the line ad cuts shown in their very excellent press book, only to find that every cut we wanted was not there, and every blamed cut we didn't want was there.

And so it goes from year to year, with the same old yowls about the same old grief. In my files are a half dozen different wires to New York people trying to get star stills and the proper scene stills on various subjects booked to this theatre in the past six weeks—stuff which the exchanges should have had but which they claimed they could not get—and my wires were nothing more than auxiliary efforts to pry loose advertising material which I knew was in existence.

A Constant Expense.

How much money in telegraph tolls alone do you imagine is thrown away by exchanges throughout the United States in a year's time in efforts to obtain the advertising meat necessary for an exhibitor to have to work each picture to the fullest possible earning power?

Every now and then I get a letter from some reader of the department giving vent to their feelings over their inability to get the kind of cut copy which will work for them. It isn't just that one should see only the faults and never the virtues.

There has been a great change for the better in the conduct of advertising and publicity departments—in the preparation of usable material for exhibitors, and in recent months we have seen several of the most splendid, complete and comprehensive exploitation books and accessories that brains and ability could make possible—and, unfortunately, in the same space of time we have been confronted with over-ripe examples of bed-ridden enthusiasm.

Starts in the Studios.

Some of this trouble dates from the studios. Oftentime a picture will contain some individual who, though not the advertised star, will still be worth money at the box office, if the house has any way of playing him up. For example, in "When Bearcat Went Dry," Lon Chaney has a prominent part—enough to justify a separate still of him in character, but what few unusable newspaper stills the exchange possesses fail to show him so we could make an enlargement for the lobby or for newspaper copy. Connecting his name up with The Frog in "The Miracle Man" is too good an opportunity to pass up, and I venture the guess that all those appearing in that wonderful picture will be so cited in advertising for a long time to come.

separate and well posed stills of each prominent player in the cast. If a player was anywhere near prominent, I think I'd "shoot" him on suspicion. Furthermore, no stars are mentioned in the exploitation of "Bearcat" which is all the more reason why the characters should have been played up. The characters make the story and the story makes the book and good advertising will make the grade with all of them.

Another thing I find myself strong for, and that is good newspaper stills of the two reel comedies. Some of the comedies, sometimes, have copy which, when played up—like a pretty girl in a fetching costume, and most all comedies now have 'em—will be worth several hundred dollars on the week, but there is not enough attention paid to this essential by the comedy producers. A little more speed in this direction and exhibitors will cash in on fillers, if the so-called feature just doesn't happen to hit.

Stills Help Sales.

Am holding up three two-reel comedies at this writing, just waiting until New York can supply the 8 by 10 newspaper stills from which we can make some 30 by 40 enlargements for the lobby, for I found all three replete with dandy advertising possibilities, but nothing in the exchanges with which to advertise them as they deserved.

To summarize:

Here Are the Rules.

An intelligent selection of the newspaper stills would be:

1. The star in good poses, half, three-quarter and full lengths—especially the latter if handsomely gowned.

2. Individual poses, full length, of those prominent in the cast—whether the star hollers or not. (If it's in his or her contract I guess we don't get 'em.)

3. Scenes which come nearest telling some important bit of the story. If of but two people, pose them as close together as consistent with the narrative. Oftentimes in the preparation of half-tone newspaper adv. cuts they will be too far apart to balance nicely with a four-column display. If a unique costume or exceptional characterization will furnish the atmosphere desired for a particular scene, let's "get" this for the trade paper and newspaper display with the still camera. (To you Mr. Director.) Manufacture a scene for this if you have to. There is too much money shot away for meaningless stills and not enough for the "come-ons"—and you know a "come-on" as well as the sharpshooter, though sometimes the distributor is completely at fault in failing to get to us those stills you painstakingly supplied him with.

4. Comedies. Pretty girls, en-group or single poses—full lengths invariably. Larry Semon's "Between the Acts"—shame on you, Larry! On your toes with some good 8 by 10s hereafter. Every last man handling your comedies wants just that, and though they might appear on the lithos, a lot of lobbies don't carry paper. Most every photographer in most every town can turn out enlargements, and the right kind of a scene or pose enlarged from an 8x10 newspaper still, planted in the lobby will pull and nowadays an exhibitor must sell every foot of his show to make the grade. In other words, what's worth presenting is worth advertising.

Advertising is well worth while.

Circuit Salesman Shows Pictures in Ice-Bound Peninsula of Michigan

FIRST reports from A. G. Decker, who is opening up a pioneer Michigan winter motion picture field, indicate that the new territory in which he is working is one of the greatest business fields that has been unexploited. It is the upper peninsular of Michigan which, from early October until late in April, is snow and ice-bound, and most of the time during these months is cut off from all train service.

The upper peninsular has never been regarded as much of a territory for motion pictures. In the summer most of the men folks living in the hamlet are away in lumber camps or at other employment, and in the ice winter dog sledges are practically the only sure means of transportation. This last summer, however, a free lance gave a showing of "The Auction of Souls" in one of the larger towns and within two or three weeks after Harry Scott, manager of the First National Exchange in Detroit had received more than thirty requests for a shipment of the print to various other places on the peninsula.

Letter Three Weeks in Mails.

Mr. Scott wanted to comply with the demands yet he did not feel like trusting the prints to the precarious express service that are maintained in the territory during the winter months. So he decided to send Decker into the territory with two prints, with instructions to fill as many dates as possible. Mr. Decker has just reported to Mr. Scott by means of a letter which was more than three weeks getting out from the snow bound territory.

"It is a peculiar situation," writes Mr. Decker. "The people are crazy for entertainment throughout the winter months. The exhibitors have hitherto been confined to badly tattered prints of the cheapest sort, the kind that exchanges never expect to get back and don't want on their shelves. Despite the hardship of travel, the news has spread rapidly that there is a big feature attraction in the territory and every day I get new applications. It isn't necessary to set a date for the showing. When I arrived the news spreads from mouth to mouth that "Auction of Souls" will be shown in town that night, and capacity business results.

Prices Run to $1.00.

"The prices which the people will pay are extraordinary. They want good pictures and are willing to pay for them. Most of the theatres lack any reserved section but this is gotten around by charging $1.00 for first admissions. So many tickets are sold at this price and after the holders of these are admitted a limited number go for seventy-five cents, and then another limited number for fifty cents. These three classes of admissions usually take up all the seating room. Then "two bits" is taken from every one else who can crowd into the theatre."

The Line Forms to the Right—

Developing Paper Publicity.

A special newspaper service department, which will provide publicity matter direct to newspapers in all parts of the United States and Canada, has been added to the department of advertising of First National Exhibitors Circuit, under the direction of C. L. Yearsley.

Its purpose is to supply newspapers with pre-release news of the studio activities of the various producing units affiliated with the circuit by releasing contracts. This work will supplement the efforts of the publicity departments of the franchise owners, which have the responsibility for directing local advertising and publicity campaign.

Metro Looks With Pride on the Past and Confidently Faces the New Year

A REVIEW of the activities of the year by Metro Pictures Corporation shows as an outstanding feature the abandonment of the program picture and the inauguration of the "fewer and better" pictures policy with the most auspicious success. With this marked departure in policy, other important developments came which included the acquisition of an imposing array of stage and book successes, the signing of new stars, the final touches to the facilities of the $1,000,000 Hollywood studios and the arrangement to resume production in the East soon.

Thirty-three program pictures were produced by Metro during the first half of 1919 until August. In addition, five Screen Classics, Inc., special productions were presented. In the list of stars are Bert Lytell, Viola Dana and May Allison, who are still the stars of the present Screen Classics, Inc., productions. In addition, the stars during this period included Ethel Barrymore, Edith Storey, Hale Hamilton, Anna Q. Nilsson and Emmy Wehlen. John H. Collins, now dead, Charles Swickard, E. Mason Hopper, Harry Franklin, George D. Baker and Edwin Carewe were on the staff of directors at that time, in addition to those now with Screen Classics, Inc., John Ince, Herbert Blache, Rex Ingram, Henry Otto, Ray C. Smallwood, A. D. Ripley and Jack Dillon.

Screen Classics Released Three.

Since the inauguration of the "fewer and better" policy three productions have been made by Screen Classics, Inc., and released through Metro. These were: Lombardi, Ltd.," starring Bert Lytell; "Please Get Married," starring Viola Dana, and "Fair and Warmer," starring May Allison.

Despite the fact that only three Screen Classics, Inc., specials were finished in time to be designated as 1919 work, six other big specials barely missed becoming December releases. They usher in Metro's program for the year 1920. Among these are "Should a Woman Tell?" featuring Alice Lake, and "The Best of Luck," a picturization of the Drury Lane melodrama with an all-star cast, including Kathryn Adams, Jack Holt, Lilie Leslie and Fred Malatesta.

About the middle of January the following productions will be released: "The Willow Tree," starring Viola Dana; "The Right of Way," starring Bert Lytell, and "The Walk-Offs," starring May Allison. Metro will also at this time release Taylor Holmes in "Nothing But the Truth," from the successful William Collier stage comedy by James Montgomery and the original novel by Frederic Isham. This is the first of a series of comedies to be made by Taylor Holmes Productions, Inc., and to be distributed by Metro.

Crook Play for Lytell.

Under way at the present time at Hollywood are six big special productions. The first to start was "Old Lady 31," an adaptation by June Mathis of Rachel Crothers' stage play, starring Emma Dunn. Viola Dana's new play is "Eliza Comes to Stay," a picturization of the comedy by H. V. Esmond, the English dramatist. May Allison has started work on "Judah," from Henry Arthur Jones' play.

Bert Lytell will have as his new vehicle, "Alias Jimmy Valentine," possibly the most successful of all crook plays. Work is well along on "The Hope," second of the big Drury Lane melodramas purchased by Metro. Mitchell Lewis will start work on "Burning Daylight," the first of the Jack London stories to be produced by Screen Classics, Inc., under an arrangement with C. E. Shurtleff, Inc.

Ina Claire Secured.

Following the release of the second round of Screen Classics, Inc., specials in January, "Old Lady 31" is scheduled to be ready early in February and the others will follow that month and in March with the addition of a second Taylor Holmes production, "The Very Idea," from the stage success by William Le Baron.

The resumption of production activities at the Eastern studios in New York will enable Metro to produce many plays with Broadway stars. Metro has acquired the rights to "Polly With a Past," by Guy Bolton and George Middleton, and has obtained the services of Ina Claire, who was originally starred in the play by David Belasco, for the screen presentation.

New Rolin Comedy a Red-Hot One.

Pathé offers for release January 4 a new Rolin Comedy, "Red Hot Hottentots," which is described as a high temperature frivolity served with a kettle of fun. "Snub" Pollard is the featured member of the cast, Mildred Davis is his leading woman and Eddie Boland is the deep-dyed villain. "Sunshine Sammy" leads his talents and a band of hilarious "hottentots" complete the large cast.

Fanatics and Capitalists Clash in "Even As Eve"

EVEN AS EVE," an unusual story of the clash between an exclusive club of society millionaires and a league of anti-marriage fanatics, starring Grace Darling, will be released by First National Exhibitors Circuit about the middle of January. The story is an adaptation by Charles A. Logue of Robert W. Chamber's novel, "The Shining Band."

Grace Darling as the star is said to have executed the most pleasing work in her screen career. As the mountain girl deprived of an inherent love for culture by her hermit father and his crafty associates, and later as a miss of fortune she plays a most difficult role with charming versatility.

Others in the cast are Ramsaye Wallace, E. J. Ratcliffe, Sally Crute, Marc McDermott, G. V. Seyffertitz, John Goldsworthy, John L. Shine and Robert Gibbs. The story was produced by the A. R. Fischer Feature, Inc. It was directed by B. A. Rolife and Chester DeVonde and photographed by A. A. Cadwell and A. Fried.

There is a saving of $4.80 to those who pay the annual subscription rate of $3 to Moving Picture World. The newsstand price is 15 cents.

Two First National Organizations Begin Active Work on January 19

COMPLETING the nationalization of the new plan for exhibitor defense and co-operation sponsored by members of First National Exhibitors Circuit, J. D. Williams, manager, and H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer of the company, with N. H. Gordon, chairman of the Exhibitors Defense Committee, have returned to New York and announced that Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and Associated First National Theatres, Inc., will commence their active existence on January 19.

That is the date when the policies involved in the new plan of expansion will become operative. These include the standardization of film rentals through sub-franchises which will determine service costs by established percentages of the valuation of each negative purchased by the releasing company, exclusive of exhibition rights to theatres owning sub-franchises, protection from price opposition and the support of the entire co-operative membership whenever unfair competition threatens.

To Announce Membership List.

Organization of the new plan by territories has been started by the individual members, and this, it is said, will lead to an announcement early in the New Year of the identities of the great numbers of exhibitors who are now affiliating with it. The enlarged membership will, it is declared, include practically every representative independent theatre in the country. The recent association of Harry Crandall, of Washington, and Charles E. Whitehurst, of Baltimore, with Tom Moore, original franchise owner for that territory, is pointed to as an indication of the calibre of the affiliations that are being made in other sections.

Additional details of the plan of the Associated First National Pictures reveals that the franchise method should effect a great saving in distributing and sales costs. This, it is explained, will react to the mutual benefit of the producers and the exhibitor members by making available for the financial encouragement of bigger pictures money that now is absorbed by non-productive factors.

This reduction in the cost of distribution will result from the fact that the market for the releases of the Associated First National Pictures will be permanently established through sub-franchises, so that the functions of the exchanges will be largely administrative in carrying out the mechanical work of clearing houses for film.

Is It Only a Promise?

A unanimous sentiment exists among exhibitors for an organized effort to maintain theatre independence, according to First National officials. This, they say, is equally true of owners of large and small houses, and seeks, for its answer, the practical possibilities of co-operative buying and co-operative exhibiting.

"Theatre owners have become weary in their efforts to determine what the future has in store for them," declares Mr. Williams. "We talked to great numbers of them on our trip and I did not meet one exhibitor who failed to ask: 'Is this new proposition one that will mean something more than a promise today and a regret tomorrow?' They want a semblance of stability in a national way. They are keenly aware of the almost hopeless position they hold as separate units, without the strength that is possible in a unity of purpose and action.

"No exhibitor who deserves the name is not fully aware that the one certain road to success in the future must be toward a condition or a plan that will provide the same measure of all-round encouragement to stars and producers that it does to the theatre owners."

Randall M. White Resigns to Join Selznick Forces

IN accepting an offer from Lewis J. Selznick to become editor of the Motion Picture Times, an exhibitor's service publication to be issued in the interest of the Selznick attractions, Randall M. White leaves the employ of Moving Picture World after seven years of loyal and faithful service. The opportunity at Selznick's offers immediate reward and a promising future and Mr. White has no more sincere well wisher than the publisher of Moving Picture World.

During his service to this magazine Mr. White has served in both editorial and business capacities. To Mr. Selznick he takes valuable experience which will unquestionably serve his new employer in good stead.

Mr. White is a native of Johnstown, Pa., where he received his early newspaper training and in the show business on the Johnstown Tribune and as assistant manager and press agent for Scherer & Kelly, who now control the Cambria and Park theatres in that city. Determined to "see the country" Mr. White, after his marriage, went to Seattle, where he was for a time employed on the staff of the Seattle Times.

He started east to take a position on the North Yakima Daily Republic and next jumped to Chicago, where for a season he was treasurer of the Chicago Opera House. Then he became editor of the Show World, where he remained during the time the paper was published.

The Player, then published as the official organ of the White Rats vaudeville organization, here in New York, was the next location for Mr. White and for two years he edited that paper. Then he joined the staff of Moving Picture World.

Says Secretary Lane

Before a 100 per cent. attendance of the Committee on Education of the Senate and House, and referring to film men:

YOU have before you as patriotic a group of men and as influential a group of men as can be found in the United States, and our job tonight—yours and mine—is to do nothing more than give them a request and they will do for us what we are unable to do ourselves and what no other single influence in the United States can do.

New "Master Mind" Serial Has Unique Mystic Villain

A SERIAL is known by its villains—in fact, a serial is made by its villains," said Arthur B. Reeve, author of the "Craig Kennedy" stories and vice-president of Supreme Pictures, who is directing the Robert Pauline serial, "The Master Mind."

"I may say in connection with the eight successful serials I have written, that in 'The Master Mind' Mr. Grey and I have the most unique mystical villain we have yet conceived.

"For example, the first serial I wrote, 'The Exploits of Elaine,' had the famous Clutching Hand.

"In the 'House of Hate' there was the 'Hooded Terror.' One of the weirdest conceptions, I think, was our Automat in the Houdini serial.

"Here in the 'Master Mind,' the great serial dealing with Hypnotism and the science of mind, we have two villains. One is the weird 'Phantom Face.' portrayed by Edward Rogers. He's not a masked villain, but is a mystery around whom centers reels of thrills.

"But out great bet on a villain in this serial is Paul Panzer, who appeared in 'The Perils of Pauline.'

"I consider Paul Panzer the most finished serial villain I have ever worked with. He is cast as the 'heavy' lover of the vamp, Peggy Shanor. "I take more pains with my villians than I do with my heroes. The psychology of this is simple. You build up a fascinating and clever villain, then your hero is ten times more clever and fascinating when he overcomes him.

"In the 'Master Mind' great care has been taken to make the Phantom Face a weird character. For, today there is a vast interest in the psychic.

Begin Work on "Blind Youth."

The scenario of "Blind Youth," the second production of National Theatres, Inc., which will be released through Select, was completed last week by Katherine Reed and turned over to the West Coast Studios, where work on production has been started by Al Green, who is directing it.

Mr. Green has just completed Monte Katterjohn's "Silks and Petticoats," an all-star production, featuring House Peters, and came direct from the Garson studios to direct for Harry Rapf. Beatrice Joy has been engaged by Mr. Rapf to play one of the stellar roles.

Wistaria to Film Big Broadway Stage Plays

BURTON KING, director-general of Wistaria Productions, announces that the policy of the company for the coming year will embrace the filming of a number of famous books and Broadway successes.

The first vehicle will be "Why Women Win," a play by Will Murphy. Lloyd Lonergan has prepared the continuity.

Anne Luther, who recently completed "The Lurking Peril" for Wistaria is featured and the following cast assembled: Claire Whitney, Ethel Hallor, Baby Ivy Ward, Charles Gerard, E. J. Radcliffe, Albert Hart and J. W. Johnston.

The Wistaria Company recently held its annual election, and Mr. Frank F. Gallagher was elected President of the company, Burton King, vice-president and director-general, and Thomas de Vassey, secretary and treasurer.

Fox Gets Flood Pictures.

To James B. Buchanan, Fox News cameraman, is due credit for having added an interesting chapter to the romance of news gathering for the motion picture screen. Those who view records of news events on the screen, like those who read the stories in the daily newspapers, rarely comprehend the perseverance, pluck and energy displayed by the cameraman or reporter in getting the pictures or news for his organization.

When Chattachoochee River rose to the height of thirty-one feet six inches, the greatest in its history, and flooded West Point, Ga., Mr. Buchanan was in Atlanta. Naturally train service to West Point was abandoned, but Buchanan found that one train was to be sent as close to the stricken city as possible—the Red Cross train carrying doctors, nurses, food, blankets and other supplies needed by a stricken people.

Movical Comedy Makes Its Bow.

The new "Wizard of Oz" and Movie Girls' Review, Hopp Hadley's new-idea combination of pretty girls, music and pictures which he calls movical comedy, has completed rehearsals and will open at Keith's Lincoln Theatre in New York during the Holidays.

The whole performance occupies the time of a seven reel feature and is arranged to play motion picture theatres. The picture is a short five reel subject, complete in itself, but when used in the movical comedy it fades from the screen at intervals and the action is taken up on the stage by means of musical numbers.

"Everywoman" Included in List of Artcraft Releases for December 28

GEORGE H. MELFORD'S super-special "Everywoman," which has already been accorded an enthusiastic reception in pre-release showings in several cities; Billie Burke in "Wanted—a Husband," and Charles Ray in "Red Hot Dollars" form the trio of releases on the Paramount-Artcraft schedule for December 28.

Walter Browne's modern morality play, "Everywoman," has been transferred to the screen under the direction of Mr. Melford in such a skillful manner as to elicit the highest praise from newspaper critics not only in New York where it was shown at the Rivoli Theatre, but in Boston, Columbus, Chicago and other cities. Will M. Ritchey wrote the scenario.

Violet Heming plays the title role and is featured in the production along with Theordore Roberts and Wanda Hawley.

Crane is Leading Man.

"Wanted—a Husband," the Billie Burke picture, is based upon Samuel Hopkins Adams' story, "Enter D'Arcy," which, when published in serial form in Collier's Weekly, attracted much attention. Clara Beranger prepared the scenario and Lawrence Window directed. Miss Burke's leading man is James L. Crane.

The latest Thomas H. Ince production starring Charles Ray, "Red Hot Dollars," is another of those delightful country boy stories. Julien Josephson is the author and Jerome Storm directed. Gladys George is Ray's leading woman and Charles Hill Mailes, William Conklin and Mollie McConnell are in the cast.

Many Wish To Be Joan in Goldwyn's "Branding Iron"

THEY certainly started something over at the Goldwyn offices when they announced a contest, open to all, for a girl to play the part of Joan in Katherine Newlin Burt's "The Branding Iron." Photographs have been pouring in from applicants for the part and a number of young women have called in person. The committee to select the successful candidate comprises Samuel Goldwyn, Rex Beach and George Mooser. If the avalanche of photographs keeps up they may have to lay off their usual work for a few days and devote themselves to passing on them.

It has been decided to set a time limit to the contest and the last day of the year has been chosen as the closing day. In order to insure fairness to applicants wherever they may live, this means that the photograph must be mailed before midnight of December 31. Just when the decision will be made is not promised, but as everything is in readiness to put the picture into production, except an actress to play the leading role, it can be said that the committee will make its choice as soon as possible. Reginald Barker is to direct the production of the play, which will be one of the most elaborate ever made by the Goldwyn company.

"Beckoning Roads" Will Please Women

"Beckoning Roads," the Robertson-Cole Superior picture, which is a holiday release, will please especially woman patrons as it gives Bessie Barriscale opportunity to run the whole gamut of the modistes art from the sort of gown which is worn by the girl on a farm in the Canadian Northwest to the most filmly and delicate creation seen in a New York ballroom.

Advanced reports of the picture carried the statement that in "Beckoning Roads," Miss Barriscale wears five evening gowns, four afternoon frocks, three street dresses, three suits and four evening wraps.

Historical Films a Necessity.

A recent statement of the National Board of Review decrying the lack of film dramas based on American history, calls on leading producers to fill the demand which it says is heavy throughout the country for this kind of picture.

A conclusive proof of this fact is the success with which "The Lost Battalion" is meeting in every territory where it is being shown. Although based on one of the most heroic episodes of the great war, "The Lost Battalion" is not merely a war picture but is romance, adventure, real American humor and a living historical record.

W. H. Productions Company, which is distributing this feature on the state rights market, asserts that it is daily receiving reports from every section of the country showing record-breaking performances and successful box office returns.

"A Gamble in Souls" Scheduled.

"A Gamble in Souls," a Thomas H. Ince production featuring Dorothy Dalton and William Desmond, will be released by Triangle January 25. This is the fourth issue released by Triangle under the new system. The first, "The Flame of the Yukon" starring Dorothy Dalton was released November 23. "Betty of Greystone" with Dorothy Gish was available December 14. "The Clodhopper" with Charles Ray will be released January 4.

"A Gamble in Souls" was written by Lanier Barlett. Walter Edwards directed the production which was supervised by Thomas H. Ince. The play is the story of a girl from the Barbary Coast and a minister who couldn't understand each other until fate tossed them together on a deserted island.

Sends Film of Peace Delegates.

A fine bit of news enterprise was displayed by the Paris representative of Fox News when he took motion pictures of the American peace delegates leaving France and despatched his film on the same ship on which the delegates sailed. The peace commissioners, Frank L. Polk, asistant secretary of state; General Tasker H. Bliss and Henry White, formerly Ambassador to France, left Paris on December 10 and sailed from Brest on the transport America the following day.

In its release No. 23, shown December 24, Fox News gave not only views of the departure of the diplomats, but also pictures of their arrival in New York on December 20.

The eyes were of amber glass brilliantly lighted. While the houses were in darkness the lights on the trees were extinguished, allowing only the amber eyes of the mask to glare over the auditorium. Just the moment the orchestra started, the bulbs on the trees were turned and the audience were filled with surprise and wonderment. The Marcy, located at Marcy avenue and Broadway, is a new house of 1,000 capacity, only recently opened; it is said to be one of the finest theatres in Brooklyn.

Selznick Schedules Four January Productions of Unusual Merit

FOUR big productions are listed on the Selznick schedule for release during the first month of the new year. The productions star four of America's most popular screen actresses and each production was made with the utmost care to be released as examples of the fine quality of pictures the Selznick organization has on its 1920 program.

The titles and stars of the four January productions are "Greater Than Fame," starring Elaine Hammerstein; "She Loves and Lies," a Norma Talmadge Special; "The Imp," featuring Elsie Janis, and "Footlights and Shadows," starring Olive Thomas.

"Greater Than Fame" was written by S. Jay Kaufman, author and New York newspaper writer. The screen version abounds with heart thrills, bits of melodrama, and deft touches of humor. The big drawing power of the production is the portrayal of the leading role by the fascinating star, Elaine Hammerstein. The picture was directed by Alan Crosland, and the supporting cast includes Walter McGrail, W. H. Tooke, Julia Swayne Gordon, Albert Roccardi, Cora Williams, John Walker, Arthur Donaldson, Flora Kingsley, Eugene Woodward, and J. Furey.

Norma Talmadge Release.

Admirers of Norma Talmadge are due for a surprise in her new special production, which is titled "She Loves and Lies," and is a screen version of the famous novel by Wilkies Collins. Conway Tearle, who plays opposite Miss Talmadge, does some excellent work in the picture, as does the entire supporting cast. The production is one that interests at the start, holds it and in the climax gives an agreeable surprise.

King Heads Supporting Cast.

Elsie Janis is co-author of "The Imp," her newest Selznick drama. In this production Miss Janis will probably score her greatest screen triumph. The story itself is admirably suited to her type and her delightful personality is given free run in this production. The story is extremely interesting.

Joe King heads the supporting cast which is composed of Ethel Stewart, E. J. Ratcliffe, Duncan Penwarden, John Southerland, William Fredericks, Arthur Marton, Jack Ridgeway and Joseph Granby. Edmund Goulding, who wrote the scenario for the production, was the co-author with Miss Janis. Robert Ellis directed.

Olive Thomas has the leading role in another of the January releases of Selznick. It is titled "Footlights and Shadows" and was written by Bradley King. The story is such that Miss Thomas has a chance to display all of her charming personality and versatility.

The supporting cast includes Alexander Cuslow, Ivo Dawson, Van Bauser, May Hicks and Miss M. Gray.

Vitagraph Engages Alice Calhoun.

Alice Calhoun, who is now playing with Corinne Griffith in "Deadline at Eleven," has been engaged by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, as a member of Vitagraph's stock company at the Brooklyn studio. She is the first of six young women, beginning their stage careers with promise, who will be so engaged.

Realart's "Soldiers of Fortune" Secures Second Broadway Booking

WHEN Broadway asks to see a picture the second time, that picture is the goods!" So says John S. Woody, general manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, in comenting on the second Broadway showing of "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production which was the feature picture at the big Capitol Theatre several weeks ago. This adventure story also was shown last week at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre.

At the same time Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables" was the feature photoplay at the Rivoli Theatre. The simultaneous occupation by Realart films of two Broadway houses sets a significant record for a new producing company, declare Realart officials for with its double tie-up, Realart brings its total of showings in the theatrical center to seven weeks.

"We are esecially enthusiastic about our second Broadway run for 'Soldiers of Forune,'" said Mr. Woody. "We regard it as a triumph. It probably would be inaccurate to say that this situation is unprecedented, but certainly it has not developed many times. Many concerns consider one engagement occasionally in Broadway theatres an achievement, and it is at least unusual to see a picture billed twice within a month along the great white way.

Broadway Booking for Each Realart.

"There is no getting away from the fact," said Mr. Woody, "that a lot of credit is due a concern which shows every production it ever has released to a Broadway audience. That is exactly what Realart has done. Of course, we are young and have not released many productions but when we get into houses like the Rivoli, Rialto, Capitol and Broadway, the pictures which we do offer must be the right sort. Most of these houses, moreover, were booked pretty solidly for months in advance when Realart came into existence. Realart broke in only by offering productions that sold themselves."

Realart had the first New York showing of any of its pictures at B. S. Moss' Broadway two months with the "Mystery of the Yellow Room."

Brunet Outlines Progress Made by Pathe's Feature Department in 1920

THE growth of the Pathé feature business during 1919, is reviewed by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathé Exchange, Inc., in a statement just issued. From the beginning in January of 1919, the Pathé feature department has grown with marked rapidity, and, with the New Year about to be ushered in, Mr. Brunet asserts the last twelfth month has been the greatest in the annals of Pathé's feature business.

In outlining Pathé's feature progress from last January, Mr. Brunet calls attention to the fact that during that month, only one feature picture was released by the great distributing organization.

"'The Midnight Stage' starring Frank Keenan, was Pathé's first release of the year," said Mr. Brunet. "In February we followed this with another Keenan production, 'Todd of the Times' and Baby Marie Osborne in 'The Old Maid's Baby.'

Big Features Released.

"Since February we have issued such big box office winners as 'Common Clay' and 'The Cry of the Weak' with Fannie Ward; 'Oh Boy' with June Caprice and Creighton Hale, a Capellani special; 'The Profiteers' with Fannie Ward; 'The World Aflame,' Frank Keenan's great special; 'The Thirteenth Chair' a visualization of Bayard Veiller's master stage drama; 'The Virtuous Model,' with Dolores Cassinelli; 'A Damsel in Distress,' a screen version of P. G. Wodehouse's Saturday Evening Post serial story; 'The Gay Old Dog,' Hobart Henley's first production for Pathé; 'A Woman of Pleasure,' Jesse D. Hampton's inaugural Pathé special; 'Dawn,' one of J. Stuart Blackton's most artistic offerings; and 'The Prince and Betty' with William Desmond as star, also a Hampton attraction.

"During the last year there became allied with Pathé some of the foremost producers of feature motion pictures in the industry—Edgar Lewis, J. Stuart Blackton, Jesse D. Hampton, Hobart Henley and Edwin Carewe. Added to this aggregation there is Albert Capellani, whose work is also well known; Leonce Perret, creator of 'The Thirteeth Chair' and other big Pathé features; Hal E. Roach, who is producing the Harold Lloyd series of $100,000 two reel comedies, and the one reel Rolin comedies in which 'Snub' Pollard has the star role. Mrs. Sidney Drew has been signed to produce a series of comedies based on Julian Street's stories 'After Thirty' in which John Cumberland, star of 'The Gay Old Dog' will be featured.

Lewis and Carewe to Make Debut.

"Edgar Lewis and Edwin Carewe will not be introduced to Pathé patrons until 1920. Mr. Lewis has completed 'Other Men's Shoe's, a film version of Andrew Soutar's popular novel, which will be released February 1.

"Edwin Carewe will make his debut on the Pathé schedule, with 'The Web of Deceit,' starring Dolores Cassinelli which is booked for release on January 18.

"Pathé enters the new year with some of the brightest stars of the screen, including June Caprice, Dolores Cassinelli, Marjorie Rambeau, Blanche Sweet, John Cumberland, Robert Gordon, Sylvia Breamer, 'Snub' Pollard, and Frank Keenan. Then there will be Harold Lloyd, whose two reel comedies are being cordially received.

"Large plans have been made for each of these stars. What Pathé has done in 1919 is a matter of record. Its feature business has many times exceeded that of other years, due to the high class product, the expert salesmanship employed in its distribution and the unusually competent exploitation material furnished with each feature."

"Adventure Scenics" Booking Fast.

Exhibitors throughout the United States are following the example of Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol Theatre, New York, in booking the "Adventure Scenics" from Robertson-Cole. Several weeks ago, Mr. Bowes received the first of the Adventure Scenics and immediately booked the entire series. No sooner had this move been made than first run houses throughout the country signed Robertson-Cole contracts for the entire series.

Guy Empey Selects Cast for New Special, "Oil"

GUY EMPEY, whose next photoplay, "Oil," has been in work at the Paragon studio, Fort Lee, since December 15, has gathered around him a group of film folk notable in all departments. The direction of the picture is in the hands of Wilfrid North, who became well known as supervising director for Vitagraph. It was Mr. North who directed "The Undercurrent," the present Empey Special Attraction which is now being distributed by Select Pictures Corporation. Associated with Mr. North in the filming of "Oil" are Phil Quinn, assistant director; Harry Lee, studio manager, and Herbert Messmore, technical director. The camera work is in charge of Thomas F. Molloy, another recruit from Vitagraph. James Fleming is Molloy's assistant, and Eugene Morin is in charge of still photography

Florence Evelyn Martin is again playing the leading female role and is practically co-starring with Guy Empey. Portraying some of the more important roles in "Oil" are Templar Saxe, William Eville and Harry Burkhardt. In "Oil" Guy Empey will present a photoplay distinctly different from anything he has done before. Although the piece is a true drama, it is so interlarded with comedy that the laughter and thrills intermingle as the picture unfolds on the screen.

The length of the picture will not be less than six reels.

We Have With Us for a Prosperous Year: "The Amazing Woman," "The Blue Pearl," and "12:10."
Ruth Clifford, Edythe Hallor and Earle D'Oro are the stars in these three Republic attractions pictured from left to right.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran

Who have signed a contract to produce five-reel comedies for Universal.

Celebrated Stars, Stories and Plays Make Realart Popular and Prosperous

THREE weeks after Realart Pictures Corporation had appeared on the horizon with its promise of nationally known stars whose box-office value is everywhere recognized, books and plays of literary value and popular appeal and direction and photography of the best, the organization had signed up three popular stars, had bought a long list of famous plays and stories and had begun arrangements for the contracting of two of the best known directors in the country.

The trinity of stars who have contracted to appear in Realart pictures are nationally famous for their work on the stage, but they have won equal fame on the screen. The sponsors of the new corporation in signing up these actresses were proceeding on the idea that the combined popularity is a genuine box-office asset. Realart officials also knew that benefits would accrue to theatre owners from capitalizing in pictures the fame of books and plays that are fine gems of literature and have proved their universal appeal to all classes of people.

First Released Davis Story.

To prove that their program was more than a theory, Realart gave the industry as its first release "Soldiers of Fortune," a picturization of the most famous novel of Richard Harding Davis. This photoplay in its world premiere at Washington, D. C., broke all existing records at Tom Moore's Garden Theatre.

The second special production released by Realart is also a well known story of a type especially adapted to the peculiar psychology of the restless times. "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," an Emile Chautard production, adapted from the French novel by Gaston Leroux. It followed the success of "Soldiers of Fortune" by shattering the box-office record of Moore's Rialto Theatre upon its first Washington presentation, after having drawn record crowds when it had a pre-release showing at the Broadway Theatre in New York.

The first three vehicles for Realart stars, adapted from well-known stories and plays, had the fame and popularity of their original form to back them before a single reel of film was made. "Anne of Green Gables," "Erstwhile Susan" and "The Fear Market" were famous long before Realart singled them out as unusual material for photoplays.

Four Classics in One.

In "Anne of Green Gables" the producing company has filmed the essence of four books that are classics in the American home. Particularly appealing to girls and young women, "Anne of Green Gables" is also well known because of its long use in the school systems of the nation as home reading. Throughout the land, wherever it has been shown, "Anne of Green Gables" has proved a winner, and in many instances it has shattered box-office records of long standing.

"Erstwhile Susan" is based upon the novel, "Barnabetta," by Helen R. Martin, and has not only the fame and prestige of the original book to launch it, but, in addition, it follows upon the wake of the successful stage run of the play with Mrs. Fiske in the leading role. At the Rialto Theatre, New York, "Erstwhile Susan," played a solid week to capacity houses and drew uniformly favorable criticism from newspaper reviewers.

"Fear Market" Popular.

Another star production to be released by Realart is "The Fear Market" adapted from the stage play of the same name by Princess Troubetzky. This play had a run on Broadway four years ago and is a dramatization of an actual situation which was then engrossing the public mind.

Are Light Stories of Young People or "Hokum and Gags" Most Popular?

By AL CHRISTIE

DOES the public want to be entertained with a diverting little story about human people, or does it want to laugh hilarously at a lot of hokum and gags? That's the question which directors of moving picture comedies have asked themselves a thousand times. That's what I have asked myself for the entire three years that we have been making Christie Comedies and I am frank to admit that I do not know yet.

Nine years ago when I began directing pictures, I started out making the type of comedy which we are still producing, light stories of young people, leaving out the so-called funny disguises, the rougher forms for alleged humor, the "hokum" and the "gags."

When we started Christie Comedies as an independent brand, we still followed this idea. We gave them stories first and laughs second. When the comedies were first shown by exhibitors, most exhibitors were skeptical. They sat back in their theatres and failed to hear any bursts of hilarity. There were no "stomach laughs" and the exhibitor failed to be impressed. I always maintained that "the loud laughs betokens the empty head."

"We'll See If They Want It.

It was different with the public. They appreciated being given diverting little stories which left them with something in addition to the remembrance of laughs. Once the exhibitor was sold on the proposition, it was much easier to please the public. All of which leads me to believe that what the exhibitor likes is not always a criterion of public taste.

Another comedy director asked me the other day, "Are you going to make the same kind of comedies this year?" I said I really didn't know, because we continually hear the same thing ringing in our ears. 'The public wants to laugh." So, as an experiment we have given them laughs. We have just finished a two-reel comedy which is a bubble of laughs all the way through. It is true it lacks in plot. If you start out by telling a story you can't stop to inject a lot of hokum. But we tried it and now we'll see whether they really want it or not.

Then the other director said, "Well, this must be the answer to your scheme of comedymaking. You established your own type of comedy alone and now you've got five other directors working under you, all making comedies in your own school of methods."

Perhaps, so. We'll see in 1920. Unconsciously, while building comedies around plots we have found ourselves making a star system for comedy, something which was entirely unlooked for and unsought.

Prerelease Showing on Blackton Film.

A prerelease showing of "My Husband's Other Wife," third of the Blackton-Pathé series of productions, has been booked by the State-Lake Theatre, one of Chicago's finest motion picture houses, for the week of December 22-28. Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are co-starred in this attraction, with Warren Chandler, and May McAvoy prominent in the supporting cast. The regular release date of the third Blackton picture has been set for January 4.

Dolores Cassinelli will make her next appearance in "The Web of Deceit," Edwin Carewe's initial production for Pathé distribution.

The newest Cassinelli attraction is in six parts, and has been set for release by Pathé on January 18. The supporting cast includes Letty Ford, Hugh Cameron, Franklyn Hanna and Mitchell Harris.

To Run "Flying A" Week.

P. K. Anton of Newcastle, Ind., will run an "American Week" of "Flying A" Specials at the Royal Theatre, starting February 16. "Eve in Exile," "The Hellion" and "Six Feet Four" make up the series.

While all three pictures are recent American productions there is the widest imaginable variation in the plots, settings and players.

The Hundred Per Cent Salesman or Exhibitor Is No Genius or Marvel

By "Smiling Jimmy," Universal Joy Bug

THE Hundred Percent salesman or exhibitor is not a genius, a wonder, marvel or a great anything else. He is just a real, human being, willing to smile at the smiling time—always cheerful—conserving his strength and health—recognizing no obstacles—laughing at hard work—believing in himself—believing his theatre is the greatest one in town, or, if he is a salesman, believing his firm to be "The Best."

If he wants to be a Hundred Percent salesman he first has really to believe that his firm is the best firm in the business. Anytime a salesman recognizes in a competitive house a better one than the one he is working for it's time for him to quit, as his value to his company is fast diminishng. He must believe that the policies of his firm are the best, that they are sound and that the management is honest and its workers are "all for one and one for all." The hundred percent man is he who is always glad to see Monday morning come around and sorry to see the curtain ring down on Saturday night. He spends all day Sunday "pulling at the bit" like a horse who is anxious to get into the race.

Pep and Perseverance.

Did you ever notice a horse that is hard to start, one that you have to use the whip on in order to make it move, and then on the other hand did you ever notice a bunch of thoroughbred "bang tails" at the wire, awaiting the starter's signal? Did you notice how restless they are, how the jockeys have to spend all the energy in making them stand still they are so anxious to get into the race? Therefore in order to be a Hundred Percent salesman you must be a "thoroughbred."

The Hundred Percenter has patience, he knows that "Rome was not built in a day," he has perseverance. He has future, because he builds character, personality and reputation each day of the week. The hundred percenter must be honest, because lying, trickery, insincerity, misrepresentation and other sins of "the get-by days" are all minus in the percentage columns. He is thrifty because, through hard knocks in the past, he realizes and knows the warmth in the friendship of "Good Old Dollar Bill" and because an empty pocketbook will never keep the thermometer of the percentage table at 100 centigrade.

Knows His Weaknesses.

The Hundred Percenter has his weaknesses, but he knows them, and strives to overcome them. All have their weaknesses, but the fellow who doesn't know his weaknesses and won't acknowledge them will never reach the 100 Percent mark. The Hundred Percenter is an analyzer—first of himself, then of conditions.

The Hundred Percenter when he does something fine lets others call him a Hundred Percenter, but still sticks to his No. 7 hat, tightens up his belt and uses his head to scheme out some way of how he can beat his own best record.

"The know it all" is a 100 per cent. man, with one of the naughts left off.

The Hundred Percenter remembers the story of "Little Red Riding Hood." He knows what his eyes, ears and brains are for—to see, hear and learn, and that a real education never ends. That is where he has it all over the much touted "college graduate" or educated man, as that fellow leaves his books behind when he graduates, whereas friend hundred percenter is studying books all the time.

The Plugger Versus the Whirlwind.

To be a Hundred Percent salesman you don't have to be a whirlwind, you are not infallible; therefore your company does not expect impossibilities from you, but you must "plug,'" man, and then "plug" some more. Don't skip a town because you think it is too small. In fact, don't "think" at all. Make every burg in the territory, and always stop off with the intention of selling the exhibitor something. Always do a man's work in an upright, honest and manly way and you have "arrived." You are a Hundred Percenter.

The foregoing applies to an exhibitor as well as to a traveling man, for to be a Hundred Percent Exhibitor, you have to be honest, upright in your dealings with your fellow-man—always wear a smile, even if thing do go wrong—never become angry or "peeved" at anything. (If your show doesn't get in, call up the film exchange and ask the reason in a cheerful tone of voice, and it will find some way of getting you a show. Remember it is not the exchange's faults, as no film exchange ever "blows up" an exhibitor on purpose. It needs the rentals too well to do this.)

The Hundred Percent exhibitor is the one who is willing to divide profits with the film exchange, and not try to beat down the price of film service when he is making money. Some of you boys have got in the habit of beating down the price so much that you do it when you are making money just the same as when you are losing.

Be Fair to Your Exchange.

Now I realize, Mr. Exhibitor, (as I have been an exhibitor myself), that the life of the industry possibly depends on the number of theatres that use film, but do you realize that the men who made this industry what it is are the men who are making the film? The men who have lost fortunes, sweated blood, grown bald-headed and gray trying to put this industry on a sound basis, trying to make A No. 1 100 per cent films, they are the fellows who should get most of the credit, for bear in mind that when they were "burning the midnight oil" you were possibly in some other line of business. Therefore why should you drop in on the industry and think that you can make it "all" at once.

To be a Hundred Percent exhibitor you have got to be fair with your exchange, your patrons and yourself. Exchange men as a general rule are fair-minded and broad individuals, and are always ready to listen to reason. Also bear in mind that the salesman is the man for you to do business with. He is the man who should act as agent between you and the exchange, he is the one in whom you will have to place your confidence if you want to qualify as a Hundred Percent Exhibitor.

Wise Guys Kid Themselves.

There are quite a few "wise guys" in the exhibiting end of this game who are continually running into the exchange everytime they want anything, or have a complaint to make. They kid themselves that they can get a better deal off the manager, assistant manager or booker than they can from the salesman, but if they ever worked around an exchange and discovered the "cute" remarks that were said about them when they left they would never go near another film exchange again. You can always secure at least a 10 per cent. better deal from a salesman than you can from the exchange, and when you give an order to the regular salesman in your territory he takes an interest in you and will "fight" for you if necessary.

When I first entered into the exhibiting game I used to think that I could always get a better deal by going into the exchange, but one day I overhead some remarks about exhibitors coming into the exchanges all the time, and I began to analyze the matter. From that time on I always did all of my business, settled all of my complaints and made all of my kicks to the "roadman."

Famous Players Takes Long Lease on Indianapolis Property; to Build Exclusive Motion Picture Theatre

WITH the signing the week of December 18 of a ninety-nine year lease by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for a part of what is known as the English Block, on the northwest segment of Monument Circle, Indianapolis, plans were announced for the construction, beginning about January 1, 1921, of what will be one of the largest motion picture theatres in the United States.

The lease comprises all that part of the building owned by William E. English, running from Market street to a point within ten feet of the English Theatre, used exclusively for stage productions. The ground floor property now is occupied principally by storerooms, including also the United States railroad administration ticket office. That part of the English hotel which is included in the lease is to be vacated and changed to make way for the new theatre. The present English's theatre remains untouched in the new deal.

To Complete Theatre in Two Years.

Two of the stipulations in the lease are that the property shall be vacated by tenants by January 1, 1921, and that the theatre shall be completed within two years after that date. According to one of the attorneys who negotiated the lease, the motion picture corporation proposes to build on the site an exclusive motion picture theatre that will rank with any in New York City. The entrance will be in Monument Circle and will be almost directly opposite the Circle Theatre.

Although the lease was not signed until this week it was prepared in September. Announcement of it was held up until all the stipulations, such as taxes, and time of possession, had been agreed upon. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has deposited a guarantee of $100,000 in Liberty bonds with an Indianapolis Trust Company and will deposit $150,000 additional when actual construction begins, both deposits being good faith bonds and returnable upon the completion of the theatre.

Terms of Lease.

According to the terms of the lease the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is to pay to William E. English rentals as follows: For the first seven months, $29,820; for the next year, $33,000; for the succeeding eighteen months, $34,000 a year; for the succeeding seven and one-half years, $35,000 a year; for the next twenty years, $38,000 a year, and for the remainder of the time, $40,000 a year.

The name of the proposed theatre has not been chosen, nor has its seating capacity been determined, according to the attorneys representing the corporation. Plans are now being drawn by architects in New York City.

Irwin Selected Site.

Walter W. Irwin, vice-president of the motion picture concern, selected the site last September after a visit to Indianapolis. Complete plans for the theatre are to be announced at a later date.

Another big theatre is to be erected in Indianapolis for what is known as the Marcus Loew-Indianapolis Realty Company and plans for the structure are now being drawn. The theatre will be situated in Pennsylvania street, a half block north of Washington street, and will have a seating capacity of approximately 3,000. It will cost about $600,000. A number of Indianapolis men are interested in the project.

Alice Joyce Finishes "Slaves of Pride."

Although it will be well into the new year before Vitagraph presents "The Sporting Duchess," the Drury Lane melodrama with Alice Joyce in the title role, there is another Joyce special production. This is "Slaves of Pride," an adaptation by William B. Courtney, written especially for Miss Joyce. It is in six reels and will be released next month.

In the supporting cast are Percy Marmont, Templer Saxe, Charles A. Stevenson, G. V. Seyffertitz and Louise Beaudet. The picture was directed by George Terwilliger.

British Have Capital Without Limit and Are Going Ahead With Production

THE Evolution of the Future of the Film Industry" was the title of a recent adress delivered by Edward Godal, president of the British and Colonial Film Corporation of London, before forty members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York.

Mr. Godal, whose mission in this country is to foster interest in British films abroad, held the interest of his hearers while he described producing conditions in Europe and in England in particular. He admitted that hitherto British productions had been inferior to those made in this country, one reason for this being the very limited market British films had hitherto been afforded. With only about 3,800 theatres as source of revenue as compared with the vastly larger number of picture housese in this country, Mr. Godal pointed out that a British producer had been in the habit of spending only about $10,000 to $15,000 for each production, the revenues from which was quoted as about $100,000. Since the outbreak of the war, he said, there had been so little production in England that American films had been bought on the "block system"—the good with the bad, and some time must still elapse before the contracts ran out. This had proved a further deterrent to improved production at home.

Much Capital Available.

The situation now, however, is entirely changed, production is going ahead, capital is available almost without limit, and Mr. Godal expressed unbounded optimism, almost amounting to prophecy, that the future—say within ten years—would see London the recognized centre of the motion picture production field, basing his prediction on British activity, on the history of finance and on the claim that Europe surpasses any other area in diversity of "locations" and of local atmosphere.

In evidence of the trend toward production in Europe the speaker pointed to the growing tendency of American producers to send field forces to the Continent. While deprecating what he called "bombing methods" alleged to have been adopted by one American firm in its determination to break into the English field, Mr. Godal invited and pleaded for mutual co-operation between this country and his own, advocating for America the method of "peaceful penetration" and assuring those who employed that method the willing and helpful co-operation of British producers.

Paul Gulick, president of the association, was in the chair and on behalf of the gathering tendered to Mr. Godal the thanks and appreciation of the members for his address.

De Havens Have New Comedy.

The troubles of Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven, as newlyweds on the screen, are continued in their newest Capitol Comedy, "The Sure Cure," which was released by Goldwyn on December 28. In this picture, Mr. De Haven has the role of a hypochondriac who delights only in visits from his doctors and the consumption of gallons of medicine. However, his wife, who has analyzed his sickness as imaginary only, devises a plan by which he is cured. But before our hero becomes normal again the story gives both Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven many chances to show their ability as original and clever comedians.

"The Sure Cure" offers many opportunities for exploitation. It was written by Robert McGown and directed by William A. Seiter.

Chronology of the Departed Year Points Out Industry's Chief Events

Compiled from Moving Picture World Files

NINETEEN-EIGHTEEN will be considered in motion picture history as a year of great events. In the latter months of the year a new financial element found its way to an influence on the moving picture industry that only the future can measure. Eternal Youth Is Theme of Wilson's Second Serial, "Screaming Shadow"

WHEN Ben Wilson's second Hallmark serial, "The Screaming Shadow," to be presented by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation following the final release of "The Trail of the Octopus" now booking with Ben Wilson starred, opens following Christmas holidays, the public will be given their first glimpse of the result of a theory to the effect that human life can be prolonged and eternal youth inculcated by the means of grafting onto the human body what are known to the medical profession as monkey glands. Mr. Wilson's late serial, now under production is founded upon this theory and during the course of the story written by J. Grubb Alexander and Harvey Gates, the theory of this monkey gland process and it effect, is brought out in a series of strongly dramatic episodes.

According to the authors and Mr. Wilson, who has now completed the sixth episode, the story offers great dramatic possibilities.

More in the Cast.

Surrounding Mr. Wilson and Neva Gerber, who is co-starred with him in this serial, Mr. Wilson has coupled practically the same cast of players that appeared with him in his serial "The Trail of the Octopus"—William Deyer, Howard Crampton, and William Carroll. In addition to these will be seen Fred Gamble and Joseph Girard, one of the best known character actors of the serial drama; Frances Terry, Pancy Porter, Claire Mille, and Joseph Manning.

Ben Wilson is seen in the role of John Rand, noted scientist and archaeologist. Miss Gerber is playing in the role of a newspaper woman who is heiress to millions but prefers the work on account of its adventure and romance. Mr. Crampton has the role of the millionaire head of the Eternal Life Syndicate. Joseph Girard, character man, has the part of Baron Velska, Prime Minister of Burgonia, Frances Terry has the part of Nadia, high priestess of the virgins of eternal youth.

"WOLVES OF THE NIGHT," the dramatic Fox screen production of E. Lloyd Sheldon's original story, in which "Smiling Bill" Farnum recently won added fame, has come back with Christmas and the holidays.

Since his completion of "Wolves of the Night" Mr. Farnum has done "Wings of the Morning," "The Last of the Duanes" and "Heart Strings," but for a very good reason the exhibitors with an eye to business have brought back the "Wolves" picture for the holidays. This reason lies in the fact that the picture closes its final scenes on Christmas Eve, a point which carries a singular appeal at this time.

Because of this feature of "Wolves of the Night" all Fox exchanges throughout the United States report the greatest number of return dates ever recorded even on a Farnum picture. All classes of theatres have awakened to the timeliness of the picture and the sudden influx of requests for it has caused many of the twenty-five Fox branches to hustle in lively fashion in order to meet the demands of the exhibitors.

Warner Is Well Supported in His "Haunting Shadows"

H. B. WARNER, who stars in "Haunting Shadows," a Robertson-Cole Superior production, has enlisted a notable cast with him in this absorbing mystery drama.

Marguerite Livingston, who plays opposite Warner, is a most charming screen actress, and has come to the front rapidly in support of some of the leading lights of filmdom. Edward Peil, who plays the crooked lawyer, appeared with Sessue Hayakawa in "The Dragon Painter." He came to the screen after a successful stage career in "Brewster's Millions," "The Witching Hour" and other successes.

Frank Lanning, the heavy, will be remembered for his work with Lasky, Fox, Bluebird and Jesse D. Hampton. One of his stage successes was with Blanche Bates in "The Girl of the Golden West." Charles Mailes has played with Mary Pickford in many of her productions. He was a Shakespearian actor before coming to the screen.

Another noted actor in "Haunting Shadows" is Charles French, who for thirty years played in the legitimate. His screen career comprises some distinct successes with Ince, Paramount, Biograph, Pathe and Triangle.

Blumenthal on Heels of Dupers of American Film

BEN BLUMENTHAL, president of the Export and Import Film Company, who is at the present time and has been for the past number of months in Europe in behalf of his various film activities, advises the Moving Picture World that he is taking steps to suppress the duping of American made films which he alleges is being practiced on a scale that is proving highly detrimental to the American exporter as well as to the legitimate and reputable foreign buyer.

Mr. Blumenthal has carried advertising in Lichtbilde, a local German trade publication, denouncing a Danish concern which he cites as having duped some of the best-known American productions and having smuggled them across the border into Germany. Louis Auerbach, also of the Export and Import Film Company, points out that another well-known European buyer of American-made film has carried a similar campaign of advertising in the same German film journal denouncing this practice and similarly promising prosecution.

Clark Cornelius Secures New Executive Offices

CLARK CORNELIUS CORPORATION, whose activities in the last few months have been largely concerned with winding up the affairs of Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, has rented the entire third floor of the new Hooven Building at 117 West Forty-sixth street, New York, and will be located in its new quarters shortly after the first of the year.

In addition to the negative rights to the twelve Chaplin Classics which were originally released through Exhibitors Mutual exchanges and switched to Hallmark Pictures Corporation with the sale of the Exhibitors Mutual exchanges to Hallmark, Clark Cornelius has acquired world rights to several productions which will shortly be announced for release.

"Our plan for expansion as distributors of and brokers in motion pictures are being rapidly worked out," announced Mr. Clark, "and we will be ready for operations in full force soon after we get into our new quarters."

The company has maintained temporary headquarters in the Mecca Building at 1600 Broadway.

Will Rogers Wins Fame Overnight as "Jubilo"

WILL ROGERS has more than duplicated his first success. "Jubilo" is regarded by Goldwyn officials as a box-office attraction of the first magnitude. The second production of the erstwhile cowboy played to crowded houses at the Strand Theatre in New York and was praised by every trade paper and newspaper critic viewing it.

"Will Rogers, who has caught the approval of motion picture fans with amazing rapidity, wins renewed popularity in 'Jubilo,'" reported the Evening Telegram. "'Jubilo,' a Goldwyn production, with Will Rogers as the star, is a gem," declared the Evening Sun. "Mr. Rogers' talent in pantomime becomes more forceful with each succeeding picture," said the Evening Mail. "Already he is established as one of the big favorites of the screen, and as he is alone in his class it is not beyond the bounds of reason that he will, should his popularity continue to grow at its present rate, become one of the idols of the film fans."

The captions which he is writing for his productions are joys forever. Many of them drew applause as well as laughter from the Strand audiences. One which won particular favor, was when Rogers, after trying for an entire night to fix a Ford, finally remarks, "No wonder he wasn't elected to the Senate with everyone owning one of these?" The Goldwyn company is congratulating itself on having such an artist and box-office attraction as Will Rogers.

Wistaria Buys "Why Women Sin."

Having completed production of "The Lurking Peril," the fifteen episode serial, featuring Anne Luther and George Larkin, and having disposed of both the American and European rights, the Wistaria Productions, Inc., has purchased for immediate production the play, "Why Women Sin," by Will C. Murphy. Lloyd Lonergan has prepared the continuity.

Anne Luther is the featured player. Claire Whitney, Charles Gerard, Al Hart, Baby Ivy Ward, J. W. Johnston and Edith Hallor support Miss Luther.

The Mirror Studio in Glendale, L. I., acquired by F. F. Gallagher, president of the Wistaria company, will be used for the making of the picture.

Massachusetts Exhibitors Dine and Discuss Threat of State Censorship

THE opening guns in the campaign against a proposed state censorship of motion pictures in Massachusetts were fired at the annual meeting and dinner of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts on Wednesday evening, December 17.

Several speakers sounded notes of warning, calling attention to the work to be done and the necessity for organization. Then Alfred S. Black, national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, opened the heavy artillery fire, suggesting that all theatres in the state be taxed 5 to 10 cents a seat to raise a fund to carry on the battle of the showmen for their rights and against censorship. This suggestion met with hearty response.

Horstmann Is Elected.

Officers of the league were elected at the annual meeting, which was held late in the afternoon at the league's headquarters, 106 Broadway, Boston. Ernest H. Horstmann, of Boston, was elected president, succeeding Frank J. Howard, veteran showman of Brookline. Mr. Howard was elected to the board of directors.

These officers were re-elected: First vice-president, J. B. Sproule, Central Square Theatre, East Boston; second vice-president, Charles Moning, Plymouth Theatre, Plymouth; treasurer, Jacob Laurie, Beacon and Modern theatres, Boston; secretary, Harry I. Wasserman, Eagle Theatre, Roxbury. Directors: Charles Harris, Boston Theatre; Al Somerby, Bowdoin Square Theatre, Boston; P. F. Lydon, Imperial Theatre, South Boston; A. H. Mailey, Brighton Theatre, Brighton; Charles Ross, Lancaster Theatre, Boston; Abe Montague, Day Square Theatre, South Boston, and M. J. Lydon, Winthrop Hall Theatre, Dorchester.

Set Date for Ball.

It was tentatively decided that the annual ball would be held in Mechanics Building on the night of February 7. Word was received from all the large film producers and companies that they stood ready to assist the project in every way. The following ball committee was appointed: Charles Ross, Ernest H. Horstmann, Abe Montague, Frank J. Howard, Jacob Laurie, A. H. Mailey, Stanley Sumner and Harry I. Wasserman.

Accomplishments for the year 1919 were reviewed. Attention was called for the great need of co-operation and organization in the fight against the state censorship bill, which is to be introduced in the 1920 legislature. Benefits of the league to its members were pointed out. Defeat of the Sunday closing bill, defeat of the standing room bill and defeat of the bill of the act which would have raised the age of children allowed to attend a theatre from 14 to 16 years, were pointed out as what the showman can do with organization. Efforts of the Massachusetts showmen in the nation-wide fight to reduce the 5 per cent. film show tax were also fully reviewed.

Adjournment was taken to the Lorraine Hotel, where covers for seventy-five were laid. After an excellent dinner Past President Howard opened the speech-making and festivities as toastmaster. The seriousness of the censorship situation was pointed out by Mr. Howard.

Censor Knocks Censorship.

Ernest H. Horstmann, the incoming president, was given a rousing greeting. Determination to have the organization stronger than ever in its successful history, was voiced by Mr. Horstmann. He said that two-thirds of those sponsoring censorship never attend a moving picture show and have no idea of the real value and enjoyment derived from motion pictures.

Alfred S. Black.
National President, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

John M. Casey, moving picture censor of Boston, frankly admitted that he could see no reason for state censorship. The motion picture industry, he said, was in a healthier state than at any time in its history. He thanked the league members who have theatres in Boston for co-operating with him

President Black Is Optimistic.

Abolishment of censorship in the few states that have it is coming, declared President Black, the next speaker. Where there has been state censorship it has been a serious setback to all engaged in the industry, he said. He did not minimize the seriousness of the situation regarding censorship, saying he felt that the battle against censorship in Massachusetts would require considerable work and finances. Mr. Black suggested that all theatres be taxed from 5 to 10 cents a seat to raise a fund to carry on the fight. He pledged his two theatres in Lowell to contribute at the rate he proposed.

There was some question in the minds of many exhibitors whether Mr. Black meant that the fund was to be a national one or whether it was to be confined solely to Massachusetts in the fight against censorship just begun. Most of those present said afterwards that they were of the opinion that Mr. Black had in mind a state fund and that the wheels should be set in motion at once through the league to raise it.

Warns Against "Dead Ones."

Harry Campbell, the popular manager of the Fox exchange in Boston, was the next speaker. He paid a tribute to the league's new president, declaring Mr. Horstmann to be a live wire and one that would keep the league to the front in the present crisis of the industry in Massachusetts. Warning was given by Mr. Campbell against some "dead ones" among the showmen when a fight was on for their rights.

Briefly but impressively, Jacob Laurie, the next speaker, reviewed the conduct of the league in the past. He pledged its support in future legislative battles.

Thomas Spye, Boston manager of the Metro exchange, was full of optimism. He stood ready to do his share and put his shoulder to the wheel in any fight the showmen were making, he said.

Secretary Wasserman urged a bigger, better and busier organization and pointed to the vital need of one in the present censorship situation. Mr. Wasserman said he was director of the Roxbury School center and that he had taken the matter of censorship of motion pictures up with various persons in the district. He found sentiment against censorship very strong, he said.

Present Gift to Retiring Head.

Manager Smith, of the Waldorf Theatre, Lynn, the first secretary of the first league in Massachusetts, delivered a sound business speech on the development of the motion picture industry.

The speechmaking was interrupted by the entrance of a little cabaret girl bearing a beautiful silver punch bowl and goblets on a silver platter.

"Who is the grandest old man here?" inquired the little miss.

"Frank J. Howard," shouted the gathering as the members of the league rose from their chairs as a unit.

The gift was brought to Mr. Howard. President-elect Horstmann paid a touching tribute to the retiring president, oldest exhibitor and exchange man in New England. Mr. Horstmann touched on the keen interest taken in the work of the league by Mr. Howard. Cheers and handclapping greeted his words. Mr. Howard could hardly find words to thank the league members for their thoughtful gift, which he said he would treasure very much indeed.

"The Great Air Robbery" Praised by Flying Men

THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY," Universal's big aerial feature picture, starring Lieut. Ormer Locklear, the flying dare-devil of the United States Army Air Service, had its premier opening at the Superba Theatre, Los Angeles, the week of December 28.

A committee of representative flying men from New York recently viewed a special showing of this picture at the Universal Broadway office. The party included Lawrence Driggs, president of the American Flying Club; Cole Younger of the contest committee of the recent Transcontinental flight; Mr. Richardson, publicity director for the Curtiss Airplane Company, and a host of American, French and British flyers, including many aces. In the gathering were seen "Ted" Parsons, French ace, with thirty-seven planes to his credit; "Scotty" Campbell with a string of boches; Dean Lamb, British ace, and many others.

The flyers unanimously pronounced the "Great Air Robbery" the finest aerial moving picture production they had ever witnessed

The production has a gripping story running throughout, the hold-up of the midnight aerial mail leading to many sensational air exploits, to which Francelia Billington and a strong cast lend excellent support Ormer Locklear performs what is probably the most hazardous feat known to present-day aviation by jumping from one speeding airplane to another.

Pathé has prepared an extensive advertising campaign on the serial. The principal feature is a series of display advertisements in more than 200 of the leading daily newspapers in the largest cities of the country.

Beck serial, "The Isle of Jewels" soon to be released by Pathé.

Big Opera House Scene Staged by Allen Holubar

ALLEN HOLUBAR, Universal director, undertook a big task in directing the Metropolitan Opera House scenes in the Dorothy Phillips production, "Ambition," recently filmed at Universal City. He not only had to direct his principal players, but the 200 persons employed in presenting the Chinese opera on the stage, the sixty five musicians in the orchestra, and the 1,600 persons, extras, who comprised the audience.

Most of the people used on the stage were former players and singers from the legitimate stage, and after a week's rehearsal Holubar felt that they would give a smooth performance. The orchestra, also, was under the leadership of Adolph Tandler, formerly concert master of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, and was sure to do its part without a hitch. But the audience of untrained persons was the one thing that worried the director. They may appear too self conscious, might not applaud at the proper time or show the necessary enthusiasm for a successful first night of grand opera.

But when the giant battery of lights was turned on and the cameras began to crank, the velvet curtains parted and showed an exquisite Chinese stage setting, 150 well trained choristers sang the score as played by the symphony orchestra, Miss Phillips, an exotic picture as the emperior for the life of her princely lover, dramatically played and sung by Juan de la Cruz, formerly of the Imperial Russian Opera—the extras forgot they were "supers," and applauded and enjoyed the performance to the limit.

Write Song for Roland Serial.

"Romantic Ruth," the song inspired by Ruth Roland and her characterization of the heroine of her forthcoming Pathe serial, "The Adventures of Ruth," will be on sale at all music stores and various chain stores throughout the country within the next week.

Marshall Neilan Promises Special Exploitation Service to Exhibitors

MARSHALL NEILAN is preparing extensive plans for direct exploitation service with exhibitors on his productions. This service will augment the publicity and advertising service of the distributors of Marshall Neilan Productions and will, it is planned, present one of the most thorough producer-exhibitor co-operative arrangements ever attempted.

Special advertising and publicity stunts ,together with an exceptionally large variety of photographs, stills and special material, are now in course of preparation. Particular care was evidenced on the part of Mr. Neilan in the selection of the personnel of his publicity and advertising department, and the present staff includes men who are familiar not only with the needs of the newspapers, magazines and other periodicals, but who have had years of experience in the co-operative exploitation of pictures in conjunction with exhibitors.

The initial Marshall Neilan production, the title of which has not as yet been announced, is said to be particularly well adapted for exploitation. The story itself is well known to the public and the novel is at present receiving a large national advertising campaign.

Has Trained Publicity Staff.

Special advertising and publicity material planned especially for the exhibitor's use and tie-ups of great drawing power are now being arranged. A trained newspaper and advertising man, assisted by an expert photographer and a magazine writer, are now working at the studio and are preparing matter of a novel nature, which, it is expected, will be particularly welcome to exhibitors.

In discussing his views on this matter recently, Mr. Neilan said: "There is room for special co-operation between producer and exhibitor. It is true that the exhibitor today is getting the best exploitation service that has ever been evident in the business. At the same time, I feel there is much work to do in this connection on the part of the producer. It is the personal contact that counts and it is our aim to give the exhibitor not a set of form letters or a printed sheet of instructions, but a direct and individual service that will prove of real help to him in his own locality.

Each Picture a Unit.

"It is a difficult matter to attempt to give every exhibitor the same set of exploitation service matter. There must be a standardization somewhere, it is true, but we hope to go just a step further and give special attention to every individual exhibitor who requests it.

"Marshall Neilan Productions will be sold by themselves, with no strings attached. Each picture will be handled as an individual unit. This will be a fact and not a theory, as has proved to be the case in many instances recently. It therefore behooves every exhibitor to in turn present each Neilan production as an individual institution and we aim to give him every assistance."

Many Popular Players in "$1,000,000 Reward" Serial

MANY popular favorites make up the large cast of "$1,000,000 Reward," one of the latest serial productions, presented by Harry Grossman as the first release of Grossman Pictures, Inc., and prepared for the screen by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey. The star part of Betty Thorndyke is filled by Lillian Walker, with Coit Albertson and William Pike playing strong supporting roles.

Miss Walker is seen in one of the best roles of her career, combining her natural talent for the sometimes dangerous work of serial making and her engaging, romantic personality. Coit Albertson typifies the popular conception of handsome manhood and the athlete's virility, while his strong acting quickens the character of Morgan Spencer to instant, humanly appealing reality.

William Pike, admirably cast for the chief villain of the piece in the personality of a rich heir to a portion of a diamond mine, who assumes the disguise of a Kaffir to carry out his plots, is to be credited with a fine characterization, which is one of the striking features of the picture. Particular credit is due Charles Middleton for his subtle delineation of the suave, scheming crook and to the assistant in his crimes, Bernard Randall.

Especially fortunate is the choice of Joseph Marba, who makes himself look every inch the shrewd Kaffir assistant to the band of crooks. He plays the part of Kenwah, the servant, with sober repression and perfect detail, which stamp him an artist of sterling ability. Leora Spellman cleverly enacts a difficult part as one of the band of criminals, giving a lifelike portrayal of incredible ruthlessness.

Van Croix, of Jamestown, Awakens Interest in "Soldiers of Fortune" by American Legion and Boy Scout Hook-Ups

A. E. VAN CROIX, owner of the Bijou Theatre, Jamestown, N. Y., faced the usual pre-holiday slack with thought instead of resignation. He faced it with "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production and an effective campaign for exploiting the picture.

"Do your Christmas shopping early," said Mr. Van Croix to his home city, "but don't miss the best picture that's come to town this year!"

He told this to the Boy Scouts and to the American Legion, and to all the education institutions of the city, and although unable to tie up with the public and high schools, because of iron-clad rules, he instituted a patriotic competition in the Jamestown Business College and made arrangements for showing the film to the whole student body at reduced rates for a group attendance of 200 or more students.

Gave Scouts Special Show.

The day before the opening of his picture Mr. Van Croix gave a special showing of "Soldiers of Fortune" for all the Boy Scouts of the town and other invited guests. The special showing was linked up with a proposed drive for members which the Scouts had in view. Patriotic addresses featured the ceremony, the Boy Scouts "ate up" the photoplay and much enthusiasm was aroused, the echo of which was heard in the Jamestown press.

Commander Peterson, of the local chapter of the American Legion attended, and following the picture gave a written endorsement for such uses as Manager Van Croix saw fit to make of it. This was used in a lobby display and was sent to local newspapers. Commander Peterson was also requested to announce to Legion members that upon presentation of their membership cards or Legion buttons they would be admitted to the theatre at half price.

Linking Up the Legion.

Advertisements emphasizing the American character of the photoplay were featured in the newspapers, and the fact that this is Richard Harding Davis' most famous and most thrilling novel was prominently played up. A special offer to Boy Scouts and accredited Legion members was likewise printed. On the main street of the city, enlarged stills from the adventure picture were attractively arranged with the theatre notices in the shop windows for the benefit of the crowds of shoppers.

Although Mr. Van Croix had in mind an elaborate tie-up with the public schools in an essay competition, it developed that iron-clad rules prevented any connection for advertising purposes with the school system. Undaunted by this setback, Mr. Van Croix lined up the Jamestown Business College with the contest and with special rates for large groups of students who came to the show.

Mr. Van Croix is particularly enthusiastic about this idea, and suggests its use in conjunction with business colleges and other educational institutions. At the same time, as in the case of Jamestown, a special arrangement can be made for a slight reduction in prices if the students attend in sufficiently large numbers.

Because of restrictions placed on the publication of contests of this, or any sort, we are unable to print the details. It is, however, to be presumed that interested readers may get complete details by addressing Manager Van Croix, inclosing return postage sufficiently to cover.

Mr. Van Croix in his handling of the exploitation of "Soldiers of Fortune," proved himself not only a capable showman, but has again shown how extensive are the exploitation possibilities of "Soldires of Fortune." Realart is stressing the point that not only in large cities, but equally in the smaller cities, this picture has capacity for tie-ups of an effective and dignified sort.

Arrest of "Miracle Man" Brings Coin to Manager

SOME press agent stunts are planned with utmost care—and then go wrong. Some publicity isn't planned at all; drops from the clouds—and works wonders.

A bit of publicity of the latter sort fell from the no-fuel darkened skies to the joy of Manager Harry Kiene of the Keystone Theatre, Indianapolis. Mr. Kiene was preparing his exploitation campaign for "The Miracle Man," which he was playing for a week, second run, following the engagement at the Circle Theatre.

He knew that for a second run, the ordinary "stunts" would be out of place. While worrying over the campaign this news item "broke" into the Indianapolis papers, front pages:

"In a little Indiana town a man was arrested and held for obtaining money under false pretences. It was charged that he had represented himself as the original of the famous screen character "The Miracle Man" and that he had the powers to heal attributed to the shadow man of George Loane Tucker's production. The re-incarnated "miracle man" was so convincing that he gathered money in large doses from wealthy persons in the small town, before he was arrested."

Manager Kiene made the most of this story and followed it up to see that the newspapers carried all the news there was in it.

Buffalo Showman Arranges "Country Cousin" Stunts

THE Strand Theatre, Buffalo, recently put over an excellent exploitation campaign on "The Country Cousin," which included an arrangement with the Truth Publishing Company whereby a photo of Elaine Hammerstein was used on the cover page of the publication and special displays made on the newsstands of the city. Two hundred large one sheet cards were also distributed advertising the Truth-Strand feature.

The Strand also arranged with the McNutt Riding Academy to have a girl steer a "Webster Driver," through the city. The girl was dressed like the country cousin and the carriage was similar to the one used in the play.

A large white blanket covered the horse announcing the fact that "The Country Cousin," was being shown at the Strand. A large sign also covered the back of the carriage.

A "Country Cousin," sleigh ride party was arranged for the orphans of the Remington Mission and a large kite was launched over the theatre from which was suspended a streamer announcing the feature at the Strand. Manager E. O. Weinberg had the assistance of Andy Sharick, Select's exploitation man.

Merchants of Billings, Mont., Advertise With Full-Page Display Lay-Outs to Link Their Wares With "Please Get Married"

THE cash value of active co-operation by local merchants in the exploitation of a picture was strikingly demonstrated recently by the Strand Theatre of Billings, Mont., in connection with the showing of "Please Get Married," starring Viola Dana. As the result of an advertising campaign in which Billings tradesmen "tied up" with the Strand Theatre, Manager Rankin filled his house for two days. On the third day of the booking all theatres in Billings were closed temporarily by the coal-conservation order.

The advertising campaign was the result of a suggestion by B. F. Rosenberg, manager of Metro's Salt Lake City exchange, and the vigorous manner in which Manager Rankin carried out Mr. Rosenberg's suggestion. The theatre management decided to conduct an advertising campaign that would yield the best results.

Exchange Manager In Charge.

Mr. Rankin wired Mr. Rosenberg for his advice. Mr. Rosenberg immediately took train for Billings, and volunteered to give the exploitation of the picture his personal supervision.

Mr. Rosenberg conferred with Manager Rankin and outlined his plans. The catchy nature of the title, he pointed out, offered unusual opportunities for publicity, and it was decided to take advantage of this.

Mr. Rosenberg and Manager Rankin got in touch with Joseph Markham, the advertising man of the Billings Gazette. They suggested that he interview the leading merchants of the city, and induce them to run "Please Get Married" ads in the paper.

As a result of the scheme, the Gazette appeared the day following with a full page devoted to "Please Get Married" in which the leading merchants of Billings were represented. A furniture company carried an ad with "Please Get Married" at the top in large type, and below, "But, before doing so, come in and give us the pleasure of showing you the proper way to furnish a home." Following which was shown a cut of model furnished rooms, and beneath in bold face, "Special—'Please Get Married' prices for Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday."

Many other firms adapted the idea similarly.

Kids Become Hunters of Black, Mangey Cats to Boost Goldwyn's "Jinx" as Result of Clever Woman's Exploitation

IN Omaha, where Mabel Normand in "Jinx" played an engagement at the Moon Theatre, Miss Unda Hamren, Goldwyn press and service representative, worked in conjunction with the house manager and the Omaha Daily News. They put over an exploitation stunt which resulted in making "Jinx" a most talked of picture.

Three days prior to the opening of "Jinx" the Daily News carried a front-page story announcing that the first 100 children to present a live back cat at the News office would be given a free ticket of admission to a special "Jinx" matinee. This story, supplemented by a side on the screen of the Moon and a special herald, succeeded in making a "big game" hunter out of every able-bodied youngster in Omaha.

From the moment the announcement appeared, to the time set for the showing, ebony-hued felines were at a premium in Omaha. Every youngster wanted one. For the duration of the contest they talked of nothing but "Jinx" and black cats.

As a result the stunt invoked a great volume of word-of-mouth advertising for the picture and gained a substantial amount of publicity in the News' columns. Coupled to the aggressive newspaper and billboard campaign conducted by the Moon the aggregate gave "Jinx" the impetus that sent it over the top.

Kids Become Circusmen.

The engagement of "Jinx" at the Lyric Theatre, Belleville, Ill., was also marked by a display of live exploitation methods. The outstanding feature of the campaign put over in Belleville was the fact that although it included a large street parade, co-operative advertising with a number of local merchants, an attractive stage setting, and a variety of other mediums, its cost was represented mainly by a few free tickets to the show and the use of the screen for advertisements of the merchants whose co-operation was enlisted.

One week prior to the opening of "Jinx" at the Lyric, the management distributed a thousand black cat heads prepared by the Goldwyn service department as a novelty herald. This was followed by a co-operative drive with the local music stores, which resulted in two windows of the store being devoted to a display of the "Jinx" song appropriately tied up with the picture by announcement cards and scene stills.

Juvenile Circus Parade.

A notable feature of the Lyric's campaign was a circus competition open to children in which tickets were given to youngsters who presented themselves at the box office arrayed in circus costumes and bringing with them wagon floats decorated in circus style. The affair was heavily publicized and large numbers of youngsters responded.

The children and their floats were assembled in front of the theatre at noon of the opening day. Led by a band, the parade, equipped with "Jinx" banners was sent through the streets.

Transformed Theatre Lobby Into Log Cabin for Effect

S. T. LESTER, manager of the Rivoli Theatre, Columbia, S. C., is making a record for himself as one of the live wires in that part of the country. And like all up-to-date showmen he appreciates the wisdom of getting the full sales value out of his lobby.

Mr. Lester devotes as much time and thought to the arrangement of the Rivoli entrance-way as he does to the presentation of his program. He finds that results justify his efforts.

For the showing of the Goldwyn picture, "The Girl From Outside" he gave the front of his theatre the appearance of a log cabin with doors at either side for entrance and exit. Unusual attention was paid to detail in presenting the exterior of the cabin that was "dressed" for the occasion quite as though it had been designed as a setting for a stage performance.

"Come Inside and See The Girl From Outside" made an appropriate line for display on the cards tacked to the cabin wall. Altogether, the display is so arranged that no passer-by could fail to be attracted by the lobby that so successfully catches the spirit of the production.

Creates Sensational Lobby by "Wrecking" Automobile

J. L. MARTIN, manager of the Rialto Theatre, one of the S. A. Lynch houses at Spartanburg, S. C., recently pulled a clever publicity stunt. "The Roaring Road," featuring Wallace Reid, was billed to appear at the Rialto.

To advertise the picture in a realistic manner, Mr. Martin borrowed an ordinary racing car and ran it into the lobby against one of the side walls. He then took off one of the wheels to make it appear that a spindle was broken, and piled glass and other debris about the car to make it appear like a real wreck.

It had the desired effect as many Spartanburg people are still wondering if anyone got hurt or killed in the smashup. A sign Mr. Martin had placed on the car read: "We Can't Keep 'em Out of the Rialto."

The total cost of this advertising venture amounted to a very few cents, and the result was that it packed the Rialto on a second run picture during a time when rainy weather would ordinarily have kept hundreds at home.

Completing Transatlantic Comedies.

The filming of the new series of comedies by the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., which will run under the name of "The Transatlantic Boarding School Girls" is nearing completion at the Epic Studios, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

In this series, Alice Mann plays the feminine lead. Freddie Howard plays opposite.

The series is being directed by Dale Hanshaw under the supervision of Allyn B. Carrick, and will be released on the independent market.

Advertising for Exhibitors

By Epes Winthrop Sargent

Here's Another Clever Stunt from Doob, the Paramount Hustler

OSCAR A. DOOB, the Paramount's Cincinnati ideas man, seems to be one of those natural born space grabbers. He works with his head instead of a club, and he puts stuff over. Paramount runs a monthly advertisement in the Cincinnati Post. Doob arranged a hook-up with the leading Paramount exhibitors and persuaded the paper to make extra casts of the special border used, to frame the side displays, with the result that it is one advertisement and not a display with a lot of appendices. That border is the only thing which marks the difference between this and other hook-ups, but it makes a heap of difference, doesn't it. And exchange managers might note that Doob gave an advertising man a desk in the exchange office where they could land the managers when they came in instead of having to chase all over town several times. That's another point of difference.

Showing how Oscar A. Doob used a special border to link hook-up displays with the big space.

—P. T. A.—

English As It Is Sometimes Written

Here is the reader from a recent newspaper advertisement taken from a Middle West paper published in a small town. Probably the advertising man thought he was slinging some rare language, but this is what he said:

Big Dimensions in This Rich Entertainment.

"SECRETE SERVICE" will be one of the most talked of picture of the year. You have not seen the opening chapter before you realize that you are in the presence of a rich subject—a subject which presents a powerful theme, is dramatically told, and one which sweeps forward with a mighty crescendo. If you have been skeptical of Robert Warwick, you can appreciate that his talent is no mere flash.

"Secrete Service is a Special Production in Every Way"

Most persons know that the title is spelled "Secret" and not in the French style with a final e. "Big dimensions" means nothing. Dimension is a measurement of space, not of quality. Crescendo is a musical term and applies to a swelling sound, not to dramatic tempo. Both words are misused. The line commencing "If you have been skeptical——" is worse yet. It means nothing though it probably is trying to say if you have doubted Warwick's ability, this play will prove his worth. The whole announcement is out of true. Possibly the house patronage is ignorant and will accept this, but it is poor stuff.

Hand-Drawn Displays are Seldom Equal to Type Ads for Legibility

THOMAS D. SORIERO, who used to be at the Park, Boston, sends in a display for the Strand, Lowell, Mass., in which he calls attention to the superiority of drawn designs as against type displays. We reproduce a part of the page. Mr. Soriero writes that he is using the drawn displays to overcome the increase in advertsing rates, intimating that he makes up in blackness what he lacks in size. In spite of the fact that this letter suggests that he has had to cut down the size of his displays, Mr. Soriero still has as large a space as any of the page, a single twelve against a double six for the Keith house. This gets him above a line of short single column displays for picture houses which run across the bottom of the page, but we think that while his advertisement is seen before the Keith display, more persons read the Keith advertisement. In Boston the drawn design is almost a disease.

In Lowell Mr. Soriero has this form to himself, but we still believe that it is not as good as the part type in that it is not as easily read. We are accustomed to read regular black lines on white. White on black is more prominent, according to optical law, but it is not as easily read, and an advertisement must be read and not merely seen. A characteristic signature in reverse would be a better plan for gaining individuality. A top and tail piece in reverse would be better still, while a top and tail piece connected with twelve point rule would be the most prominent, but, after all, the text is the real test. It is reading which counts.

"Hoodlum" Advertising Made Plenty of Business, But Had a Reactionary Angle

MANY of the pictures for "The Hoodlum" were real business getters, and the managers were quick to take advantage of the odd stills. Many used the picture of the star with the black rimmed glasses, which she wore only in a single scene of the play, but for getting business for "The Hoodlum," we think that this cut, taken from the middle of a six fulls from an advertisement of the Province and Gaiety theatres, Winnipeg, was the best business getter of the lot. At the top was a picture of Miss Pickford in pajamas, and below was a line cut of the crap game. Apart from the selling talk the only other argument was a "Ten different Mary Pickfords whom you have never seen before" set in three lines. It was a large space and it advertised "The Hoodlum" as few other displays have, yet we think that both the general advertising and the still are going to make it a little harder to get them in for the next picture. It is not the Mary Pickford patrons have learned to love. But apart from this question, which applies to all houses, the display is unusually good, particularly the placement of the selling talk just where it will be most likely to be read and where it will work the hardest.

In this aspect it is a model use of the space. The picture with the name below challenges attention. You do not believe that this can be Miss Pickford, so you read the text to make certain—and the message is gotten over. Just in passing, six full columns make a pretty large display, even for two houses.

Used Stage Money for "Paid in Advance"

Raymond Frankel, of the Lubin, Cincinnati, used for his lobby attraction for "Paid in Advance" sheaves of stage money depending from the ceiling. It was hung so high that the effect was good, and the sight of all that money roused attention even across the street. In a busy location some striking lobby display will pull more business than the best newspaper advertising, so all this money brought real instead of stage coin.

Tally Offers Sage Advice on Teaser Campaigns, Advising Longer Periods

TEASER campaigns, wisely used, are valuable where there can be a really strong hook-up to the title or the substance of the story. T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles, lately completed an unusual campaign for "Back to God's Country," using the billboards and newspaper space simultaneously. For the opening day the billboards were covered with white sheets and in the upper left hand corner were four animal tracks leading to the lower right hand corner. The same day the newspapers came out with a blank space with the four tracks. Each day four more tracks were added until the trail across the space was made complete, then the title was added at the rate of one word each day. The day the last word was added the sporting goods stores flashed displays of heavy sport clothing and camping material together with stills, and the lobby blossomed out with a full suit of advertising. The attraction ran at the Kinema for a week and then was removed to the Broadway for a second week equally as good. And the advertising for the second week was merely the announcement of the transfer, the preparatory work had all been done.

Mr. Tally puts the teaser campaign in a small compass when he says: "The trouble is that most teaser campaigns are made too brief. The disclosure is made before curiosity has been roused to the full height and the effect is lost." That is the essence of the teaser idea. It is to tease. It does not rouse full interest if continued only for a day or two. Mr. Tally ran for ten days before the first disclosure. He had everyone guessing and people even telephoned to the bill posting concern for information. A teaser should run not less than five days and can be run for a week or even two weeks. The rule is simple. The more elaborate the campaign, the longer it should run, for curiosity will be aroused in precise proportion to the extent of the campaign. Scattered teasers in the newspapers will not hold the interest more than a few days. Larger spaces will arouse greater curiosity.

Both the teaser campaign and the animal tracks are old ideas. The only novelty in the entire idea is in the use of pad tracks instead of footprints, yet this combination of two old principles made two weeks of big business for a good story. The footprint idea was one of the first to be offered in this department, eight years ago. It has been worked off and on ever since, yet the use of the pad print cuts in connection with this subject has been very general and always profitable. Dig into your Picture Theatre Advertising and you will find a lot of good stuff you can make money with.

Another recent Tally idea was to start a controversy as to whether or not Mary Pickford made a personally conducted trip down the coal chute in "The Hoodlum." He merely announced in a big display that he had personally seen her make the dive. The public did the rest, arguing for or against and going to see the picture (often for the second time) to pass personal judgment. This idea was used for a rebook of the picture, some weeks after the first showing. It was a simple trick, yet it made talk, and much of the talk it made expressed itself in the form of a request for tickets, which was the test of the stunt. It is "just once" stuff, but it worked powerfully. It works better on a rebook than for a first run, because it is necessary to establish the incident in the public mind before you begin to talk. Until he began to question the stunt himself no one gave a thought to the matter, but curiosity, once aroused, made a big return business.

Clemmer Uses Jazz to Play Up His Comedy

JAMES Q. CLEMMER, of Seattle, used a Jazz Band to help get over his first of the new Harold Lloyd comedies, employing the band to play this picture instead of using the regular orchestra, and making the band one of the attractions. And to make sure that everyone knew about it, he took a full page display in the Sunday papers, following this up with smaller spaces through the week, dropping from the full page to four tens and later to a double tens and then to a single.

A Full Page Display from the Clemmer, Seattle.

The full page is well displayed, though the main title is hurt by being run into the reverse cut. These parti-colored letters never get over as strongly as plain type, and in a small compass the title would be almost wholly lost, but on a full page there is more chance that it will be puzzled out, but the trouble is that it must be puzzled out. In plain type the reader would get the title at the first glance and start to read the advertisement already partly sold. He would be reading about the "Thirteenth Chair." Now he comes to it cold. He merely want to see what it is that is being advertised by means of so much space. Then if he is interested, he is sold.

Lloyd gets the better display for "Bumping into Broadway" and while at first glance it might seem that the comedy is merely an adjunct to the orchestra, the impression is created that the comedy must of itself be good if it will suit a jazz band. The smaller space plays up better the fact that there are two orchestras employed. This fact, in itself, is a strong point and should have won a stronger line. We think it is the first instance of a double orchestra being employed in a picture theatre, and the fact is worthy of a fuller exploitation, even if the jazz section is really a part of the regular band.

Herschel Stuart was lately appointed District Manager of the Hulsey-Lynch enterprises in Dallas and nearby towns. He was not well known to the Lynch men, so he got out a handsome eight page booklet instead of a circular letter. It was vastly more effective, and it makes the recipients realize that a live man is on the job.

Comedy Takes Most Space in Spokane Ad

The Liberty, Spokane, takes a four thirteens for a recent bill and gives four-fifths of the space to the Sennett "Uncle Tom Without the Cabin." The feature is given only a single four as a tag to the big drawing used to play up the comedy. Time was when a five reel picture had to be the feature. Times have changed.

The display was drawn by Jack Collier, who sends it in, and it is unusually good. It is not merely a lot of lines forming a picture. It gets under the skin of the subject and means something.

The line cut of the gabled house "Built 1636 in Dedham" gives character to the announcement and with a little of the top trimmed off it would make a capital press cut, for it is characteristic and unusual; a departure from the usual style of display. From all angles it is decidedly in advance of the usual throwaway.

Pages and Scatter Ads for "Male and Female"

The Grand Theatre, Chester, Pa., has been tearing things inside out for "Male and Female." The management did not figure out that the picture was big enough to bring in its own money and let it go at that. They figured out that a picture good enough to pay for itself would bring in more if it were boomed, and so they tore things loose and made a campaign that worked. They took half a page and built it into a page with the heading "Appropriate gifts for Chester's Male and Female." This got them the entire back page, and it also gave several merchants a chance to share the same distinction of space at even less cost.

That is one point we believe has not yet been touched upon in connection with these hook-up pages. The merchant gets what the house does. He can ride the same space on another page and he will be just part of a page of advertisement which may or may not be read, but riding on the page with a hook-up, all of the spaces are read to see how they hook up. For example, shoe store advertised "All about male and female shoes." People read the stuff.

In addition to the big display a scatter advertisement was run on at least every pair of facing pages except the reserved front page and there they got three inches for a contest, presumably conducted by the paper, for the best essay on the theme of the play. This contest, in order to comply with the postal regulations, is not confined to those who see the production, but essays may be written from the advance stories. Some of the scatters read:

work for Servants?

Is your Servant
Bossy?

Barbaric
Struggling scenes
With Mother Nature

Grass and Skin
Costumes
In Tropic Jungles

All of the scatters conclude with "See 'Male and Female'." These scatters are all single inches, but they make up in number and placement what they lack in size, and with scatters three single inches are better than two single twos. "Male and Female" will advertise itself, but it pays best when it is boomed. This is where many managers fail. They pay big money for some out of the ordinary attraction and then they "save" the extra cost by not advertising as heavily as they should. The more a picture costs, the larger the advertising appropriation it needs. "Good wine needs no bush" was written long before newspapers came into their own or it never would have been written.

Sydney Pollock Does Double Duty

Sydney Pollock, of the Strand, North Tarrytown, who a couple of years ago was the youngest press agent in the business, writes that he is now doing double duty. He is on the night shift at the World Film, but still does the press work for his father's theatre. He has improved in his advertising work. The two jobs keep him too busy to do much special work, but he does his regular routine well.

Hooked Up with Local Angle

The Garden Theatre, Baltimore, used the local angle for Dorthy Phillips in "Paid in Advance." Miss Phillips hails from Baltimore and her billing ran "Dorothy Phillips, the Baltimore girl, in ——." This appeal to local pride always works, even though few persons may have known the star when she lived there.

There is a certain amount of local pride which can be apealed to for a bigger clean-up than the play angle although the Garden by no means neglected to advertise the play as well; making it secondary to the star. This works so well that it even pays in a small place to boom a supporting player above the star; provided that the I-knew-him-when Club does not have too much material for reminiscence.

addressed to everyone. People will want to see what the theatre has to say especially to stenographers. The lunch hour matinee is a good idea. We think that Ezra Rhodes, of South Bend, Ind., was the first to work this angle some years ago. He ran his house on the continuous plan and arranged to show the best of his stories during the lunch hour.

Any continuous house can make an appeal with the noon hour show, particularly if they did as Mr. Rhodes did. He gave out rain checks. He figured that if they came in at noon and had to go away without seeing the finish of the story, they would be more likely to drop in after business hours. He also figured that they would not come alone. The noon hour business meant very little up to that time. By giving out a special check good for a return later the same day, he virtually sold his entertainment on sample and made an otherwise idle hour pay a big return. He got a lot of people back to his house who might in ordinary course have gone to some neighborhood. He already had their money, so they came back.

It is a great scheme, but it was sprung so long ago that many have forgotten it. At the same time it is such a valuable stunt, if you are situated in the business district, that it would pay you to open your house from twelve to one, just for the office workers. You can at least try it. If you do please report results for the encouragement of others.

Tricked a Still to Get Detail

thrown out and it was too late for a retake, for the set had been struck. A little retouching took out the foliage and gave a clean-cut profile without suggesting too much of a removal. It is a little thing, but there are hundreds of stills which could be vastly improved with a little intelligent thought and a retoucher's pencil. Mr. Puffer is on the right track, but he is very lonesome in his position. It would pay the larger studios to maintain an art editor to look after just such details.

Play Fair With Your Patrons

IN some states it is a violation of the law to advertise what you cannot deliver. In one of the states where such a law exists those charged with its enforcement recently called the attention of the exchange managers to the habit some houses have of not announcing a change of bill where there is a disappointment.

Nothing is apt to hurt a house more than incorrect advertising, whether or not deception is intended, and where a feature comes in late and something is substituted meanwhile, the fact should be announced and announced prominently. If there is merely a delay this fact should be stated and the audience should not be let in in the hope that the feature promised will turn up in time. It would seem that any management would be moved to this step even where there is no law against such advertising, yet this is not the case in all instances.

Vivian Forms Corporation.

The Vivian Theatres Corporation, of Seattle, was incorporated last October for $100,000 and took over its first theatre on November 23. This was the Madison Theatre, one of the most beautiful suburban houses near Seattle. President Brian B. Vivian has operated theatres for several years on the West Coast. His brokerage department handles a big percentage of the deals turned in the Northwest. The Rialto Theatre, just constructed at a cost of $15,000, has very recently been opened at Anacortes, Wash.

"Woman and the Puppet" Stars Geraldine Farrar

PIERRE LOUYS, the French author of spectacular and colorful novels, whose "Aphrodite" is one of the dramatic features of the theatrical season in New York, will be represented on the screen in the near future when Goldwyn's production of his "The Woman and the Puppet" is released, with Geraldine Farrar as the woman. The photoplay is completed and is scheduled for early distribution.

Both "Aphrodite" and "The Woman and the Puppet" created sensations when they were published as novels. The latter story deals with the love of a fiery Spanish cigarette girl for an army captain. It is rich in scenes of Spanish life and gives a clear conception of the impetuous freedom of the factory girls and their eternal courtship by the soldiers garrisoned in the town.

Geraldine Farar is said to do some of the finest work of her screen career in this picturization of Pierre Louys' novel. She has the role with which the famous French actress, Regina Badet, electrified Paris when she played it some years ago. Throughout the entire picture, Miss Farrar is the tense, yet sinuous Spanish girl who plays with love, yet never permits herself to become a soldier's toy.

Lloyd's Antics Attract Despite Chilling Weather

RUNNING in opposition to a cold snap, which brought the thermometer down 15 degrees below zero in Denver and surrounding territory, the American Theatre did an unusually big business with Harold Lloyd in "Bumping Into Broadway."

A. G. Talbot, managing director of the American, attests not only to the extremely cold weather but to the value of Lloyd as a drawing card, in the following telegram under date of December 16 to the director of exchanges of Pathe: "Harold Lloyd's 'Bumping Into Broadway' shown all last week as a specially added attraction at the American Theatre, played to very large and enthusiastic audiences notwithstanding below zero weather and partial closing of theatre on account of fuel shortage. All comments on this comedy very flattering and patrons seemed greatly pleased that Lloyd's new special comedies were so superior even to his former efforts. Feel certain they will welcome each new subject when announced."

Sam Harding, managing director of the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, has similary expressed himself, as has Isaac Guckenheimer, of the Blackstone Theatre, Pittsburgh.

Hallmark to Release Five Revised Minter, Fisher and Russell Features

FIVE feature productions selected from the earlier releases of Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fisher have been revived and will be released as a separate series through exchanges of the Hallmark Pictures Corporation.

The productions were made by the American Film Company Inc., and are controlled by Exhibitors Mutual. Prints are now in the Hallmark branches, with a supply of new paper and other advertising material.

Pictures to be Revived.

The series includes: Mary Miles Minter in "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," Margarita Fisher in "A Square Deal," William Russell in "Up Romance Road," Mary Miles Minter in "Social Briars," and Margarita Fisher in "Impossible Susan." "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor" is adapted from Josephine Daskam Bacon's story which appeared originally in the Saturday Evening Post. It was directed by Edward Sloman, and in the supporting cast appear George Periolat, Helen Howard and Emma Kluge.

Elizabeth Mahoney wrote "A Square Deal" especially for Margarita Fisher, and Lloyd Ingraham directed the play. Jack Mower, Val Paul, Constance Johnson, Louis Wells and Nanine Wright appear in the cast.

"Up Romance Road" Stars Russell.

"Up Romance Road" was one of the liveliest pictures produced by Russell under his contract with the American Film Company at the Santa Barbara studios and presents the star in a snappy action role. Henry King directed the picture from a Stephen Fox story.

"Social Briars" was one of Miss Minter's prettiest plays. Alan Forrest, Anne Schaeffer, George Periolat and Claire duBrey appear in the cast. The director was Edward Sloman.

"Impossible Susan" is based on the story of how a perfectly natural girl convinced a cynical bachelor that modern woman is not just a clothes rack, and proved one of Miss Fisher's most fascinating pictures.

Select's New York Exchange Moves to Bigger Quarters

PERSONS prominent in picture production and exhibitors from New York and nearby cities were present on Saturday afternoon, December 20, at the opening of the new New York exchange of Select Pictures at 130 West Forty-sixth Street, from two until five o'clock.

With the branching out of the Selznick Enterprises, Select moved its office from 729 Seventh avenue to the Leavitt Building on the first floor, formerly occupied by the World Pictures Corporation, where it occupies an entire floor of about 4,000 square feet.

The offices have been remodeled and done over in a soft grey and buff. Those who viewed the New York exchange congratulated Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures Corporation, and Henry Siegel, manager of the exchange, upon obtaining such commodious quarters.

Among some of the prominent men present outside of the Selznick officials were T. Connors of Metro; Samuel Reiben, of Reiben Film Company; Abe Bloomenstein of Fox Theatre Circuit; Lester Acker of Realart; I. Chadwick, president of the F. I. L. M. Club; C. R. Hoy, secretary of the F. I. L. M. Club; L. Rosenbluh of the Fox Film Corporation; George Meeker, general manager of Republic; John Mannheimer, Park Theatre, Brooklyn; S. Sonan of the Lincoln theatre, Brooklyn; of the Marey Theatre, Brooklyn; David B. Picker of the Pickers Circuit; Sol Brill of the Strand Theatres, Max Spugel of Strand Theatres chain; Charles Steiner, of Sunshine Theatres Corporation; Charles F. Haring of the Palace Theatre, Washington Heights; Lewis F. Bloomenthal of Jersey City, and Messrs Mayer and Schneider of the M. & S. Circuit.

Pearl White Nears End of Work on "White Moll"

PEARL WHITE, whose work in serials has made her an international favorite, has almost completed work on her first Fox production, E. Lloyd Sheldon's screen version of Frank L. Packard's famous story of the underworld, "The White Moll." The popular actress is being directed in her first Fox picture by Harry Millarde, who has as his assistant Anthony Merlo.

"The White Moll" is not a serial. It is a Fox special production, a big feature presented in a big way. Mr. Packard is the author of "The Miracle Man," "From Now On" and other screen successes, but "The White Moll," which appeared in the Blue Book Magazine, is claimed to be the strongest story that has come from his fluent pen. E. Lloyd Sheldon, who adapted it for the screen, has many scenarios and original stories to his credit.

With such a combination responsible for the work, this photoplay, it is said, will permit Pearl White to demonstrate that the admirers who have been insisting that she appear in something besides serials have had ample justification for their demand. A strong supporting cast has been given to the star. Richard Travers will play opposite Miss White. Walter Lewis, Blanche Davenport, William Harvey, George Puancefort, John Woodford and John P. Wade are the other well known players.

Work has been progressing at the Fox eastern studio for some time. Harry Millarde, the director, and Edward Weinert, the cameraman, are reported to have developed some sets with unusual and attractive lighting effects. The picture will be released in February.

Brunet on Way to Coast.

It is rumored that Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has left for Los Angeles on business connected with the Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

Talk on the street is to the effect that Pathe has already disposed of twenty franchises, with the early closing of others more than a mere possibility. This is Mr. Brunet's first trip to the West Coast.

William Fox Reviews Company's Work for Past Year; Sees 1920 Bigger

By WILLIAM FOX

THE motion picture industry has every reason for looking forward to its greatest year. The last twelve months have formed an epoch-making period in its history. It is with pardonable pride that Fox Film Corporation looks back on what it has done and looks forward on what it proposes to do. It has specialized in plays for children and produced such successes as "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Treasure Island," "Babes in the Woods," "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp" and "Ali Baba, or the Forty Thieves."

"Evangeline" Marks Big Step.

One of its greatest achievements has been the screening of Henry W. Longfellow's immortal poem, "Evangeline." This I consider a milestone in the path of progress for motion pictures. It faithfully follows the poem. Its photography is perfect. It is splendidly told. The National Board of Review gave a showing of "Evangeline" for noted educators and distributed questionaires asking for their unbiased opinion of the production. They were unanimous in pronouncing it one of the most beautiful picture plays ever shown.

One of our best successes has been "Checkers," adapted from the story of Henry M. Blossom, and ably directed by Richard Stanton, with an all-star cast.

To my mind a star who has done a great deal of good to motion pictures is William Farnum. Those who have seen him in such productions as "The Lone Star Ranger," "Wolves of the Night," "The Last of the Duanes" and "Wings of the Morning," have seen clean and strong motion pictures. It is highly gratifying to look forward to forthcoming productions in which William Farnum is to be seen. "Heart Strings" is one of them.

Pearl White is another star in whom the Fox company takes great pride. Her first production as a Fox star is "The White Moll," an adaptation of the story by Frank L. Packard, author of "The Miracle Man." Heretofore Miss White has been seen as a star in serials. Now she will come into her own as a dramatic star of power and charm.

Mix Expects to Do Bigger Things.

Tom Mix expects to do the greatest work of his career during 1920. In "The Feud," a recent release, he is seen not only as a cowboy who rides well, shoots well, and fights well, but as a type of virile American manhood of that critical period in American history that followed the Civil War.

The latter part of the year 1919 has seen a big expansion of our company. There came into existence Fox News. It is a feature that enables the peoples of all countries to see what this world contains.

In line with the policy of expansion being pursued by the Fox company, two new stars recently were signed. They are Shirley Mason, whose first picture will be "Her Elephant Man," based on the story by Pearl Doles Bell and Buck Jones.

An important event in motion pictures was the reception to the Prince of Wales at the Academy of Music on November 19.

During the coming year there will be a great elaboration of the Sunshine Comedies. The Singer Midgets have been engaged to appear in these features, and we also have Clyde Cook, the famous Hippodrome comedian.

Captain Bud Fisher has some splendid ideas in view for the Mutt and Jeff cartoons, which, during 1920, will give motion picture patrons more surprise and merriment.

Our foreign department has made great strides forward and our pictures are in demand all over the world. Such stars as George Walsh, William Russell, Gladys Brockwell and Madlaine Traverse are almost as popular in Europe as in this country.

With all of this progress in mind, it can be seen that motion pictures are going forward by leaps and bounds. Important increases have been made in the Fox theatrical enterprises. Work has been started on a theatre in the Bronx which will have a seating capacity of 4,500. The new Fox Terminal Theatre in Newark, just completed, is the largest of its kind in New Jersey.

Director William Taylor Saves Mary Minter Party

THROUGH the quick work of Director William Taylor, Mary Minter, her mother and party were saved from what might have been a serious accident when their chauffeur, fatigued by a twenty-four hour grind, lost control of the steering wheel of Miss Minter's automobile.

Miss Minter had spent four days away from Los Angeles making personal appearances in connection with the showing of "Anne of Green Gables," her first Realart production, at the Tivoli Theatre in San Francisco and the Turner and Dahnken house at Oakland. Following a crowded program of luncheons, entertainments and Christmas benefit activities, Miss Minter, her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, her director and a publicity representative left San Francisco at 4 a. m., December 18, in order to be able to make Los Angeles in time for the opening of Miller's New Theatre where Miss Minter was scheduled to appear in conjunction with her photoplay.

After a day of steady riding in a pouring rain, during which only brief stops were made for meals, the party discovered that in order to reach their destination on time they would have to spend the entire evening traveling. Near midnight, when the driver had lost his way and was proceeding along a narrow road above a precipice, the fatigue of the long, muddy journey told on him and he lost control of the wheel. Had not Mr. Taylor, who was in the next seat, seized the wheel the car would undoubtedly have crashed over the edge of the road.

Miss Minter and company arrived in Los Angeles in the early morning after a day and night journey of 475 miles. The youthful star spent the remainder of the day sleeping in order to make the promised appearance at the Miller Theatre opening in the evening. Miss Minter had an enthusiastic reception.

Stahl Arrives in Los Angeles.

John M. Stahl, director, recently arrived at the Louis B. Mayer studios in Los Angeles and is now going over the script which will be his first production on the Pacific Coast.

Louis B. Mayer has Mr. Stahl under a long-term contract which provides for his directing either Anita Stewart or Mildred Harris Chaplin in pictures for First National Exhibitors Circuit distribution. Mr. Stahl was formerly a dramatic actor of some prominence on the eastern stage. He is a close student of the drama. While in New York he directed Florence Reed in "Woman Under Oath," "Wives of Men," and "Her Code of Honor."

For and Against As Applied to the Location of the Projection Room

By F. H. Richardson

MODERN theatre practice, or, perhaps I would better say the pretty generally accepted practice in modern theatre construction, is to place the projection room in the rear of the auditorium and either at or partly above the ceiling line thereof. This is something more than bad, because it inevitably acts to hamper production and thus injure the final result on the screen. Even the most rabid forget-the-architect or manager hardly will dispute the proposition that the better the screen result the more seats will be sold in a year, or the higher the price that may be charged and still keep the S. O. S. sign free from dust.

Favorable Locations.

Let us then examine into the matter and see exactly what is for and what is against various available projection room locations. First, taking the rear-of-the-auditorium-at-the-ceiling-line-or-above-it location, we find in its favor: (A) little or none of the noise incident to ordinary projection room practice will reach the auditorium. (B) In case of fire the projection room is in the rear of the audience, and the location, being near the roof, offers ready exit to smoke and gasses, hence danger of panic is minimized. (C) No seats are sacrificed, or if any are then they are of the least desirable, hence cheapest sort. (D) The beauty of the auditorium is not in the least marred. (E) Usually there is space available for a more spacious projection room at the rear than would be available in any other place. (F) With the projection room thus located its proper ventilation is easy. All of which makes quite a formidable list of "fors" in favor of the location in question.

Unfavorable Locations.

Against it we find the following: (A) Any drop from horizontal in projection causes double distortion of the picture. It makes all objects taller than they are in proportion to their breadth, and causes all objects to be wider at their base than at their top. This is absolutely inevitable. By manipulation of the projector aperture it is quite possible to eliminate the sloping sides produced by drop in projection, but the distortion in the picture itself it is impossible to control. Fortunately this distortion is not seriously objectionable until the pitch exceeds 12 per cent, which is the maximum allowable percentage in projection pitch set by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Beyond that figure it becomes rapidly and increasingly objectionable. That the picture distortion is not perceived by the audience is no proof that screen results do not suffer, or that the same audience would not find itself better pleased with a normal, undistorted picture, and if it would it then follows that the undistorted picture would sell more seats, or the same number at higher prices. (B) Even diffusion of picture light to all parts of the auditorium is next to impossible where there is heavy pitch in projection. This fault may and most likely will be a grave one unless very careful attention is given to screen surface.

Tilting the Screen.

To entirely overcome it by screen surface construction would probably be impossible, or if possible then very costly. (C) In most cases of heavy projection pitch the attempt is made partially to overcome distortion by tilting the screen. This is objectionable, especially from the viewpoint of those seated in the front half of the auditorium. It operates to injure the general result as viewed from the main floor, even though the tilting be hidden from view by blending a dark screen border in dark surroundings. (D) The rear location usually makes for very long distance of projection, and this, for optical reasons, involves heavy loss of light, which, while to some extent under control, cannot usually be reduced to much less than 25 per cent loss of total input wattage.

Gives Projectionist Poor View.

This loss also is involved in steep projection pitch, since in order to sharpen the entire field under such conditions it is usually necessary to reduce the lens aperture, which makes for large light-waste. (E) The long distance of projection usually involved in this location, especially when combined with small observation ports, gives the projectionist a very poor view of the screen, and makes it practically impossible for him to judge with any degree of accuracy as to sharpness of focus, except an opera glass be used, and this the average projectionist just simply will not do often enough to maintain constant absolute sharpness of definition, and any falling off from sharpness of definition of the picture is a very serious matter, indeed, since it involves additional work for the eyes of the audience.

To Take Up Other Locations.

In proof, try reading an even moderately blurred carbon copy of typewritten matter for ten minutes, and see what happens to your eyes. Absolute sharpness of focus is of literally huge importance, and that man does not live who can correctly judge of sharpness of definition without the aid of a glass if he is more than fifty feet from a picture of ordinary size, though the ordinary eye will serve fairly well up to seventy-five or even eighty-five feet.

As before said this item may be and usually is made still more objectionable in its effects by small observation ports and by a light projection room.

Next week we shall consider the various points for and against the two other available locations, viz: at the rear of the main floor of the auditorium and at the front of the balcony.

Ellis to Direct O'Brien.

Special importance is attached to the announcement by Myron Selznick that "A Fool and His Money" by George Barr McCutcheon will be Eugene O'Brien's next picture and that Robert Ellis will be his director.

Mr. O'Brien is taking a much needed rest while Director Ellis is going over the script, making preparations for an elaborate production, and work is scheduled to begin soon.

"Truth" and "Nobody" Make Little Impression on "Everywoman."
Everybody likes "Everywoman"; you'll find it so in this Paramount-Artcraft version of the well-known morality play.

Louise Glaum Has Double Day and Date Premiere for Week in Chicago

J. PARKER READ, JR.'S, second Louise Glaum special production "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," began its career in Chicago with a full week day and date engagement in the Boston and Rose theatres, two of the Harry Moir chain under the general management of W. C. Dineen. Mr. Dineen had booked this production on sight for a two weeks' engagement at the Alcazar Theatre, but so strong was his belief in its power that he cancelled out of one of his other houses one of the biggest of the recognized feminine stars, thereby making two houses available for simultaneous presentation of the picture.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the distributor, announces the immediate success of this Louis Joseph Vance story which has been produced by Mr. Read with all of the distinction and richness that characterized his popular "Sahara."

Illinois Booking.

In the Chicago territory, where the Hodkinson sales organization first had a look at the New York home office sample print, first run bookings have been contracted for by the Palm Theatre, Rockford; Star, Elgin; Mirror, Moline; Majestic, Bloomington; Orpheum, Galesburg; Fox, Aurora, and Majestic, La Salle; and the following Chicago theatres, the Gold, Twentieth Century, Vista, Pickford, Vendome, La Salle, Pine Grove, Bryn Mawr, Karlov, Crown, Paramount, Lakeside, Douglas, Madison Square, Hub, Hamlin, New Apollo and Avon.

St. Louis and the Missouri first run bookings are now in full swing. The new Louise Glaum production has also been booked for early first run showing at the Opera House, Jamestown, N. Y.; the Jefferson, Auburn, N. Y.; and the Signal Amusement Company's big house at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Fortune has taken Louise Glaum in hand as a star of the screen and assumed the full responsibility for both her present and future career. She has received those things prayed and worked for by all stars and seldom, if ever, obtained.

In two J. Parker Read, Jr., productions, "Sahara" and "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," Louise Glaum achieved more than some stars have done through a dozen pictures. In these days, when quality is more than ever the big and almost exclusive requisite in pictures, Louise Glaum finds herself the sole star of an organization whose every effort is shaped and dictated exclusively by the shrewdest approximation of her personal and dramatic requirements.

Wenstrom to Photograph "The Hope"

Harold Wenstrom has been selected to photograph "The Hope," the second of the five Drury Lane melodramas to be filmed by Screen Classics, Inc., with an all-star cast. Mr. Wenstrom photographed the first Drury Lane play, "The Best of Luck," which was completed a few weeks ago.

Franklyn Farnum Stays with Canyon.

Franklyn Farnum, who is being starred by the Canyon Pictures Corporation in western pictures, has been offered a prominent role on the speaking stage in a Broadway production, but owing to his contract with the Canyon Pictures Corporation, and a liking for his studio work, has declined the offer for the present.

Selznick Announces Picturizations of Flynn's Experiences As a Sleuth

ANOTHER milestone in the progress of the Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director and Briton M. Busch is president, is marked by the announcement that Republic has acquired a series of eight two-reel features which relate the weird, peculiar and fascinating experiences of William J. Flynn, former chief of the United States Secret Service and now director of investigation of the Department of Justice.

Everyone knows of William J. Flynn. Probably the greatest living detective of the day, his exploits in running down criminals have extended over a long period of years and brought him in contact with the cleverest of criminal minds plotting against the government and the peace of the country. From this interesting career, Carl Harbaugh and J. Godron Cooper, whose records as directors include a long list of successes, have taken the most noted cases and put them into screen form.

Rawlinson to Star.

When it was planned to picturize Chief Flynn's life story, the problem arose as to who should play the leading role. After several names were considered, the producers finally decided upon Herbert Rawlinson, a young actor, who has proven his right to stardom by his brilliant performances with Selig, Bosworth, Universal, Famous Players, Goldwyn, J. Stuart Blackton and other companies. Rawlinson also appeared in a Craig Kennedy serial and the training he derived in this production just fitted him for the part of "Lightning" in the Chief Flynn series, which is completed and will soon be released by Republic.

Each picture is a complete story and the titles all have a box-office drawing power. They include "Chang and the Law," "The Five Dollar Plate," "The Silkless Banknote," "Outlaws of the Deep," "The Faker," "The Poppy Trail," "The Kalda Ruby" and "The Phantom Butler."

Entire Kerrigan Series Sold for West Indies

THE W. W. Hodkinson foreign department announces the sale of the entire series of J. Warren Kerrigan's Robert Brunton productions for the West Indies to Ramirez Torres, head of the Selection Film Service, Inc., of Porto Rico and Havana.

Mr. Torres, who has just returned from a commercial trip that carried him to every large centre in the West Indies, reports that the picture business has attained a high standard throughout the Islands and that many new theatres have been erected in Havana the past year, and that a score of others are in course of construction.

Prints of the first three productions in the Kerrigan series have been sent to the distributors at Havana

Bret Titling "Blind Love."

Tom Bret is now at work in writing the sub-titles for Gerald F. Bacon's production, "Blind Love," starring Lucy Cotton with George Le Guere in principal support. Mr. Bacon's production will be distributed on the state rights market by Nathan Hirsh of Aywon Film Corporation.

Pallette in Armstrong's Play.

Eugene Pallette has been engaged by Maxwell Karger, Metro director general to play "Red" Jocelyn in "Alias Jimmy Valentine," Bert Lytell's next Metro-Screen Classics, Inc., production.

Mr. Lytell plays of course, Lee Randall, the name role of Paul Armstrong's popular crook play. "Alias Jimmy Valentine" was adapted to the screen by Finnis Fox. Arthur D. Ripley will direct.

Past Year Was One of Unexampled Prosperity for Picture Industry

By THOMAS H. INCE.

THE outstanding fact of the closing year is that it has been one of unexampled prosperity in the motion picture industry. More money has been taken in throughout the country, production has been vastly increased and the demand for pictures has been unprecedented.

There are many factors that explain this condition of affairs—relief from the strain of the war, high wages and the partial reopening of the foreign markets. The output of the producers sets a new record and I am convinced that, so far as Paramount-Artcraft is concerned, a high level of excellence has been maintained throughout the year.

To deal particularly with the productions in which I was personally interested, I think I may claim that the pictures made at my new studios, opened in the first month of the year, maintained the established reputation of Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett and Charles Ray.

Success of MacLean and May.

One event of the year has afforded me the greatest satisfaction, the immediate success of my two new stars, Douglas MacLean and Doris May, in their first starring vehicle, "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave." The satisfaction was greater as, in a measure, I had staked my reputation for gauging the popular feeling in this new offering. The play had its first showing at the Rialto in New York before a Broadway audience. The next morning I felt like a prophet, somewhat surprised at the accuracy of my forecast.

I have planed a series of pictures for these clever young artists, keeping the light, unstrained comedy motive predominant. I have already completed three pictures on these lines and have never felt the slightest doubt as to their cumulative success. "What's Your Husband Doing?" and "Mary's Ankle" are ready for release and I am busily at work on an original comedy which will carry a ripple of laughter through the film world.

Underseas Scenes.

In strong contrast to these cemedies I have launched Hobart Bosworth in a specially prepared version of Gouverneur Morris' "Behind the Door." In this production I have used the sea and submarines in a series of startling pictures which, I believe, will prove one of the screen sensations of the year.

Doubting Showmen Finally Learned Drawing Power of Hodkinson Release

AN old time exhibitor suspicion throughout the country that if an exhibitor says a good word for a picture he will have to pay more for the next picture he buys, seems to be an exploded superstition and particularly so with regard to Benjamin B. Hampton's powerful Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold," released by Hodkinson. This is a production which from the day of its recent first presentation has been unanimously praised by the exhibitors who have bought it.

The things exhibitors say about "Desert Gold" embrace a wide range. One exhibitor, for example, says, "Everybody told me I was crazy when I paid $500 for this picture in my little town and I ran it and made a clean $1,000 profit. If that is being crazy I want to remain in the same condition and wish to ask you to let me know well in advance when your next Zane Grey picture is coming."

What a Few Showmen Said.

A Texas exhibitor said "I fought with your representative over the price he asked for 'Desert Gold.' I booked it and the playing days happened to fall in the centre of the coldest streak of weather we have had in many years. I had a line outside every day and many shivering people stood for hours in the lobby, tickets in hand, and then asked for and got a refund of their admissions, fearing to stand longer in the cold."

A Colorado exhibitor said, "'Desert Gold' whipped the coal strike and a snow storm when it broke all my house records."

Increases Author's Reputation.

Another big first run theatre, one of the largest in America, held off in deciding to book "Desert Gold" from September to December, then doubtfully booked it for a week in one house only to follow this with a solid booking for a week each in all of the organization's cities. Charles H. Miles and his Detroit general manager, Tom Eland, waited a long time before booking the picture for Michigan's greatest city and confess that they booked it for their big Majestic on the basis of what they have heard it has done for other exhibitors.

After all, there is a marked advantage at times in having a picture make good on a big scale for an exhibitor who hasn't believed that it will make good. It solidifies an author and producer in such houses for future productions. In the case of Zane Grey, in the few instances where there has been exhibitor doubt, it has established Grey firmly for other engagements of the pictures bearing his name that Benjamin B. Hampton will produce.

Cottage Built on Metro Stage.

A two-story cottage has been built upon one of the enclosed stages at the Metro studios in Hollywood, for the Screen Classics, Inc., production of "Old Lady 31."

When picture scenes take place on different floors of the same building it is customary to build sets side by side on the studio stage. Sometimes the lower end of a stairway will be at one side of the studio, and the upper end across the floor.

The Miami Valley Exhibitors League Indorses National Picture Theatres

THE thorough co-operation of the Miami Valley Exhibitors League with the National Picture Theatres, Inc., fathered by Lewis Selznick, was assured after a report by a special committee had been read at a specially called meeting of the body in Dayton, Ohio, recently.

Acting with their customary caution and thoroughness, the league appointed a committee composed of John Seifert, president; A. F. Kinsler, secretary, and Peter Zender, a prominent member, to thoroughly investigate the Selznick proposition and determine whether or not it would assist the independent exhibitor in combating the growing menace of the producer-owned theatre movement.

The committee spent four days in New York city carefully going over every phase of the new proposition and consulted with the officials of the New York exhibitors' league, with which the Dayton organization is very closely allied. The finding of the committee was altogether favorable and the endorsement accorded was unanimous and hearty.

Has Wide Representation.

The Miami Valley Exhibitors League is the largest organization of its kind in the country and numbers over 400 members with the list still growing. Originally intended to take in only the exhibitors of the city of Dayton, the charter has been so amended that the membership now covers four states and every mail brings requests for admission from all over the country, even California exhibitors sending requests for membership.

Plans of the League now well under way will result in a doubling of the membership in the next thirty days and with the effective administration of President John Seifert, some very interesting news may be expected.

In an interview with a representative of the World Mr. Seifert said: "It is high time that the indepndent exhibitor realize that the gradual absorption of theatres all over the country by motion picture producers eventually means that there will be little left for the individually owned theatre. Some kind of a combination must be effected at once in order to combat this aggression, and in my mind the National Picture Theatres, Inc., as planned by Louis Selznick, is just the thing to do it.

"I realize that this means a need for "hot-stuff-full-of-pep co-operation and this is exactly what the Miami Valley Exhibitors League will foster. There are in the picture business as well as in every other business some creatures that need some stiffening material injected into their spines. We have a supply of just that kind of material and are prepared to use it most effectively. Our cooperation is effective now, with our present membership, and when this has been doubled, as it will be in the next thirty days, we shall be prepared to step some."

Wave of Theatre Building Sweeps Over Pacific Coast

A VERITABLE wave of theatre building is sweeping over California and the entire Pacific Coast and more moving picture houses are being built now than ever before in the history of the industry. Large and elaborate houses are the rule, even in the smaller communities, and there is scarcely a city of note where a new theatre is not in course of erection or being planned.

By far the most ambitious building plan is that of Ackerman & Harris, of San Francisco, who are literally building and planning moving picture theatres by the dozen and whose program along this line amounts well up into the millions of dollars. Their vaudeville circuit is to be paralleled by moving picture houses and, as the former includes almost thirty theatres the immensity of the plan is readily realized. Work on the Golden West Theatre, Oakland, has reached a point where it will soon be possible to settle on a definite date for opening.

Another for Los Angeles.

Construction work on the $1,000,000 house in San Francisco will be commenced as quickly as contracts can be let and materials assembled. Plans have been completed for the rebuilding of the Yosemite Theatre, Stockton, and work is under way on the remodeling of the house at Sacramento. A big theatre is being erected for this concern at Long Beach and plans have been consummated for the building of a fine house at Los Angeles.

Plans for the Granada Theatre to be created by Herman Webber and associates at Market and Jones streets, San Francisco, are rapidly assuming form and work on this house will be commenced early in the spring. Contracts have been awarded by S. Mariani for the erection of a moving picture house at 3350 Mission street to supplant the Lyceum Theatre, which has transferred its shows to the Bells Theatre nearby during building operations. The Verdi Theatre on North Beach is to be remodeled and enlarged and a large pipe organ installed at a cost of $10.000.

Turner & Dahnken Busy.

The Golden West Amusement Company has awarded contracts for the erection of a $125,000 theatre at Modesto, a structure planned by Reid Brothers, 105 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Architect A. W. Cornelius, Merchants' National Bank Building, San Francisco, is preparing plans for a $100,000 theatre to be erected at Salinas by Brown Brotherns, who have leased it to Turner & Dahnken. This architect is also preparing plans for Turner & Dahnken for a $125,000 theatre to be erected at Richmond. The Kehrlein interests, who conduct the Kinema theatres at Oakland and Fresno, as well as the Franklin Theatre in the former city, are enlarging the Fresno house and have announced that a new and larger theatre will be erected at once at Oakland. This announcement was made recently at a banquet tendered employes and newspaper men.

New Vitagraph Serial Released.

The fifteenth and final chapter of "Smashing Barriers," the Vitagraph serial with William Duncan in the leading role was shown at the first run theatres last week and now will come "The Invisible Hand," with Antonio Moreno. The first episode, which is in three reels, is being released this week.

First Goldwyn-Cohen Play Has Unusually Small Cast

IN the first photoplay from the pen of the prolific Octavus Roy Cohen, "Two Cents Worth of Humanness," now nearing completion at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, one of the smallest casts ever assembled for a five-reel picture will be presented. But what it lacks in numbers, it supplies in quality.

Madge Kennedy has the stellar role, that of a girl struggling to succeed on the stage. Her leading man is John Bowers, who recently supported Pauline Frederick in "Loves of Letty." Mr. Bowers has played leading roles with Miss Kennedy in several productions, the most recent being "Strictly Confidential." Florence Deshon has an important role. Willard Lewis and Richard Tucker are the other players who complete the quintet of excellence in "Two Cents Worth of Humaneness."

In bare outline, this first Octavus Roy Cohen photoplay tells the vicissitudes of a capable and ambitious young actress in her attempt to succeed on the stage. How she meets adversity and finally triumphs over it, gives Madge Kennedy an excellent opportunity to delight her many screen admirers. The production is being directed by Harry Beaumont and photographed by Norbert Brodin.

Stanley Circuit Books "12.10."

Following the engagement at the Capitol Theatre, New York, of "12.10," the superfeature in which Marie Doro is the star and Herbert Brenon the director, the Republic Distributing Corporation is booking the entire Stanley Circuit in Philadelphia and Pennsylvania for this photoplay. Reports coming into the home office from the different branch exchange indicate that the bookings on "12.10" will even exceed that of "When Bearcat Went Dry," which was the banner feature of the year.

Eagle Grove Joins Anti-Sunday List, Will Stewart Refuses a Membership

EVIDENTLY Miss Dolly Spurr is going to have company in her fight for Sunday shows. With most communities looking more favorably upon a more liberal interpretation of the Sunday law, some few isolated examples are to be found where the blue laws are becoming ever more deeply indigo. One of the towns to start a retrograde advance is Eagle Grove, Iowa, where Will Stewart conducts the Princess and Eagle theatres. The Middle West, almost without exception, has always countenanced the Sunday performance, provided that it was decorously conducted, but the wave of fanatical reform which has come to curse the country along with the other after-effects of the war hit the City Fathers, and a recent issue of the local paper carries what Mr. Stewart denominates "Notice No. 1." This is in the form of an advertisement which reads:

Be it ordained by the City Council of the City of Eagle Grove, Iowa:

Sec. 1. That it shall be unlawful for any person to operate of conduct on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, any shooting gallery, skating rink, theatre, moving picture show, side show, or any other show or exhibition of any kind.

Sec. 2. Any person found guilty of violating any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be subject to a fine of not less than Ten ($10.00) Dollars, nor more than Fifty ($50.00) Dollars and the cost of prosecution and shall stand committed until such fine and costs are paid.

Sec. 3. This ordinance shall be in full force and effect from and after the date of publication, as required by law.

Adopted December 1, 1919.

This resolution was passed by a vote of four to two after those in favor of the ordinance refused to submit the question to the voters of the town, though an offer was made to defray all the costs of this referendum and hold the municipality free of expense. The reformers did not want a referendum. They knew that public sentiment was against Sunday closing. They knew that they had a majority in the council and they put it through.

One unusual feature of the fight was the number of mothers who signed a petition in favor of Sunday opening on the grounds that the open theatre would keep their children in town and not drive them to questionable resorts outside of the corporate limits in search of Sunday diversion.

Mr. Stewart's reply to the passage of the ordinance he designates as "Notice No. 2." It is a portion of his regular advertisement for the Princess Theatre, and in 36-point letters it announces

"Sunday—two shows."

Feeling that he has the public with him, he intended to put the matter to an issue, and force a public vote upon the debated question. There has never been any question as to the propriety of his theatres. It is not a measure directed at an objectionable resort. It is simply one of the signs of the times, and he wants to find out how the community stands in the matter.

"Big U" Announces More Changes in Picture Titles

THE much heralded Dorothy Phillips production directed by Allen Holubar, which was entitled "Ambition" has been changed and given the title "The Courageous Canary." This is a Universal-Jewel production.

The next Stroheim Jewel production, which has been known as "The Woman in the Plot," has been given a new title of "The Devil's Pass Key."

"Burnt Wings" is the new title of a Special Attraction which has been announced as "The Primrose Path."

The Marie Walcamp serial which is being made in Japan called "The Petals of Lao Tze," it has been decided to release this chaptered romance as "The Dragon's Net."

Tsuru Aoki's production, the story of which was called "Sayonara," has been given a new title of "A Tokio Siren."

Ralph Hill with Rolfe.

Ralph Hill, formerly art editor of Boy's Life Magazine, and for three and a half years the head of Metro's art title department, is now making the art titles for the B. A. Rolfe productions.

"Soldiers of Fortune" To Be Shown In All of Saenger Circuit Theatres

THIRTY-ONE Southern picture houses will show "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production, following the contract just signed with the Saenger Amusement Company by General Sales Manager J. C. Ragland, of Realart Pictures Corporation. The Saenger circuit has also contracted for "Erstwhile Susan" and "The Fear Market."

This is the biggest tie-up announced in several weeks by Realart, and follows a long series of box-office successes which "Soldiers of Fortune" has achieved in many sections of the country. The Saenger contract follows the announcement that this Mayflower photoplay will have a second showing on Broadway at the B. S. Moss Theatre following its run at the Capitol Theatre. As its very first contribution to the motion picture industry, "Soldiers of Fortunes" is being praised as a production which combines unusual drawing power and rare artistic merit.

This picturization of Richard Harding Davis' famous novel will begin an indefinite engagement at the Strand Theatre, in New Orleans, on January 24, following which the film will be displayed throughout the chain of thirty-one houses in the order of their importance.

Two More to Follow.

"Erstwhile Susan," which has been making a reputation throughout the Middle West, is scheduled for the Saenger circuit in early February. At the same time "The Fear Market," which is rapidly nearing completion, will be shown over the same territory.

Following an indefinite engagement at the New Orleans Strand, "Soldiers of Fortune" will be shown in the following houses in Louisiana: Majestic Theatre, at Shreveport; Lyceum at Monroe; Saenger at Alexandria; Arcade at Lake Charles; Louisiana-Columbia at Baton Rouge; Wilbert at Planquenime; Elks at New Iberia; Grand at Donaldsville; Amusement at Natchitoches; Jefferson at Lafayette; Grand at Thibedeaux; Evangeline at Morgan City; Princess at Jennings, and in houses at Ruston, Franklin and New Roads.

"Soldiers of Fortune" will also be shown in many Mississippi theatres. Scores of other contracts are announced.

Quitting Society Roles, H. B. Warner Turns Adventurer in His Latest Film

AFTER breaking many picture records in his last starring vehicle, "A Fugitive from Matrimony," H. B. Warner steps from high society roles into the shoes of an adventurer in his current Robertson-Cole Superior Picture, "Haunting Shadows," directed by Henry King and produced by Jesse D. Hampton. So wide is the gap bridged by Mr. Warner in his latest role that Mr. Hampton declares it will be many a day before another star will equal the record established by Mr. Warner in the past two months.

From the time motion picture critics saw "A Fugitive from Matrimony" and after it was actually released, the picture has enjoyed greater success than even anticipated by either the producer or by officials of Robertson-Cole. Reports sent to the New York office by exhibitors who have played the last Warner starring vehicle, declare that it is a sure-fire winner and a S. R. O. producer.

Jumped Its Schedule.

So great has been the demand for pictures in which the versatile Warner is seen that Robertson-Cole is jumping its schedule to give exhibitors just what its patrons wish. A nation-wide advertising and publicity campaign will be waged in favor of the next Warner feature, in addition to a twenty-page illustrated campaign advertising and publicity booklet.

Blackest mystery unbroken until the last scene of the picture makes "Haunting Shadows" one of the best melodramatic screen stories of the day in which action is the byword. This superior screen offering is based upon the well-known seller, "The House of a Thousand Candles," penned by Meredith Nicholson.

Producer Hampton and Director King have surrounded Mr. Warner with a notable cast, including Charles Mailes, Edward Peil, Frank Lanning, Florence Oberle, Harry Kendall, Marguerite Livingston, Martin Devereux, Patrica Fox and Charles French.

There are many kinds of exploitation and advertising possibilities in this next Warner picture that should make it a money-getter and a rapid seller.

Exclusive Rights for "U-35" Secured by Price

C. B. PRICE COMPANY, INC., has taken over the exclusive rights to the "U-35," the exploits of a German submarine, by permission of the British Admiralty. It is the photographic records taken on board "U-35, and was made for the exclusive use and entertainment of the kaiser and shows the means he employed to keep himself posted on his pet methods of warfare. It reveals an amazing story and is a pictorial realization of the doings on board a German submarine during the World War. The picture is most absorbing in its narrative and is of extreme educational value.

The W. H. Productions had advertised the distribution of "U-35," but this is explained in the advertisements of C. B. Price Company appearing in this week's trade papers. C. A. Mead, the C. B. Price representative, has just returned from Washington, D. C., where he showed the picture to Commander Foote of the United States Navy, aide to Secretary Lane, and from whom he received his hearty indorsement.

A special showing, by request, was given last Saturday evening, December 20, at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, meeting with instant approval and unstinted commendation. The Capitol, Rialto and Rivoli theatres have made offers for an early Broadway presentation.

Popular Actors in "Big U" Industrials.

With the announcement that exhibitors will receive a fixed sum for the exhibition of each Universal industrial and educational picture, formerly issued to them free of charge, comes word from the Universal Studios at Fort Lee, New Jersey, and Universal City, that only actors and actresses of the first rank, known the country over for their screen drawing powers, will have the lead parts in such Universal pictures.

Michelena Picture in First Run Houses.

Beatriz Michelena, whose latest success, "The Heart of Juanita," released by Robertson-Cole, has added extra laurels to her stardom by the manner in which exhibitors are playing "The Heart of Juanita." This production of outdoor life was made by Beatriz Michelena's own company and was directed by George E. Middleton.

Beatriz Micheleana is supported by Albert Morrison, Andrew Robson, Clarence Arper, Irene Outtrim and William Pike.

Reports received by Robertson-Cole show that first run theatres have taken kindly to reproduction. Contracts have already been received for second runs on this play.

Vola Vale to Play Opposite Lytell.

A matinee girl who in her high school days attended a theatre in Rochester, N. Y., three times in one week to see Bert Lytell play "Alias Jimmy Valentine" has just been engaged as her idol's leading woman in the Metro Screen Classic production of the Paul Armstrong "crook" clasic. The girl is Vola Vale. The picture will be directed by Arthur D. Ripley.

Movies and Life

(From Cincinnati Post, Dec. 7.)

Some folk complain that the movies give exaggerated ideas about some things—the wild, tempestuous life of the cowboy, for instance, or the wiles of the virulent vampire. Perhaps they do. But, all these things aside, the movies have done and are doing immensely more good than they are doing harm.

The movies, we find, do their most good among families. Husbands who never used to take their wives anywhere in the days before screen entertainment now take friend wife regularly once a week or more to the neighborhood playhouse.

Parents who formerly had very little in common with their children now enjoy the pictures as much as their youngsters and frequently take the children to the theatre with them. Grandmothers, who used to think their days were past, vie with their grandchildren in their admiration for the leading stars.

Never has there been anything which gave families such wholesome, pleasant entertainment and which has brought families such a delightful common interest. And if that isn't having a mighty beneficent influence upon American life, what is?

Geoffrey Nye Represents Goldwyn in the Far East

GEOFFREY NYE, long associated with important motion picture enterprises in Australia and New Zealand, and recognized as one of the most successful of film men in exploiting motion pictures in far eastern countries, has been appointed Goldwyn representative in the Far East. Mr. Nye has left New York for San Francisco and on December 27 sailed for Shanghai, where he will begin a campaign of promotion and exploitation to cover at least nine months, during which he will visit China, the Philippines, Strait Settlements, Dutch East Indies, India and Australia.

Not long ago, Mr. Nye made a trip around the world handling a number of large productions. He circled the globe in exactly six months and one day and returned to New York enthusiastic about the possibilities for increasing the distribution of American products in the Far East. In China and Japan, acording to Mr. Nye, about 75 per cent of the pictures shown are made in America, while in India the percentage of American film is about sixty.

For his coming tour on benalf of Goldwyn, Mr. Nye is taking ten subjects, including the best productions of all of the Goldwyn stars. He believes that there will be an especially big demand for the Geraldine Farrar, Mabel Normand and Rex Beach pictures, and that as the Oriental countries become more familiar with American customs the popularity of comedies and dramas based on typically western themes will increase. The Goldwyn representative is taking a complete line of exploitation material for the productions he is promoting and plans a more energetic and up-to-date advertising campaign than has been customary in handling pictures in the Far East.

No two men advertise alike. If they did, there would be little pull in advertising. But the man who does the best work is usually he who makes the most radical departure from the average.

Boston Club Women Postpone Action After Jenkins Denounces Censorship

Success, "Polly With a Past"

DON'T throttle the movies," declared Henry Jenkins, assistant superintendent of the public schools of New York and a member of the National Board of Review, speaking on the proposed picture censorship bill in Massachusetts before the Boston City Federation of Women's Clubs. The federation voted to postpone any definite action in the matter until the next conference.

Forbidding Theda Bara from displaying over one-half of one per cent. of her silk stockings and eliminating kissing in the pictures were heatedly discussed.

Replying to a speaker who urged state supervision of moving pictures to protect young people from immoral, highly suggestive scenes and distorted views of family life, Mr. Jenkins denounced as un-American and undemocratic the principle of submitting the will of the majority to the prejudices of a few in respect to moving pictures.

Praises Board of Review.

"Don't throttle the movies," he declared. "It is better that reform should come from a voluntary, self-appointed board like the National Board of Review than that it should be autocratically forced upon the people by police regulation. There has been a great improvement in the quality of moving pictures in the past years and there are great possibilities ahead of it as an educational and social factor in our national life. But it is ridiculous to expect that an arbitrary censor can accomplish this.

Know Life As It Is.

"To know life as it really exists, to see great artists and interpreters of human passions, to stimulate the imagination and interest of the public, is far better than to protect them from that knowledge by a prejudiced state committee. Social reformers are inclined to think that they, in their position of intelligence and intellectual superiority, may know what is best for the public.

"Trust the public—the will of the majority—in moral as well as in political issues. There is no universally accepted moral standard; what is right to one is wrong to another; what helps one may hinder another. Keep away from the pictures if you do not approve of them, but do not enforce your own convictions on others through legislation for an autocratic control of the films."

Herbert K. Somborn Sends Glowing Report of "The Forbidden Woman"

HERBERT K. SOMBORN, president of Equity Pictures Corporation, following up Equity's announced policy of the highest standard of production releases from every angle, is in Los Angeles at the Garson Studios, Inc., watching the progress of Clara Kimball Young's second Equity production "The Forbidden Woman," by Lenore J. Coffee, a former Los Angeles newspaper woman.

Mr. Somborn is highly enthusiastic in his praise of results obtained by Producer Harry Garson and his technical staff. In a letter received at the Equity offices, Aeolian Hall, New York, Mr. Somborn states: "I consider that in scenic equipment, costuming, cast, and in all that goes to make a great screen production, as well as its wonderful story, 'The Forbidden Woman' will be the banner attraction of the new year.

Sets An Outstanding Feature.

"In 'The Forbidden Woman' one of the most striking features are the sets. One of these sets shows the living room of the American, Malcolm Kent, who is the leading male role, portrayed by Conway Tearle. It is a wonderful room, half library and half living room, decorated with his trophies as a big game hunter and mementos of his many athletic successes. One end of this great apartment is occupied by a practical cobble stone fireplace, while the entire room including every foot of the wall space and ceiling is paneled with the beautiful Circassian walnut. The technical department estimated the value of the wood alone used in this set at nearly three thousand dollars."

Mr. Somborn also comments on the perfection of details, one of which is the practical hardwood floor. Up to this time hardwood floors have always been represented in motion picture productions by a paper finish over cardboard.

Many Sales Are Made on "My Husband's Other Wife"

"MY HUSBAND'S OTHER WIFE," third of the series of J. Stuart Blackton's features distributed by Pathe, is promised a popular reception from exhibitors judging from the unusual number of advance bookings on the picture, which is scheduled for release January 4.

Dealing with a topic of universal interest, "My Husband's Other Wife" is booking equally well in all sections of the country. In New York, Marcus Loew will stage this drama of the modern stage in his principal metropolitan theatres, while William Fox has also listed the attraction among his early 1920 screen headliners.

The entire New York circuit of the M. & S. Hopkinson Company will play the picture, the theatres listed being the Odeon, New Law, Palace and the M. & S. Delancy

Loew's Garrick in St. Louis has billed the Blackton offering, which succeeds "The Moonshine Trail" and "Dawn" among the Blackton-Pathe features, for its big January attraction. Other first run houses which thus far have booked "My Husband's Other Wife," are: Princess, San Antonio; Regent, New Castle, Pa.; American, Pottsville; Palace, New Orleans; Jewel, Beaumont; Cozy, Topeka; Rex, Ottumwa.

Thirty-two Paramount Theatres Planned for Canada Before 1921

DURING a recent visit in Ottawa, N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, managing director of Paramount Theatres, Ltd, Regal Films, Ltd., and subsidiary companies, announced that interests which he represents would have thirty-two substantial moving picture theatres in operation throughout Canada before the end of 1921.

The Paramount Theatres Company had abandoned the idea of acquiring smaller theatres and would add to its already formidable list of large houses in the Dominion. The company had undertaken to build a considerable number of new theatres, but little of the money required was being secured in outside circles. The Paramount Theatre interests were doing their own financing and there was no issue of stock to the general public.

Mr. Nathanson announced that his company was building elaborate theatres at Toronto, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Vancouver and other cities. He intimated that the company had under consideration a plan to build a large theatre at Montreal where the company already controls the huge and handsome St. Denis Theatre, one of the very largest combination theatres in the country.

Robson Succeeds Elliott.

Director Nathanson has recently made several trips to the Canadian West to arrange various details in connection with the construction of the theatres in Winnipeg and Vaucouver. At Winnipeg, the city council recently granted the company permission to build a large theatre with a lobby twenty-two feet wide and 300 feet long.

While in Ottawa Mr. Nathanson conferred with Manager Harry Pomeroy, of the Strand Theatre, which is one of the units of the Paramount string, regarding operation details. It is the intention to add to the seating capacity of the Ottawa Strand because of the increased patronage.

Announcement has been made that Clarence Robson, manager of the Strand Theatre, Toronto, would succeed Will M. Elliott as manager of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, and that Mr. Robson will direct the destinies of both the Regent and Strand. Mr. Elliott left Toronto on December 15 to become manager of the new Allen Theatre at Winnipeg. Incidentally, the opening of the new Allen house at Winnipeg was postponed from Christmas to New Year's Day because of labor delays.

Paramount Rivals Allen Interests.

The Paramount Theatres company is rapidly reaching the point wnere it rivals the famous Allen Theatre chain in Canada. Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen announced several weeks ago that they have fifty-five moving picture theatres in operation, in construction or in project. The various Allen theatre companies have offered blocks of stock to the public whereas the Nathanson group has organized practically closed corporations. It is the intention to present Pantages vaudeville in addition to pictures at a number of the large theatres which are being built for Paramount Theatres.

Quaint Cottage Setting in Metro Play.

A quaint, old-fashioned cottage near the Orange County Farm at Downey, Cal., has for the last few days been the setting for scenes of "Old Lady 31," the stage play which Metro is producing.

The scenes show Angie, played by Emma Dunn, and her venerable husband (Henry Harmon) as they leave the dwelling that has housed them for many happy years, and trudge away to the Old Ladies' Home, where they expect to part forever.

"I Know the Egg Is Concealed Here!"
A perfectly fictitious remark made here in a serious moment from Realart's "Soldiers of Fortune."

Larson Gets "Lightning Bryce."

T. E. Larson, of the T. E. Larson Attractions Company, Tulsa, Okla., has bought "Lightning Bryce" for the Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas territory and will release this serial at once.

T. E. Larson's Attractions Company has been very successful in the Oklahoma and Arkansas territory. Mr. Larson is a young man, full of energy. Exhibitors have confidence in him and the firm he represents and the business is growing rapidly.

Brady and Warwick Features Are Reissued by World Film

TAKING a leaf out of the book of theatrical managers who oftimes find it profitable to play a return date with their attractions, the World Film Corporation has reissued the most prominent of the successes achieved by Alice Brady and Robert Warwick while with World Pictures.

New prints have been made and new advertising material provided so that the exhibitors who book these features will have all the advantages that go with the latest productions. The Alice Brady features ready and now being booked are "The Trap," "Woman Alone" and "Maternity." Among the Robert Warwick features is the picturization of "The Man of the Hour," which was one of the biggest dramatic successes produced in a decade. The profits of this play during its run, covering many years, approached the million-dollar mark. As a picture it was one of the biggest box-office hits of its time. Other Warwick features included in this list are "Stolen Voice" and "Friday, the 13th."

The distribution for the City of New York and New York State and northern New Jersey is being handled by the Masterpiece Film Distributing Company, of 1230 West Forty-sixth street, New York. E. D. Burge, the president and general manager of the company, reports that although exhibitors have had only a week's notice of these reissues, their interest is so great that the average daily business being done exceeds $1,500.

Among the important theatres that have so far contracted for the reissue of the Alice Brady and Robert Warwick features made by the World Film Corporation are the Fox Circuit, Sydney Cohn theatres, Joseph Stern's six theatres in New Jersey, the Balladino Circuit, New York, and the Brandt houses in Brooklyn, which include the Marcy Theatre and the Classique. Other Brooklyn houses that will run these features are the Regent and Crystal Palace.

Selznick Buys Magazine Story.

In his search for screen material for the Selznick stars, Myron Selznick reads many hundreds of stories, but only once in a while does he come across one over which he enthuses on first sight.

Such a story was found recently by Mr. Selznick in Smith's Magazine in which appeared "The Alibi." He was so impressed with the quality of the story that he showed it to Eugene Walter, one of America's leading playwrights.

The story was bought and Mr. Walter at once started at work turning it into screen form.

Pathe Review Shows Reptile Captured.

In Pathé Review No. 32, released January 4, is shown in a most entertaining fashion, "Getting a Line on Mr. Alexander Alligator," which suggests somewhat the angling of a fisherman, the fish in this instance being the wily alligator. Dr. Ditmars shows how the scaly reptile is captured and brought from his happy home in the Florida Everglades to his present artificial mud-hole in the New York Zoological Park.

To Publish Press Book on All Special Pictures

THE twenty-page illustrated press advertising and campaign book which was distributed by Robertson-Cole with the release of "The Tong Man," the latest Sessue Hayakawa production, met with such a decided success that hereafter Robertson-Cole will publish a similar booklet on all superior pictures and a book of even more detail and elaborateness for all special productions.

The front cover of the latest addition to the campaign and exploitation possibilities of all Robertson-Cole productions will be a design of one of the high spots in the production. This cover is so designed that it can be used for a cut-out lobby display.

Page two will be devoted to the musical settings. The fictionization of the story in such form so that the exhibitor at a glance will realize just what the picture is, will be on page three. The synopsis is so written so that it may be cut for program purposes.

On page four there will be a variety of stories of the productions and the players who have the principal parts, including a thumb-nail cut of the star. The following page is similarly filled, as an additional suggestion carries catch lines for advertising features.

Advertising aids, including the description of all advertising accessories, are printed on page six. General press notices, reviews of the production, opening day notices and advance stories of the feature are to be featured on the succeeding pages.

The remaining pages are taken up with exploitation possibilities and hints for the exhibitor. These pages are illustrated.

The back cover is taken up with a reproduction of the twenty-four sheet, together with a list of other feature releases starring the same player who is seen in the production by the book.

Aero Squadron at Pathe's Disposal.

An entire aero squadron, composed of some of the fleetest and biggest machines in the United States, was placed by General Menoker, commander of the U. S. Air Service, at the disposal of the Pathé News for the photographing of some of the most remarkable scenes ever taken in the air. The Pathé News has already issued two of the series of pictures taken at Bolling Field in the course of five days of air exploits there, in which some of the United States army's most noted flyers participated.

Within the next couple of weeks, the third of the series will appear in the Pathé News.

All Rochester Turned Out to See "Better Films" and Saw Nothing New

WHEN a Better Films Committee announces to the public that it is about to show "Better Films," it is to be expected that the public will come to look upon the motion picture theatre with a sense of suspicion. That has been the situation in Rochester. The exhibitor said nothing, because there was nothing for him to say. If he said that his films were of the better kind it would not ring true, because if such was the case why the need of an alleged public spirited body to agitate for "Better Films." So the Rochester exhibitor sighed and waited.

Then came the day of the committee's first exhibition. True, the show was fair, but the people knew right off the reel that "Better Films" was the kind that they had been accustomed to all along. "Better Films," so labeled, are the common, ordinary, garden variety of films which are shown every day of the week in all of the theatres of Rochester and presumably throughout the rest of the country.

Promises A-Plenty.

The Better Films Committee had announced that it would exhibit model programs that would contain the highest quality of entertainment which might be found. It was said that the committee in its superior knowledge of the subject was able to properly select amusement for father and mother, the girl in her 'teens and little Willy of the kindergarten class; in fact this committee would establish new standards of the acme of motion picture entertainment.

Speaking of the work of the committee one exhibitor has this to say: "The members of the committee are a very estimable group of people. The chairman is the rabbi of a synagogue and there are ministers and other nice folks on the committee. But none of them have ever run a theatre. Neither have they worked in a theatre. Therefore it should be conceded that they know nothing of the theatre business. But they have theories about how the motion picture theatre ought to be conducted.

The Exhibitor Is Practical.

"As model programs, their exhibitions only serve to prove that the exhibitor, older and wiser in the game, knows more about better films than any member of the committee. Moreover, the exhibitor is practical; his theories must be carefully tried out before they are hurled at the audience, otherwise they may disturb the line at the box office. There are no salacious, lewd or indecent pictures shown here. The censor would not permit them and the public would not stand for such films.

"It seems to me that a Better Film Committee should be composed of exhibitors, producers and trade paper editors, men who are, as a part of their every day life and a means of earning their daily bread, vitally and sincerely interested in improving the standards of the screen. The members of our Better Films Committee, with all due respect to them, would do more service to the community by confining their efforts to subjects with which they are familiar."

May Allison on Vacation.

May Allison is enjoying a short rest after having completed her Metro-Screen Classic version of "The Walk-Offs." This satire from the pens of Frederic and Fanny Hatton was eleven weeks in filming.

In the supporting cast are Emory Johnson, Darrell Foss, Joseph Kilgour, Kathleen Karrigan, Claire Du Brey, Yvonne Pavis, Effie Conley and Richard Morris. Herbert Blache directed.

Telautograph Is Seen in Novel Louise Glaum Film

PROMINENT among the many novel situations and photographic achievements that stamp J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, new Louise Glaum production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," as distinctly different from the usual run of photodramas, is the use of a telautograph, an instrument for the reproduction of messages by telegraph, employed heretofore only in railway stations and banks.

The telautograph plays an important part in the Louis Joseph Vance story and the novelist worked for several days with the producer to make perfect its operation in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," a W. W. Hodkinson release, combining the characters of "The Lone Wolf" and "False Faces." Mr. Vance also lent a helping hand in perfecting the code used on the contrivance in Chinese script, two telautographs being employed in the luxurious home of the leader of a desperate band of London criminals and in a Limehouse den where the plunderers hold council.

The use of the instruments permits the underworld band to continue its daily killings and robberies with impunity. It remains for Louise Glaum as Sonia to succeed where the sleuths have failed. Held captive by a bandit, Sonia's curiosity is aroused by his frequent maneuverings at a secret cabinet. She discovers the "open sesame" to the cabinet and pulls a sheet of paper from the instrument hidden there. A Chinese maid deciphers the message and Sonia turns it over to the sleuths, who rounds up the bandits after a thrilling gun fight.

L'Estrange Transferred to Fort Lee.

Dick L'Estrange, one of the best known figures in the picture studios of this country, has been transferred from the Selznick Bronx studio to the Selznick studio at Fort Lee. He is the casting director who came from the West Coast last August to join the Selznick forces in the East.

Robertson-Cole Cleans Up As Utica Lifts Ban on Sunday Picture Shows

UTICA, N. Y., throughout the main downtown section, was a unit in the showing of Robertson-Cole pictures on a recent Sunday when the ban on Sunday pictures was lifted, due to the foresight and enterprise of C. A. Saunders, a salesman with headquarters in the Roberston-Cole Albany, N. Y., exchange.

Saunders had gone around with his ear to the ground and had learned that the question of lifting the Sunday ban on motion pictures was to come up at a meeting of the city council and furthermore that the city fathers were to act favorably. He knew all the theatre managers were to be there, waiting for the verdict. His "dope" went over as he had planned. A moment after the decision Saunders button-holed one after another of the local managers and signed them up for Robertson-Cole pictures for the opening day. As the time was short and the offerings very alluring, each of the managers of the four main houses in Utica signed up for a picture.

A Unit for Robertson-Cole.

So the picture fans who turned out in large numbers on that first Sunday found the whole town—so far as its leading houses were concerned—to be a unit for Roberston-Cole. The Colonial Theatre played Sessue Hayakawa in "The Gray Horizon," the Majestic Theatre played "Poor Relations," the De Luxe Theatre, "Better Times" and the Alhambra Theatre, "The Other Half." All these last three pictures star ZaSu Pitts, the little serio-comic star, who is being managed by Robertson-Cole, and who shortly is to be seen in "Seeing It Through," a new Brentwood picture.

In another quarter, Robertson-Cole recently scored a strong hit. This was at the opening of the New Palace Theatre, Cincinnati. "A Fugitive From Matrimony," with H. B. Warner as star, was booked and a capacity crowd was highly pleased.

Greyhull Venison Appeals to "Flying A" Lieutenant

C. A. STIMSON, general sales manager of the American Film Company, who is engineering a unique booking campaign on the "Flying A Specials," was brought to a halt in the midst of strenuous business by a demand from E. P. Briggs, a company representative, that Greyhull, Wyo., be marked for the next sales conference.

Greyhull looked good to Briggs. Enclosing a photo of a gay exhibitors' banquet at the "swell" hotel of the town, he gives the strong points in favor of his choice: "Greyhull is one of the wild and woolly towns in Wyoming with the real western atmosphere, where the boys wear high-heeled boots and broad-brimmed hats. Crap games are numerous with these native 'Six-Feet Fours.' The food is great and we have plenty of elk and venison."

No doubt Greyhull did look good to Briggs. He had not forgotten Moorcroft, from which burg he wrote: "This is the first town where I have missed getting a contract since I left the office over a week ago." There was good reason why: "The exhibitor there had dismantled his theatre and turned it into a feed store."

Morey Recovering from Cold.

Harry T. Morey caught a severe cold in his right eye while taking scenes for "Detective Jim" at a lime kiln near Philadelphia a week ago and it developed into a bad case of conjunctivitis. The attack has been so severe that Mr. Morey has had to abandon work on the feature for the present.

Harold Titus, Fox Author, Began Writing Sioux Tales

HAD it not been for a physical breakdown due to overwork in college, Harold Titus probably would not have developed into one of the best writers of western stories today. The screen rights for two of his stories have been purchased by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation. One of them is "The Last Straw," in which Buck Jones, a new senation of the screen, will appear as star, and the other is "Shod With Fire," adapted from "Bruce of Circle A" with William Russell as star.

Mr. Titus was born in Traverse City, Mich. Of his early life he recently wrote the following, which gives a good insight into his eternal sense of humor:

"I began my literary career in Traverse City at the age of 7 years with a series of novels dealing with the subjugation of the Sioux. These novels were regular, with chapters and everything, and when they came back from the editor of a Sunday school paper I grew bitter and cynical."

His ambition to be a "literary chap" never left him. At the age of 15 he became proof-reader for a local afternoon paper. He attended the University of Michigan and then prospected, explored and wrote fiction.

"My job, of course, is manufacturing fiction," he says, "but I have various duties. From the first day of May until September I have to fish for trout. From the middle of September until the freeze-up the ducks compel a major share of my attention. Then there are iceboats and fishing shanties and other essential occupations. Also, I'm part owner of a fruit farm. Occasionally there is a war which I attend."

Rivoli Rebooks Prizma Film.

As another indication of the way Prizma Pictures are taking hold of exhibitors throughout the country, the management of the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, is playing a return engagement of "Memories" during Christmas week. The Euclid, of Cleveland, has also booked "Gowns Venus Would Envy" for three solid weeks.

Prizma Master Pictures in colors are being distributed by the Republic Distributing Corporation, and the single reels mentioned are only a part of the regular program, which is finding such favor with wide-awake managers that the for bookings demand is increasing daily.

Pathe Posters Tell a Story.

That the Pathé Exchange intends to maintain the high standard in products from its art department is manifest in the 24-sheet for the Jesse D. Hampton production, "The Prince and Betty," starring William Desmond and Mary Thurman. The poster is not only an attractive advertisement but has all the beauty and coloring of a painting.

Pathé does not believe in the old style circus "scare heads" but endeavors to put out a real work of art which will not only be pleasing to the eye in matter of taste of coloring but will also tell a story and impress upon the beholder the theme, or nature of the production.

Every Picture a Special Is the Goldwyn Policy

RECOGNIZING that every picture must stand on its own merits, no matter what the prestige of the company distributing it, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has determined to make each release of the coming year a genuine special. This means, according to a Goldwyn statement, that everyone connected with the producing force, from the director to the player in the least conspicuous role, will be impressed with the necessity of turning out pictures of the highest quality and not the product of a machine-like system.

The lesson of the past year, as interpreted by Goldwyn officials, is that the greatest photoplays have been the result of individual effort unchecked by time restrictions and the limitations necessarily imposed on a director who is working to keep pace with a rigid release schedule. Step by step, the organization built by Goldwyn has been developed in a way to make possible the dream of a producer who has perfect motion pictures as his aim and knows that they cannot result from factory methods.

Goldwyn's spectacles of recent months, Geraldine Farrar in "The World and Its Woman" and "Flame of the Desert," were placed unreservedly in the hands of Reginald Parker, who worked in his own manner, with the resources of the Culver City studios at his disposal. Other productions, even when they did not require scenes of such magnificence and hundreds of extras, have been treated with the same care.

With the added facilities consequent upon the establishment of a producing force in the East it has become possible for Goldwyn to handle more pictures than ever without the studio space being crowded, but the production schedule will not be increased. The producing policy is to treat each picture as though it were the only one being made by the organization.

Anita Stewart Latest Is Not a Sex Play.

"The Sins of the Mothers," the Anita Stewart feature, which will be released by Vitagraph before the close of the year, has not the remotest relation to sex plays. Even the inevitable sex triangle is absent. It deals rather with the evils and dangers of gambling in all its forms, and seeks to show that the passion for this form of mental excitement may, and does frequently come from pre-natal influence—that it is more or less hereditary. This gives rise to the title. Ralph Ince directed the picture.

Joe Ryan and Jean Paige Will Be Co-Starred in New Vitagraph Serial

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, has returned from a visit to the West Coast studio at Hollywood, with the interesting announcement that Joe Ryan and Jean Paige will be co-starred in the next Vitagraph serial, following Antonio Moreno's serial, "The Invisible Hand," which is nearing release date. Joe Ryan, has appeared in a number of Vitagraph serials, and Miss Paige has been leading woman in big feature productions at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio.

The new serial, with the Joe Ryan—Jean Paige has been leading woman in big feature productions at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio.

The new serial, with the Joe Ryan-Jean Paige combination starring, will be made under the tentative title of "Moods of Evil." It was written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. The scenario was made by Graham Baker.

Joe Ryan will have an entirely new type of role in the new serial—a dual personality role. One characterization gives him the opporutnity to appear as a "bad man," a part so closely associated with his previous screen activities, and the other part will be a most sympathetic straight part. Both parts, it is said, will afford him an opportunity to do much of his Cossack-like riding.

Jean Paige is exceptionally well qualified for serial work. She will be seen as Madeline Stanton, the only child of a wealthy father, who becomes mixed up in the machinations of the band which Joe Ryan—in his "bad man" characterization—is the head. Miss Page's entire career before the camera has been spent with Vitagraph.

The launching of a new serial with new stars and a complete new organization, including directors, cameramen and supporting company, is further evidence of Mr. Smith's faith in the popular liking for this particular form of entertainment. He has always been a firm believer in the serial.

Making Scenes on Shipboard.

Some of the most striking scenes in the new Gibraltar pictures melodrama, "Cynthia of the Minute," starring Leah Baird, are being filmed on board the interned German liner Kron Prinz Frederic Wilhelm, which was placed with the Prinz Eitel Frederick, renamed the De Kalb, and the Grosser Kurferst, in American hands for troop repatriation after the armistice was signed between Germany and the Allies.

Leah Baird and her company of players have been practically living aboard the big liner for a week past, and several of the principal cabins as well as part of the saloon deck have been fitted with a lighting system for the uses of the company.

Vitagraph to Produce "Who's Who?"

Vitagraph is about to begin the production of "Who's Who?" a screen version of the farce by the late Richard Harding Davis, in which William Collier starred in New York during the seasons of 1913-14 and later toured throughout the country. The play was not an adaptation from one of Mr. Davis' numerable novels, but was writen especially for the stage. It met with instant success and following closely on Mr. Collier's appearance in "On the Quiet" and "Caught in the Rain," did much to stamp him as one of the leading comedians in the country. The star and cast for "Who's Who?" have not yet been announced.

Select Title for Next Thomas Film.

"Footlights and Shadows" is the new title selected for the fifth Olive Thomas production for Selznick. This title is more descriptive and appropriate than the original one which was "Out of the Night." The new title is also expected to have a greater box-office drawing power.

Famous Players Names Its First British Production

THE first production of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., will be Marie Corelli's "The Sorrow of Satan," and it will be directed by Hugh Ford. This dual announcement was made recently at the office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, where it was also stated that Mr. Ford would leave for London some time next month, starting work about the first of February.

The production will be filmed at the new London studio of the British company with the exception of certain scenes which will be made in the South of France. No announcement of the players who will be seen in the production is made further than that the entire cast will be English. No expense will be spared to make it an epoch-making production in the annals of British pictures.

Metro Signs Ina Claire and Secures Film Rights to Her Recent Success

INA CLAIRE has affixed her signature to a contract whereby she will be starred by Metro Pictures Corporation in an elaborate screen version of her comedy stage success, "Polly With a Past," by Guy Bolton and George Middleton.

In acquiring this young Belasco stage star for the screen, and in securing at the same time the picture rights to "Polly With a Past," Metro officials feel that they have scored another coup as important as Metro's recent purchase of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" for the silver sheet.

As is well known, Ina Claire just now is scoring the success of her career in "The Gold Diggers," at the Lyceum Theatre, New York. The David Belasco production of Avery Hopwood's satirical comedy is playing to the S. R. O. sign.

Gets Right to Stage Play.

Miss Claire's prestige in the dramatic world, her youth, beauty and captivating personality, have combined to make her a star much sought after by picture producers, but she had turned a deaf ear to all offers until Metro came to her with the announcement that it had purchased the screen rights to "Polly With a Past."

Negotiations for Miss Claire's services were concluded by Metro officials with Arthur Butler Graham, a well-known attorney, acting in behalf of the young star. After the contracts had been signed Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc., said:

"The acquisition by Metro of this gifted young actress as a star, and of 'Polly With a Past' as the vehicle for displaying her talents, is, we believe, another evidence of the desire on Metro's part to give the exhibitor only the best.

"We are certain that Ina Claire will prove a box-office magnet of the greatest potency. She has not only a very large following in this country, but her admirers abroad are legion after her conquest of London that made her the idol of the British metropolis. The success of 'Polly With a Past' is too fresh in the public mind to call for comment. This new star and the vehicle obtained for her are worthy of their high place beside Metro's other stars and the big plays and celebrated novels in which they are presented."

Miss Claire Will Work in East.

Metro's announcement of its new star and the play in which she will be seen on the silver sheet also makes it known that Miss Claire will do her studio work in the East instead of the West.

As recently stated, Metro will resume Eastern production in the early spring at its studios in West Sixty-first street, off Columbus Circle, maintaining production on both coasts simultaneously, with Director General Karger dividing his time between New York and Los Angeles. "Polly With a Past," with Miss Claire as the star, will be one of the first productions to be made in New York.

"Polly With a Past" had its stage premiere at the Belasco Theatre, September 6, 1917, and ran for forty weeks to record-breaking box-office receipts. Its phenomenal success was repeated on the road, where it played continuously for more than a year, bringing its total run to something like two years of uninterrupted performance.

New Blackton Production Heads Pathe New Year's List

PATHE will inaugurate the New Year with a J. Stuart Blackton feature, "My Husband's Other Wife," which will be the headliner among the releases for January 4. Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are co-starred but receive valuable support from Warren Chandler and May McAvoy.

"My Husband's Other Wife" is third of the series of Blackton productions distributed by Pathe, its predecessors being "The Moonshine Trail" and "Dawn," the latter adapted from a novel by Eleanor H. Porter, author of "Pollyanna." Stanley Olmsted is author of the latest Blackton attraction. The production is in six reels.

Sylvia Breamer portrays the character of Adelaide Hedlar, a famous actress, and in the part wears some of the most gorgeous gowns ever seen in any motion picture. Robert Gordon is cast as a successful playwright, who, after writing several triumphs for Adelaide, becomes deeply enamoured of her. Warren Chandler, leading man in many big productions, defines the character of a prominent surgeon, the husband of Adelaide Hedlar upon whose fame he is accused of trading. May McAvoy, a sweet, capable young girl, numbered among Mr. Blackton's many finds, gives a finished and appealing portrayal of "the other wife."

Corinne Griffith
Attractive personality in Vitagraph features, "The Climbers" and "The Tower of Jewels."

Trimble to Direct Zeena Keefe.

One of the most capable and experienced directors of photoplays, Larry Trimble, has been selected by Myron Selznick to direct the screen version of the Sophie Irene Loeb drama, "The Woman God Sent." Mr. Trimble made the screen adaptation of the story also.

Zeena Keefe is to be featured and with this capable actress and competent director this production should prove one of the screen triumphs of the year.

"The Sagebrusher" Is a Drama of Love and Faith

THERE are these elements in Emerson Hough's "The Sagebrusher," Benjamin B. Hampton's newest Great Authors' production for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, that will make audiences gulp and swallow their adams-apples violently and rub the corners of their eyes unashamed. "The Sagebrusher" is that kind of a picture—packed tight with heart and emotion; deeply embedded with love interest and telling a story of sublime faith.

"The Sagebrusher" which has just reached the East from the Hampton California studios, reveals the big value that accrues to Mr. Hampton in production by having the personal assistance of the authors of the stories he produces.

Roy Stewart, Marguerite De La Motte and Noah Beery, in particular, gain increased popularity in the land of the screen by the portrayal of their roles. Oddly enough with a title so clearly intimating a western environment for the story, the picture is not a western production.

"The Sagebrusher" is the first of Mr. Hough's work to be seen in a motion picture.

Arrangements have been made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for three prerelease presentations of the production, the second week in January in Chicago, in Colorado and on the Pacific Coast. General release of this subject to the first run theatres of the larger cities will be made a week or two later.

McDonald Becomes Head of Fox's Denver Theatres

HARRY McDONALD, successor to Edward L. Hyman, as general manager of the William Fox theatres in Denver, was tendered a rousing reception and banquet in the Adams Hotel there by Denver exchange managers and exhibitors. Ben S. Cohen, manager of the Select exchange, engineered the affair. Cohen and McDonald have been warm friends back east.

After a vicious attack on a ton or more of the most appetizing dishes in creation, a number of addresses were delivered, McDonald being heartily welcomed to the city. In his address McDonald briefly outlined the future plans of the Fox interests in Denver. He added that all employes of the four local houses would receive full pay despite the curtailment of performances during the fuel difficulties.

Acts from the Orpheum and Empress theatres and from local burlesque houses helped a rip-roaring evening to pass only too speedily into the dawn of another business day.

A Sign of Progress at Christmas Time

THE INITIAL APPEARANCE OF this trade-mark on the screens of the world indicates the passing of the ninth Christmas in motion pictures of Marshall Neilan.

IT SIMULTANEously marks the beginning of greater strides in the march of progress in cinema production as it symbolizes, for the first time, the independent and unhampered effort of the screen's youngest producing genius, assisted by an organization comprising the best talent in this branch of the industry and working along modern lines in photoplay presentation minus the usual handicaps.

A HINT OF THE MERIT WHICH INvolves every phase of Marshall Neilan Productions will be gained from the character and prominence of the initial story, to be announced in the near future.

Improvements at National.

AMONG the new improvements that are being added to the facilities of the plant of the National Film Company is a new dark stage 65 by 175 feet that is being built at the corner of Gower and Santa Monica boulevard, on a lot owned by National. Another improvement is the new projection room that has just been completed, which is equipped with heating plant, indirect lighting system, comfortable seats and an organ. The walls and ceiling are decorated in regular theatre style, and hereafter the National reviews will be enjoyable and lively affairs. I. Bernstein, production manager of National, states that the schedule of his company for the year 1920 calls for increased studio and stage space. "Mary Minds Her Business," a George Weston story, will be filmed with an all-star cast early in the year.

Take Over Burston Studio.

Warner Brothers, producers of the Al St. John comedies and the new Helen Holmes serials, have taken over the former Burston studio, at 6050 Sunset boulevard, in Hollywood, where all future Warner productions will be made.

Al St. John is now working on his fourth comedy for the Paramount-Artcraft program, under the direction of Frank Griffin. Helen Holmes will soon be at work on her second serial under the new management.

Cathrine Curtis Postpones Production.

The Cathrine Curtis Corporation has been forced to discontinue active production on the feature which has been in the making for the past few months. Miss Curtis and her company left Los Angeles for Spokane, about two months ago, and many exteriors were made until the company was forced to stop production on account of bad weather and excessive snowfall. An attempt was made to finish the picture in a mountain location near Los Angeles, and here heavy snows again interfered with the work. Miss Curtis found it better to postpone operations until spring, as it was very difficult to hold a large number of Indians who were brought from the north.

Woman Rodeo Champion in Films.

Vera Mack, champion woman rodeo rider of the West, is staring in a series of two-reel Westerns, four of which are already completed, and which will be released every two weeks, beginning January 15, 1920, by the Doubleday Productions.

The Doubleday Productions have leased the Bronx studio in Edendale for the production of their pictures, and besides the Vera Mack features they plan to begin soon on a Western serial and a series of Indian pictures.

Harry Owens and F. L. Smith, formerly with the Capital Film Company, have been put in charge of sales and publicity, Smith to make his headquarters in Chicago, and Owens to remain in the West.

Irwin in West.

Walter Wayne Irwin, former general manager of Vitagraph, and now connected with Famous Players-Lasky Company, has arrived in Los Angeles, with Mrs. Irwin, and is stopping at the Alexandria.

"Pollyanna" Completed.

"Pollyanna," Mary Pickford's first film for the United Artists Association, has been finished so far as the actual photography is concerned. The picture is now being cut and will be given its first showing about January 15. Paul Powell directed the feature.

Films Stars in Christmas Benefit.

Among the film stars who will lend their aid to the mammoth Christmas basket benefit performance that will be held at Clune's Auditorium under the management of the L. A. Examiner on December 20, will be Charles Murray, in a sketch with Ben Turpin; Raymond Hatton, Guy Oliver and Mayme Kelso in the playlet, "The Deceivers," by William De Mille; Wallace Reid and his jazz band; George Beban in an Italian character monologue; and Mary Miles Minter in a sketch. Charles Muray will be stage manager and master of ceremonies, and other acts will be given by players from the dramatic and vaudeville companies appearing in local playhouses.

Gowland to Star in "McTeague."

Gibson Gowland, character actor, has been engaged by Eric von Stroheim to play the title role in a picture to be produced for Universal from the Frank Norris novel, "McTeague." Gowland has recently appeared in "The Right of Way," "White Heather," "Blind Husbands," and the new Maurice Tourneur production, "Ladies Must Live."

Golden Gate Showmen Enjoy Great Prosperity

PAUL BRUNET, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has received a glowing symposium of the situation on the Pacific Coast from Fred. C. Quimby, director of exchanges of Pathe. Mr. Quimby has just completed a tour of the entire Pacific Coast that has taken him to every section of the country where a Pathe exchange is located.

It is harvest time for the exhibitor of California, just as it is elsewhere, Mr. Quimby reports. Months ago, California was resigned to the fate met by the "wet" forces at the hands of the United States Supreme Court last week, and swung into the columns of the foremost motion picture centers—from the public viewpoint. Everywhere in the state of the Golden Gate, Mr. Quimby has found exhibitors prospering. Theatre building is increasing merrily.

Mr. Quimby has found the art of motion picture exhibition as far advanced as in any other territory of the United States. Some of the world's best screen palaces are located on the West Coast and are managed and owned by men who have made the exhibition of motion pictures a beautifully developed art.

In the Days of Old When Bandits Were Bold.

Chief of Police Peter Johnstone, of Lincoln, Nebr., and Captain John L. Butler, former chief of police of Los Angeles, consult Tom Mix, Fox star, regarding the pursuit of W. G. Carlisle, notorious train robber.

Not even the biggest theatres of New York surpass the charming presentations of several California exhibitors.

Mr. Quimby was pleased with the manner in which the Pathe short subjects are being received. Harold Lloyd has earned the stamp of approval from nearly every big exhibitor in California, including Samuel L. Rothapfel, who is now managing director of the renovated California theatre in Los Angeles. Mr. Rothapfel was most enthusiastic in his praise of Lloyd's first two pictures, "Bumping Into Broadway" and "Captain Kidd's Kids." The Pathe Review is in bigger demand than ever. The slow motion feature of the magazine, Mr. Quimby finds, is considered by Californians one of the greatest inventions in motion picture annals.

Johnny Jones To Be Edgar in Booth Tarkington Film

AFTER weeks of searching, during which upwards of 200 applicants have been considered, E. Mason Hopper has found the ideal boy to interpret Edgar in the Booth Tarkington series of twelve two-reel comedies to be produced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Work on the first of the pictures was started at the Culver City studios last week.

The choice of the director, in consultation with Vice President Abraham Lehr and other officials at the Culver City studios, is Johnny Jones who fulfills the detailed description of Edgar supplied by Mr. Tarkington. His experience as an interpreter of youthful characters asures his ability to handle the greatest boy acting part that has ever been created for the screen.

During a career that began in extreme youth, Jones has appeared in "Walls of Jericho" and "The Shepherd of the Hills," among other productions. As Edgar he has the part of a boy about 11 years of age. Others in the cast for the first of the pictures. include Arthur H. Litke, John Cassar, Virginia Madison, Marie Dunn, Fred Moore, Buddie Messenger, Lucille Rickson, Nick Cogley and Lucretia Harris.

Work Progressing on Pathe Serial Starring Dempsey

JACK DEMPSEY, king of the heavyweights and latest addition to the Pathe serial program, is now the social lion of Los Angeles, where he is working in the fifteen-episode Pathe production, "Dead or Alive," which marks his first appearance in films. The picture is being made at the Brunton studio under the supervision of Robert Brunton.

Work on "Dead or Alive" is progressing rapidly. Under the direction of James Van Dyke the early episodes are shaping up, and the scenario is well along toward completion. Jack Cunningham is writing the scenario from the story by Frederic Chapin, Pathe production manager, and Harry O. Hoyt.

Among the early scenes is the interior of a theatre, showing full stage and the body of a "packed" house. This will not be a studio set. A real theatre with a real show in action and a real audience will be shown, necessitating an elaboate system of lighting installation in order that all corners of the big Los Angeles House to be used for the purpose may be shown as clearly as though the filming had been done in a studio.

Night scenes, it is said, will not be daylight "shots" tinted blue or green. They will be filmed at night by means of artificial lights. In such details, it is planned to make the Dempsey-Pathe serial an unusual production.

"A Roman Scandal" Opens Millers.

"A Roman Scandal," the Christie two-reel special, with Collean Moore, Earl Rodney and others, is one of the attractions at the opening of Miller's Los Angeles Theatre. The Miller Amusement Company has also had the Christie specials at the California Theatre, which has been under their management.

Godsol at Culver City.

F. J. Godsol, chairman of the executive committee of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, is visiting the Goldwyn studios at Culver City. Mr. Godsol stopped at Chicago for one day and then continued his journey west. The length of Mr. Godsol's stay at Culver City is not announced.

Harry Wulze, writer of film comedies, is at the National studios turning out stories for Flanagan and Edwards.

Hobart Bosworth, who has completed his feature for Ince, "Below the Surface," has contracted to produce pictures under the management of J. Parker Read, Jr.

Billy Elmer, actor, and recently manager of the Burbank Theatre, has filed a petition in bankruptcy as a result of his theatrical venture.

The Katherine MacDonald company, now producing "The Guests of Hercules," has gone to Monterey, Cal., for location scenes.

Bebe Daniels will play opposite Wallace Reid in his coming Paramount feature, "The Dancing Fool."

Anna Q. Nilsson will play the leading feminine role in "The Fighting Chance," soon to be produced at Lasky's by Charles Maigne.

Eugene Pallette plays the part of "Red" Jocelyn in Bert Lytell's new interpretation of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," for Screen Classics.

George Beban has more than two hundred dogs, six babies and eighteen boys supporting him in "One Man in a Million."

Maurice Tourneur's next production, with an all-star cast, will be made from H. H. Van Loan's story, "The Great Redeemer."

Mr. and Mrs. T. R. N. Cama, of Bombay, India, were visitors at the Goldwyn studio last week while in Los Angeles on their around-the-world trip.

William De Mille will begin filming "The Prince Chap," with Thomas Meighan, during Christmas week.

Frederick Reel, Jr., is now on the editorial staff at Brentwood.

Allan Dwan has purchased the rights of the new Peter B. Kyne story, "Kindred of the Dust," for his next Paramount-Artcraft production.

Lottie Pickford Rupp's suit for divorce against her husband, Albert G. Rupp, has been withdrawn.

Donald Keyes, former still cameraman at Goldwyn, has departed with H. A. Snow, a naturalist of Oakland, Cal., on a two years' trip to collect big game specimens and to film obscure native tribes in Africa and Asia.

Jack Pickford, of Goldwyn, has gone to New York to spend the holidays with his wife, Olive Thomas.

Mildred Harris Chaplin spent a short vacation at Coronado Beach after the completion of "The Inferior Sex" for Lewis B. Mayer.

L. V. Jefferson is now scenario editor at the National Film studios.

The "Shore Acres" company, featuring Alice Lake, from Metro, will go to San Francisco for ship scenes.

Pauline Frederick will start on "Roads of Destiny" for Goldwyn immediately after Christmas.

Lon Chaney and Spike Robinson have been engaged to support Jack Dempsey in his forthcoming serial.

Gale Henry is planning to make a five-reel comedy drama as an experiment and a change from the two-reelers she has been turning out at the Bull's-Eye studio.

In the Opie Read story, "The Kentucky Colonel," now being filmed at the National, Joseph J. Dowling will be seen as the Colonel and Francis MacDonald, Elinor Field and Lloyd Bacon in other leading roles.

Rubbernecking in Filmland

Conflagrations and Pajamas, Fighters and Ex-Bandits, Chickens and Music, Viola and Gum

By Giebler

SAW a coal mine burn half way down—or up—or whichever way it is that a coal mine goes when it succumbs to a conflagration—and then explode with such a terrific bang that the people out in the Melrose and Western avenue neighborhood arose in righteous indignation and their nightshirts and registered a kick about having their slumbers disturbed.

I interviewed the champion prize-fighter of the world, questioned an ex-bandit about his past, watched (and listened) while George Beban made a scene for his new play, listened to Lerdo's orchestra discourse La Paloma and other beautiful Mex music on the lawn of the Tom Ince studio, saw a beautiful lady ride into a ball room on a white horse, was present when Viola Dana got so wrought up over Bert Lytell's work in "Alias Jimmy Valentine" that she swallowed her gum, rode home from Culver City in T. L. Tally's automobile, and stood in awed silence and admiration while 5,000 chickens paraded before my delighted eyes on the Mack Sennett lot.

Found Pay Dirt Everywhere.

A big week? Well, not so much a big week as a lucky week.

Some weeks Filmland is like a deserted village when it comes to finding stuff to write about. At one studio everybody will be out on location; at another, between pictures; and at another they will be so afraid of "gag stealers" that I have to stand on a stack of Bibles, cross my heart and say "Hope I may die or spend the rest of my days in Frisco if I tell what is going on" before they will so much as let me poke the neck around the corner of a set.

This week was lucky. I struck pay dirt everywhere I went—saw so much that I will not be able to get it all down if I don't hurry—so let's go.

The coal mine stuff was made out on the big lot across the street from Brunton, next door to Doug Fairbanks' place, and was part of William Allen White's story, "The Heart of a Fool," that Allan Dwan is making for the Mayflower Corporation.

A Realistic Mine Shaft.

The action was shot in the damp and stilly watches of the night, and it took two nights because an inconsiderable rain came along and gummed things up by putting out the fire on the first occasion.

I'll remember the scene for a long time because of the drama and realism of the thing, the dark galleries of the mine, the men with the lights on their caps, the fire, the struggle, the fight on the ladder, the fall of the ladder with its human freight, the fight on the upper levels of the mine, the explosion—and from the looks of things now, I'll have a hacking cough which I contracted by standing around on the wet sod of the lot to remember it by for the rest of my life.

I told Jimmie Hogan, the assistant director, that he should have had stilts for Rubbernecks to stand on in order to keep their feet off the wet ground. But he's a callous-hearted bird and insinuated that only folks whose feet were so big that they soaked up all the moisture on the lot were in danger of taking cold, and said it wasn't his fault, or the fault of the Mayflower corporation.

No Casualty List.

It was somebody's fault and I've got a notion to get even by telling the world that the arms and legs that went hurtling through he air when the mine blew up were not the arms and legs of human beings at all, but the arms and legs of dummies.

"The Heart of a Fool" looks like big stuff. James Kirkwood and Mary Thurman play the leads. George Siegman has a good heavy part and helps direct. Ward Crane, Philo McCullough, John Burton, who plays the part of a doctor, and Arthur Hoyt, who plays a ukelele in the picture, and Anna Q. Nilsson are in the cast.

William Allen White, the author of the story, who is here supervising the screen version of his book, "A Certain Rich Man," under production by the Federal Photoplay Corporation, was among those present at the explosion.

A Perfect Bakeshop.

Mr. White is not much of a movie fan; he goes to a picture show about once a year on an average. Will Monte Katterjohn, H. H. Van Loan and some more of our scenario experts who advise anxious and aspiring playwrights to go to the shows and study the plays they see on the screen, please explain how this writer from Kansas puts over his scenarios the way he does?

The day after the deep stuff at the mine, I went down to the Katherine MacDonald studio and watched George Beban making "One Man in a Million."

Mr. Beban was working out action in a typical Beban scene. You could have gone over the set with a microscope and not have found anything wanting in atmosphere and reality.

It was perfect. Loaves of bread on the table, little dabs of dough on the floor, prints of the baker's floury hands on the wall and on one of the table legs, cobwebs on the ceiling, big wooden mixing bowls—a perfect picture of a bake shop of the poorer class.

Never Misses Payday.

Lloyd Whitlock and Helen Jerome Eddy are the chief supports to Mr. Beban, who, of course, plays the leading part, and directs the picture. Little George, Mr. Beban's 5-year-old son, has an important part in the picture, and Big George says the lad demands his salary without fail at the close of each day's work.

The ex-bandit previously mentioned was Emmett Dalton, the last of the famous Dalton boys, of Indian Territory, Texas, and the old West generally. Mr. Dalton is making a series of five Western features from the stories of William Addison Lathrop. I did not get to see Dalton before the camera because of it being a rainy day, but we had a mighty interesting discourse, in spite of the fact that he tried to play the part of an iconoclast and bust some of my fondest fancies.

Sears Brought Civilization.

Emmett says the bad man of the screen and the bad man of real life have very little resemblance to each other in either costume or habits. He declares that the picturesque garb of the West departed when Sears and Roebuck catalogues arrived from the East, years and years ago.

He told me that he had never had on a pair of chaps but once in his life and then he was only kidding. So far as the two-gun man is concerned, Emmett says there ain't no such varmint.

"One gun is as much as a man can handle at one time," says Emmett. "When two guns are needed, it's time to run."

I am satisfied that Mr. Dalton knows the West like a book but I think he must have been spoofing me. Wouldn't it be terrible if what he says is true? Can you imagine a desperate dare-devil of the desert without his clothes?

Only Turpin Could Do It.

Can you visualize a bandit in spats? Why, it just naturally stands to reason that a chap all dressed up like Astor's horse with a two-button sack coat, a pair of creased trousers and a plush lid could not be as bad as one wearing a harrycarey hat, a doug shirt and a pair of billhart pants. It doesn't stand to reason, now, does it?

And if we believed all that Emmett said about a two-gun man being compelled to cast his keen and glittering eye along both barrels of his gats at one and the same time—why—Ben Turpin is the only actor in the movies who could get away with it.

The lady who rode the white horse into the ball room was Barbara Castleton. The ball room was a scene from Mary Robert Rinehart's "Dangerous Days," that Reginald Barker is making at Goldwyn's. A splendid scene, filled with 100 people in gorgeous costumes. Lords and ladies, kings and clowns, knights, poets, peasants, polar bears and Clarissa Selwyn with a magnificent feather head dress on a dias.

A Beautiful Scene.

Reggie Barker climbed up on his platform, said "Music—action!" in his gentle voice, and the band played, the people danced. Bertram Grassby, costumed as a harlequin, waltzed into the room, held the dancers with a gesture. An advance guard of six clowns came in, two abreast. Then Barbara Castleton, all dressed up like a circus rider on her milkwhite steed.

Great stuff. I'll say it was great stuff! There are times when I actually appreciate my job, and this was one of the times.

The day after Goldwyn's I went over to Tom Ince's studio, where Louise Glaum was entertaining and being entertained by Lerdo's Mexican orchestra, that is playing at Tally's Kinema and Broadway theatres.

Miss Glaum likes Mex music so much that she had Mr. Tally bring the musicians out to the studio, and they spread themselves out on the lawn in front of the George Washington entrance to the buildings and made the welkin ring and all our feet itch with the dancing fever while they tore off bewitching strains of harmony.

Bert Thrilled Viola.

I think I have covered the week, with the exception of Jack Dempsey and the 5,000 chickens, both of which items will have to go into another story. Oh, yes, about Viola Dana's gum.

This was a small incident—or perhaps accident would be better, although there is no record of gum swallowing ever having proved fatal—but an incident that speaks eloquently of the lack of jealousy between the stars and eloquently of Bert Lytell's ability to thrill and still the emotions.

Whenever an actor can pull stuff of such realism that a fellow artist standing on the side lines will so far forget herself as to gulp down a gob of gum, it is a splendid tribute to the art of the artist pulling the stuff, believe you me.

Bert was deeply moved and said that he had never been paid a more sincere compliment in his life.

Williams Returns to Metro.

Horace Williams, who was casting director at the Metro studios in Hollywood for a year and a half prior to the regime of Maxwell Karger, director general, has returned to the studios in his old capacity. David Thompson, production manager, re-engaged Mr. Williams to take care of the increasing responsibilities of the casting department.

Goldwyn Directors Now Use Portable Power Plant

THE portable power plant, recently secured by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for the use of companies located at the Culver City studios, is proving a great help to directors confronted with the need for taking scenes in dimly lighted places. The new equipment may be transported to any location desired and operated without difficulty by the director seeking atmospheric night effects, or aiming to illumine dark interiors.

A technical description of the power plant reads: 100 h. p., 6-cylinder, gas motor, connected by flexible link coupling to 500 amp., 2-wire 100-volt interpole, compound wound, direct current generator. It is mounted on a cast iron base with water-cooling system and including a switchboard, starting motor and battery. The entire equipment is carried on a five-ton trailer. The approximate cost is $4,500.

This portable power plant eliminates the installation of transformers and is advantageous in that it provides a direct current which is steady and strong.

Miss Young's First 1920 Release.

Clara Kimball Young, with her manager and director, Harry Garson, are in San Francisco, where the company is spending a week or more on exterior scenes for "The Forbidden Woman," Miss Young's next release. This production will be given to the public as Miss Young's first offering for the year 1920.

"Sentimental Bloke," Australia's First Big Film, Scores a Real Hit

AUSTRALIA'S first big motion picture production, "The Sentimental Bloke," was given a private preview in the St. Francis Hotel, Berkeley, Cal., on the evening of December 16 before an assemblage of several hundred invited guests. The general opinion was that if future productions maintain the high standard set in this one, Australia will have to be reckoned with as a producing field. This picture was made by the Southern Cross Feature Film Company, of Sydney, and the releasing rights are controlled by E. J. Carroll, who brought it to this country, Eugene H. Roth, of the California Theatre, is the American representative of Mr. Carroll.

"The Sentimental Bloke" is adapted from C. J. Dennis' book of verse of that name, a work that has few equals in the realm of dialect verse. It was produced by Raymond Longford and photographed by Arthur Higgins. The story is compelling in its interest and the film bears none of the earmarks of crudity that usually distinguish the first effort of a producer. It runs smoothly from beginning to end, with its absorbing comedy being heightened by the droll bits of verse that make up the titles.

Arthur Tauchert fills the title role of "The Bloke" to perfection and his experiences in meeting Doreen, delightfully portrayed by Lortie Lytell; his courtship, the lover's quarrel, getting acquainted with "Mar" and finally getting married and settling down on a berry farm, make film entertainment par excellence. The story depicts true metropolitan and rural life in the Antipodes and has more than ordinary educational value, as there is not a bit of "built" exterior in the entire six reels. Gilbert Emery as "Ginger Mick" and W. J. Coulter, as Uncle Jim add to the perfect cast.

Frisco's Film Row to Expand.

All doubts as to the permanence of Golden Gate avenue as San Francisco's "Film Exchange Row" have been swept aside by arrangements that have been completed whereby a large structure will be erected at Leavenworth street and Golden Gate avenue for the use of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and the Realart Pictures Corporation. These concerns are now occupying upstairs quarters in Market street buildings and all are handicapped by lack of room and adequate film handling facilities. The new arrangement will help.

The Late Jack London.
An informal shot of the master story writer, four of whose novels will be produced by Metro.

Build Village Street for Metro Film.

A Canadian village street scene built by Metro on the old Universal ranch in the San Fernando Valley, outside of Los Angeles, was the setting for Bert Lytell's new Screen Classics, Inc., picture, "The Right of Way," for several days.

This complete street was more than 200 yards long. Stores and houses typical of the backwoods country of Canada were built on both sides. The buildings were of frame structure, some one story and others two.

Author Present at Making of "Stronger Than Death"

THE Australian author, I. A. R. Wylie, whose novel of Anglo-Indian life is the basis of "Stronger Than Death," Nazimova's forthcoming screen production, was present during the major part of the work on the picture at Nazimova's studios in California. Miss Wylie visited the studios at Nazimova's personal invitation, and gave many valuable suggestions, which the star accepted and utilized for the improvement of her screen work.

Miss Wylie spent about two months in almost daily visits to the Nazimova studios. Together with a friend, Rachel Barrett, she was touring this country in a novel and thorough-going way. Her method was to take up her residence in a typical section, and live in that neighborhood until she knew it well. She passed three months with friends at La Jolla, Cal., making trips to Coronada and other nearby places, besides her journeys to Los Angeles. She expressed herself as being quite in love with California as a literary workshop.

Brown to Los Angeles for Clark Cornelius Company

COLVIN W. BROWN, of the Clark Cornelius Corporation will leave New York before the first of the year for the Pacific Coast to spend several weeks in the interests of the company. He will spend most of his time in Los Angeles, but before his return to New York will visit exchange centers on the Pacific Coast and in other sections of the west.

He will be joined within a few weeks at Los Angeles by H. C. Cornelius, vice president of Exhibitors Mutual and treasurer of Clark Cornelius Corporation, who plans to spend several months in Los Angeles.

If some sparkle of unique originality peculiarly native to their creator had not been written into these stories and continuities, then how does it happen that three of the first announced group of re-issues appear in the above list?

Plans are also under way to re-issue certain Paralta Plays which were conceived by the same mind, and which a board of reviewers have adjudged superior to present-day productions.

Educational and Non-theatrical News

Conducted by Margaret I. MacDonald

Progress of Past Year Presages Bright Future

THE year 1920 opens on a period in the history of the educational film when the last milestone of the preliminary stage is in sight. After years of incredulity the industry has finally awakened, not only to the necessity of making a substantial preparation for a market that is fast revealing itself, but it is also being moved by a spirit of competition, which, as the old saying goes, "is the life of trade."

It is true that up to the present time the problem of making possible the use of the instructional film in the school has been bandied about without making marked progress. System in attempting to handle the situation has been lacking to a great degree; there has been no definite plan followed, and the maximum effort has busied itself with the gathering together of the material already on hand. The majority of this material was not made with a view to satisfying any definite form of instruction and does not fit in with the more progressive methods of modern education.

Let this be as it may, the time is at hand when the production of films fashioned along constructive and analytical lines, films which will visualize and make clear to the child, or to the college and university student, the intricacies of subjects which after years of study are often but vaguely understood, will be an important branch of the moving picture industry.

If we look back over the past year we will find that a vast change has taken place in the attitude of the producer toward the instructive film, and in more than one instance strictly educational departments have been added to the executive machinery. Capital from some of the wealthiest organizations in the country is being placed at the disposal of the scientific screen, and we have great reason to believe that amazing progress will be made in this field before 1921 rolls around.

It is in anticipation of big things ahead that we are opening a department for educational and non-theatrical news, through which we hope to keep our readers alive to what is happening in this field, and to be a source of inspiration as well as information in so far as we can.

Exemplify Right Idea on Teaching with Film

UNDER the auspices of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, an illustration of the adaptability of the film in teaching was given in the ballroom of the Hotel Majestic, New York City, on the afternoon of December 15, through the courtesy of Copeland Townsend, manager.

The films presented were as follows, selected for the occasion by the Carter Cinema Company: Nature study, "A Day with John Burroughs," by courtesy of Prizma, Inc.; arithmetic and algebra, "Square and Cube Root"; biology, "How Life Begins"; child welfare, "Our Children"; Americanization, "The Making of an American." The two films chosen to illustrate the teaching of geography and physiology did not arrive in time for the program, and were, respectively, "The Grand Canyon of Arizona" and "A Microscopical View of Our Blood System."

The first of the number shows the celebrated naturalist revealing the beauties of nature, including landscapes, birds, flowers, insects and other forms of animal life, to children who accompany him. The second makes clear by means of blocks a couple of mathematical problems, while number three reveals by delicate methods the story of the origin of life, starting with the lowest forms and ending with the mammal. The child welfare picture illustrates not only the proper methods of caring for the baby, but also the benefits of maintaining a local health clinic. The last and not the least important in the American plan of things shows the foreign-born how to become good citizens, the first steps in which are the mastery of the English language, and the study of life as it is lived in the Great Democracy.

Children Have Theatre for the Holiday Season

A THEATRE for children, with the choicest of films adapted especially for youngsters, and a Christmas pantomime presented by child actors and music selected by the men who have made the Rivoli and Rialto famous, opened at 1 o'clock Christmas (Thursday) afternoon. The Sixty-third Street Music Hall, between Broadway and Central Park West, has been engaged for the holiday season by Hugo Riesenfeld, and every day from 1 to 6, until Sunday, January 4, there will be a new picture bill. The pantomime, staged by artists from the Riesenfeld theatres, assisted by Edward Falck, former assistant conductor of the Metropolitan Opera, will be run the entire holiday season. The best of the soloists who have been heard at the Rivoli and Rialto will appear at this new house, only this time they will present selections especially for the youngsters.

Goldwyn Has Zinc Mining.

In the campaign of the Ford Educational Weekly in presenting the products of American industry in the making, the preparation of zinc for commercial use has been filmed. In the next issue of the Ford Weekly the cameraman descends the zinc mine shafts in the miners' cage, and films miners and mules at work mining the ore and conveying it in cans from the interior of the mine to the shaft where it is hauled to the surface. The washing of the ore by gigantic machines and also views in the smelting plant are shown.

David Kirkland Directed Holmes in New Metro Film

DAVID KIRKLAND, who directed Taylor Holmes in his first independent production, "Nothing But the Truth," the picturization of Frederic Isham's novel that will be distributed exclusively by Metro, is not only a director of note but a late captain in the A. E. F. Director Kirkland enlisted at the beginning of the war, earned a captain's commission and was sent to France. He served there until the armistice was signed, when he returned to America, and took up his old work back of the camera.

Upon returning to the United States, Mr. Kirkland was engaged by the Constance Talmadge Film Corporation, and directed this star's first two pictures under her First National contract, "A Temperamental Wife" and "A Virtuous Vamp." Just about this time Taylor Holmes was perfecting Taylor Holmes Productions, Inc., and he selected Mr. Kirkland. The latter's experience had included a noteworthy career on the speaking stage, as well as extensive film work for Universal, Famous Players, Pathe and World.

"Nothing But the Truth" is scheduled for early release through Metro, exclusive distributors of the Holmes productions in the United States and Canada. This comedy, which is known in story form to a multitude of readers, was a stage vehicle for William Collier, who played James Montgomery's dramatization of the Isham novel. On the stage "Nothing But the Truth" was one of William Collier's greatest successes, running in New York alone for more than forty weeks, subsequently playing throughout this country and almost the entire civilized world.

London and Paris to See Artistic "Broken Blossoms"

GUY CROSWELL SMITH, LTD., the American company holding all foreign rights to D. W. Griffith's artistic "Broken Blossoms," announces the sale of the rights in Great Britain for the largest figure ever paid for a cinema production in that country.

George Bowles, general European manager for the company, cables at the same time that he has been obliged to open larger offices at 6 Rue de la Paix in Paris, where plans are now ripening for the presentation of this production in one of the largest theatres in Paris. Mr. Bowles has refused several big cash offers for the French rights to "Broken Blossoms" and prefers to see to its presentation in that city under his personal supervision. It will be handled there upon the same scale as it was in New York during its run at the Cohan Theatre. The sale of the Great Britain rights also provided for the same elaborate production of the story in London before it is released in any other parts of the United Kingdom.

Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., has also closed a deal by which this company takes over all remaining foreign rights to the Griffith spectacle, "Intolerance." In this connection Mr. Bowles will handle both pictures for the remaining territory in Europe and is due to open offices in London for Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., and distribute from the two centers, Paris and London.

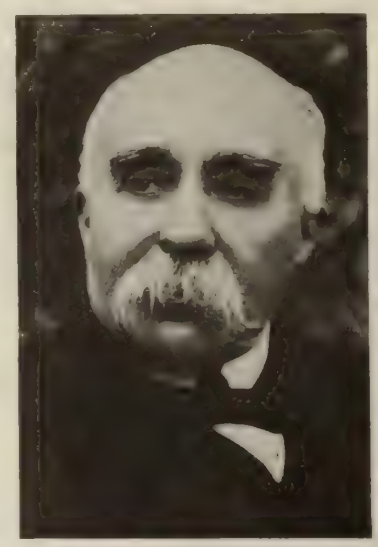
Pathe Has Special One Sheet.

To further augment its strong exploitation campaign on "My Husband's Other Wife," third of J. Stuard Blackton's feature productions for Pathe, with Sylvia Breamer, Robert Gordon, Warren Chandler, and May McAvoy in the cast, a special one sheet is being issued by Pathe.

"Don't get a divorce until you see 'My Husband's Other Wife,'" the one sheet reads. It is strikingly done in orange and black and in a forceful manner hits the point of the drama produced by Commodore Blackton.

Fox Gets Screen Rights to Clemenceau's Novel

WILLIAM FOX, president of Fox Film Corporation, has secured from Georges Clemenceau, premier of France, the screen rights to the only novel that the noted stateman and journalist has written. It has been published in both French and English under the title "The Strongest."



Premier Georges Clemenceau
"Tiger of France" who has prepared a motion picture version of his "The Strongest" for Fox production.

M. Clemenceau himself prepared the cinema version of his famous and fascinating story. The tireless worker who pointed the way to victory during the darkest hours of his country's fearful ordeal in war, worked on the adaptation of his novel even while he was engaged in trying to untangle a skein of the most difficult diplomatic problems in the history of the world. His adaptation has been finished and now "The Strongest" is ready to be filmed. R. A. Walsh will direct the production.

Premier Clemenceau for many years has been a devoted patron of the silent drama. In fact, it is one of his hobbies. Long ago the great statesman declared that the cinema was the one and only logical method by which to make the whole world one in thought, aim and accomplishment for the betterment of humanity. He has pointed out that, with the aid of the cinema, language was not necessary—that a story told in pictures would appeal to all classes.

Famous Players May Lease Instead of Run Theatre

NATHAN KORN, New York representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was in Cincinnati recently conferring with the architects who are preparing plans for the building to occupy the site recently purchased by Max Goldstein at Fifth and Vine streets. The plans as announced during the visit of Mr. Korn contemplate the erection of an eighteen-story office building to cost approximately $4,000,000. Included in the plans is provision for a large store, which, it is said, will be occupied by the Wanamaker department store corporation. This would utilize the larger part of the first floor.

A theatre will be built, using a part of the first, second and third floors, and will be along the lines announced some time after the purchase of the property. Seats will be provided for approximately 3,100 persons.

It is now said that it is uncertain whether the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will operate the theatre as a first-run moving picture house or lease it to Marcus Loew for a vaudeville house. Following the original announcement of the purpose of the company to use it for presenting its own shows, an association of leading exhibitors in Cincinnati and vicinity was formed to combat this principle. No definite date has been set for starting work on the building, but it is believed there will be little delay in the erection of the building.

"The Play's the Thing" Is American's 1920 Slogan

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, Inc., is making his way back from Santa Barbara to Chicago for the Christmas holidays. En route he is spending some time at the American distributing branches at San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Denver, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Kansas City, Des Moines and Minneapolis, where he is making a happy resumé of the 1919 business of the "Flying A Super-Specials" and sharing his enthusiastic plans for big things for the new year.

"The most gratifying success of our big super-attractions beginning with 'Six Feet Four,' followed by 'The Hellion' and 'Eve in Exile' mark our new policy a winner," Mr. Hutchinson writes.

Flying A's 1920 Plan.

"'The play's the thing'—the new slogan of the American—is most assuredly in line with the best trend of thought today. The meat of the highest priced and most popular novels, stars chosen who are best fitted for the parts, the best acting obtainable, with no restrictions and no precedents—the line of least resistance to phenomenal success—this is the 1920 campaign mapped for the Flying A's. Each film treated as a single unit, each aiming to be better than the last, with the thumb of the management constantly on the public pulse—an infinite vista of superb possibilities is open to 1920 Americans.

"With no cast-iron release dates, the American films are completed when they are perfect; new when and where they are new; an assured success before they appear. No clamps on the Flying A Specials!"

"Valley of Tomorrow" Is Next "Flying A" Special

THE VALLEY OF TOMORROW," which is just emerging from the laboratory stage in the American Film Company's work-rooms, was designed by Stephen Fox to give rein to William Russell's versatility as an interpreter of strong emotional parts, as well as the master of dynamic action.

Because the story enlists the sympathy of the spectator from the start by its high moral tone, he finds himself with strained attention solving the knotty problems of right and wrong that present themselves with kaleidoscopic speed to the camera of conscience. The mental struggles between old family traditions and a newer, finer sense of honor form the backbone of a drama which enables a strong cast to run the gamut of human emotions.

Mary Thurman plays the role of the Italian sister while Elenore Colonna, provides an excellent support in the leading feminine role. Fred M. Malatesta, a native Italian, presents a true-to-life study of the moral outlaw who later becomes a miserable suppliant for mercy. Pauline Curley makes an appealing little sister. Harvey Clark, Frank Brownlee, Jeffrey Sloan, Frank Clark and Lewis King, a younger brother of the well-known director, Henry King, are other popular screen players in the cast. Emmett J. Flynn directed the production of the picture.

Prominent Belgian Artiste Starred in American Film

R. R. NEHLS, general manager of the American Film Company, Chicago, has gone to the Santa Barbara studios of the company to see that the new production plans for "Flying A" pictures are carried out faithfully, in letter and in spirit, down to the smallest detail.

This month the company is in the midst of the initial work on a feature, based on Samuel Merwin's "The Honey Bee." Marguerita Sylva, famous concert artiste and grand opera diva, is carrying the principal feminine role. Here is a part that calls into play all the sparkle, intellect and emotional power that this brilliant Belgian, with a stage record circling the globe, brings to its interpretation.

The American has secured as Mme. Sylva's director Rupert Julian. A strong cast has been assembled to support Mme. Sylva.

In every other production on the American's list for 1920 the same high standards will be found to rule consistently. Big story by a big author—famous director—star of world-wide reputation—high-power cast—lavish settings—minute attention to every detail of production: these are the solidly planted posts that supply the foundation for the "Flying A's" new series of super-features.

ADVERTISING PAYS, you will agree; then why hesitate ordering "Picture Theatre Advertising," by Sargent, a volume with 300 pages devoted exclusively to the ways and means of increasing box office receipts. Postpaid for $2. Chalmers Publishing Company, 516 Fifth avenue, New York.

Dazey a Rapid Worker.

Within four weeks after his arrival in Los Angeles, Frank M. Dazey had two continuities in course of production at the Louis B. Mayer studios. One picture is Caroline Lockhart's "The Fighting Shepherdess" in which Anita Stewart is starred, and the other is Grace Miller White's "Polly of the Storm Country" with Mildred Harris Chaplin as the star. Both are for release through the First National Exhibitors Circuit.

Mr. Dazey is under a long-time contract with Louis B. Mayer and is now working upon a new story which will be shortly announced as a starring vehicle for either Anita Stewart or Mildred Harris Chaplin. He has just finished a stage play which his father, C. T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky," is now placing for production in New York.

St. John Becomes Republic's San Francisco Manager

FLOYD ST. JOHN, for several years manager of the San Francisco branch of the World Film Corporation, and now filling a like position with the Republic Distributing Corporation, has met with a degree of success that is unusual, to say the least. He stepped into the film exchange business as a full-fledged manager, with a record of twenty years' continuous service with a typewriter concern to his credit, and proceeded to apply proved business principles to this industry.

Floyd St. John.
San Francisco Manager for Republic Distributing Corporation.

Without any hurrah the World business was developed until the local exchange was one of the leading branches, and large additions to the quarters and to the working staff were imperative.

Mr. St. John is a leading member of the San Francisco Film Exchange Board of Trade and is vice president of the National Association of F. I. L. M. Clubs. In speaking of the change from the World to the Republic Distributing Corporation, Mr. St. John states that the transfer was brought about in this field without the loss of a contract.

Make Scenes for Thomas Play in Longacre Theatre

OUT of one theatre and into another was Doris Kenyon's course while busily engaged in serving two masters, filmdom and stage. Through the courtesy of L. Lawrence Weber, owner of the Longacre Theatre, New York, Theodore C. Deitrich, co-producer of Miss Kenyon's forthcoming W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Harvest Moon," procured that playhouse for the enactment of many scenes in the picturization of Augustus Thomas' stage success.

So Miss Kenyon, who has the stellar role in A. H. Woods' stage production, "The Girl in the Limousine," had a whirlwind time of it in a week of afternoon and evening jumps from the Eltinge Theatre, which houses her stage success, to the Longacre, and vice versa.

Many stage and screen favorites make up the cast in support of the star in "The Harvest Moon," which is being directed by J. Searle Dawley. As her leading man Miss Kenyon has Wilfred Lytell.

One of the important roles is in the hands of Earl Schenck, former leading man but now one of the best-known of screen character actors. Peter Lang, formerly a big vaudeville favorite, has a role commensurate with his ability. Another important role is entrusted to Grace Barton, for years a popular musical comedy favorite.

Marie Shotwell portrays the part of Mrs. Winthrop, a role worthy of her talents. Stuart Robson has a role of big opportunities. George Lessey and Frederick Radcliffe, well-known character artists, complete the roster.

Bookings Follow Prints on Pathe's "Fighting Cressy"

WITH the arrival of the prints on "Fighting Cressy" in the thirty-two Pathe exchanges throughout the country, there has been a great demand for the Blanche Sweet special produced by Jesse D. Hampton from the story by Bret Harte.

The combination of a great star in a story by a well known author cannot be denied by exhibitors, who are fully aware of the box office attractiveness of such an arrangement. The success of "Fighting Cressy" in its pre-release run in New York also has had a big influence in the demand created for the production, which is slated for release on January 11. Blanche Sweet, through "A Woman of Pleasure," further enhanced her reputation as a star of the first magnitude. Her reception by reviewers of "Fighting Cressy," was equally as cordial as the criticisms registered on "A Woman of Pleasure," particular attention being paid by critics to the strength of Bret Harte's story.

"Cressy" contains all the strength and virility of young America in the early western days without making the picture a rough-riding, shooting-up, commonplace wild west film. Robert Thornby directed the production. In the cast are Russell Simpson, Frank Lanning, Walter Perry, Edward Peil, Antrim Short, Pell Trenton, Billie Bennett and young Georgie Stone, the child who started his career several years ago as a mere baby in Griffith and Triangle productions.

Paul Brunet Says Serial Producing Will Attain Great Heights in 1920

SERIAL production, both as to quantity and quality, will reach undreamed of heights in 1920, according to Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"As a firm believer in the future of the motion picture serial, I can see only the greatest possibilities for this form of screen entertainment in the coming year," said Mr. Brunet. "The history of 1919 proves conclusively that the serial is really just beginning to come into its own. Far from being in the waning stage, it is growing rapidly in popularity among exhibitors and public alike.

"Pathe's serial plans for 1920 have been made in accordance with Pathe's belief in the future of serials. I can say without fear of overstating the facts that Pathe serials in 1919 sounded an entirely new note. They blazed the way for the type of production on which we are specializing for 1920.

Dempsey At Work.

"We have already announced Jack Dempsey, the heavyweight boxing champion of the world, as one of our stars for 1920. He is at present working on a fifteen-episode serial at the Brunton studio in Los Angeles.

"Another new Pathe stars is Juanita Hansen. Miss Hansen will arrive in New York immediately after the holidays to begin work on a serial which will be supervised by George B. Seitz.

"The Arthur F. Beck serial, 'The Isle of Jewels,' will be set for release soon. This has as its co-stars Stuart Holmes and Frances Mann.

"'The Third Eye,' the Louis J. Ganier serial co-starring Warner Oland and Eileen Percy, is near completion.

"Ruth Roland's new serial, 'The Adventures of Ruth,' the first from her own producing company was released and will run well into the new year."

Warners Close Many Sales on Selig's Animal Serial

A BIG deal has been closed by the Warner Brothers on the Selig wild animal serial, "The Lost City," with the Hatch Enterprises, involving rights to New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware and West Virginia.

Mr. Hatch, in commenting on the deal, said he considered himself lucky to get such a sure winner, and exhibited a letter from his representative in Philadelphia, stating that after a trade showing he signed up seventy theatres, which includes the Stanley Circuit, out of a possible ninety-three in that city.

The demand for territory is said to be beyond the fondest imagination of the Warner Brothers. Inquiries and letters are pouring in, not only from state-right buyers, but from first-run theatres.

C. R. Beacham, manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit of Atlanta, Ga., writes that he signed up a chain of theatres, which includes first-run theatres that never ran a serial before, and in closing the deal it was not necessary to give a trade showing, as the exhibitors stated that they heard so much about "The Lost City," that they would book it on its reputation. Mr. Beacham further states that it will be necessary to order extra prints to accommodate the bookings.

Twenty-four states have been sold. In addition to those acquired by the Hatch Enterprises, the First National Exhibitors Circuit of Atlanta, Ga., have the rights for Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Tennessee, North and South Carolina. The Arrow Film Corporation of Boston, Mass., the New England rights; the Standard Film Service Company of Cleveland, Ohio, has the Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky rights.

Charles L. Stephenson of Toronto bought the Canadian Rights. He called up Toronto on phone and booked "The Lost City" in sixteen large theatres.

Irwin Resigns from Famous Players-Lasky

WALTER W. IRWIN announced this week that he had resigned as vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In a statement December 23 to the trade press, Mr. Irwin said: "This is the second time I have resigned as vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The first occasion was last July, but by insistence and urging I was persuaded to withdraw it. This time, however, my resignation stands."

When questioned regarding his future activities, he said that he had just returned from a three-weeks' visit to the coast and expected at an early date to make a definite and interesting announcement to the trade.

It was in May of 1915 that Mr. Irwin stepped out of the active practice of law and incorporated the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., to handle the feature product of the four manufacturers, of which company he was general manager and treasurer. At once he introduced into the industry the open booking policy, under which were sold the pictures of each producer strictly according to their drawing power or box office value. However, in September of 1917, when the Vitagraph Company purchased the interests in the sales organization of the Lubin, Selig and Essanay Companies, Mr. Irwin, with but one brand of product to handle, introduced what was known as the rotary star system and which was thereafter followed by other companies under the designation of the star series system.

Likewise he introduced into the industry the first profit sharing and bonus systems, by which the employes shared in a definite percentage of the profits, and each branch organization also received a percentage of the gross proceeds over and above a given quota assigned to it.

It was in December of 1918 that Mr. Irwin resigned as general manager and treasurer of Vitagraph and became vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Triangle Will Release Two January Productions

TRIANGLE will do its bit to make the year 1920 the most prosperous in the film industry by releasing in January two promising productions, "The Clodhopper," with Charles Ray, and "A Gamble in Souls," with Dorothy Dalton and William Desmond. These stars have proved themselves to be profitable box office attractions and are the first of a series of "great stars in their greatest plays" which Triangle will release during 1920.

"The Clodhopper," written by Monte M. Katterjohn, author of "The Flame of the Yukon" which Triangle released November 23 and which had first runs in many of the largest houses throughout the country, is a Thomas H. Ince production. It is a story which shows Charles Ray at his best, for it permits that popular star to take the role of a farm boy, a role which gained him his greatest fame.

"A Gamble in Souls" is a red-blooded story of the battle between a girl of the San Francisco streets and a minister who are shipwrecked on a deserted isle. The battle between good and evil with ever powerful nature holding both individuals in its grip comprises a theme which tightly holds the spectator.

Secure Many First Runs on New Screen Magazine

PRACTICALLY every large city in the United States now has a picture theatre at which Universal's New Screen Magazine is a weekly feature. A canvass made by Hal Hodes, editor of the magazine, who has been visiting the principal cities of the middle west and the west writes from San Francisco that first runs have been landed in Denver, Chicago, Salt Lake, Butte, Seattle and San Francisco in the past several weeks. This added to the number which has been using the reel for the past year, gives the New Screen Magazine a record that is almost 100 per cent.

Chicago News Letter

by Jas. S. McQuade

Selig Now Directs Production for Selig Polyscope; Ltd., of England

JOHN G. WAINWRIGHT, of London, England, spent two days in Chicago last week, on his way home from Los Angeles, via New York. When I called on him at the Hotel La Salle, I had no inkling of the pleasant surprise that awaited me in the form of news in which the leading pioneer of America in the production of moving pictures figures largely.

Mr. Wainwright is a director of the new Selig Polyscope Company, Ltd., of England, which was organized during the closing days of August last, with a capital of £125,000 sterling. The managing director of the company is H. J. Boam, of London, who is widely known in English film circles.

Our old friend, William N. Selig, who is largely interested in the company, is general director of production for the organization. No films will be produced in England, as all the product will be made in America, under the personal supervision of Mr. Selig.

To Make Superfeatures Only.

The policy of the company confines production to superfeatures, founded on well-known novels and plays, to serials and one-reel animal pictures. The product will be released as new Selig specials in the British Isles, the United States, Canada and throughout the world, and will be handled in the United States and Canada by the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.

The first production, which is now under way at the Selig plant, Los Angeles, will be entitled "The Mask," adapted from the novel of that name by Author Hornung. Jack Holt and Hedda Nova appear in the leading roles and are supported by a carefully elected cast. It will be completed in about five weeks. Others to follow are "Kazan, the Dog Wolf," "The Kingdom of Slender Swords," from the book of that name, and a serial entitled "The Double Four," adapted from the book by Oppenheim. This serial will be in fifteen episodes, of two reels each.

Selig's Name Popular.

Mr. Wainwright's mission to Los Angeles was to press forward production at the new Selig studios, which have just been completed and where the most modern appliances, electric and otherwise, have been installed.

Mr. Wainwright informed the writer that the name of "Selig" still stands high throughout the entire trade in the British Isles, and that a large following are awaiting the first release of the new Selig Polyscope Co., Ltd. He emphasized the fact that this is the only English producing company in America that is making pictures with American directors, players and general studio staff.

Mr. Wainwright left for New York Saturday, December 20, and hopes to embark for England the first week in January.

December 8 Worst Week for Illinois Exhibitors

HARRY WEISS, co-manager with R. C. Seery, of First National's Chicago office, made a flying trip through Illinois the week of December 8, visiting all the larger exhibitors in the state. That was when the coal shortage threatened to close most of the picture theatres in Illinois.

W. N. Selig
General director of production for Selig Polyscope, Ltd., England.

In Rock Island, Moline and Morrison all amusement places were shut tight. In Rockford and Peoria exhibitors were cut down to six days, and about forty-five towns, of not over 2,000 inhabitants each, were on the verge of closing when the order went out to the miners to go back to work.

At Streator an amusing incident was noticed. There an exhibitor was ordered to close because he was out of coal. Across the street from his theatre was an empty lot, with an abandoned mine shaft. Here it should be stated that Streator is in the heart of the old northern Illinois mining district. With the aid of several boys and the use of screenings were salvaged from the old a few bushel baskets, enough coal shaft to make this exhibitor's theatre the coziest place in town.

At East St. Louis no lights and no heat were allowed in any theatre, and only one arc light was permitted in a street block. Yet, half a mile away, across the river, St. Louis was open in full blast, simply for the reason that it lay west of the Mississippi and in a different regional coal district.

Joe Erber, of the Erber Theatre, however, was equal to the emergency. He put on a double feature program and advertised the fact that patrons would save sixteen cents carfare to St. Louis by coming to his theatre. He packed the house so full that heat was unnecessary, while the solitary light in his box office shed its rays on a waiting crowd outside.

In the coal field district, in southern Illinois, exhibitors reaped a harvest. There the miners with their families attended the theatres in crowds. As a rule, however, excluding Chicago, the week was the worst for exhibitors ever experienced in the state. The weather, besides, was the coldest experienced in years, for that time of the year, the mercury registering twenty-five degrees below zero at Aurora, Freeport and Peoria.

Eastman Official Gives His Impressions of Los Angeles

GEORGE A. BLAIR, general manager of the Eastman Kodak Company, made a brief stay in the city last week on his return to Rochester after a visit to Los Angeles which lasted four weeks. During a conversation he stated that production in the western city is exceedingly heavy at present and that the outlook is most promising for an indefinite period.

Messrs. Zukor, Goldwyn and J. D. Williams were all in Los Angeles, evidently in connection with the formation of the "Big Seven" league of directors.

In his round of the studios, Mr. Blair was especially impressed by the extensive use of electric lights. He noticed that all interior sets, most of which were formerly made by sunlight, are now taken with artificial light. Another feature observed by him was the increase of new, artificially lighted stages —many of which are most spacious— now in course of construction, while quite a number are already completed. This system tends to greater photographic consistency, Mr. Blair states, from the fact that artificial light is always uniform; whereas a scene, part of which has been taken in the evening of one day and finished the following morning when the sunlight is greater or less in intensity, lacks uniformity. Besides, the waits occasioned by uncertain sunlight are eliminated, which means quite a saving of both time and money.

Mr. Blair was also strongly impressed by the increase in the number of release prints which are now being made in Los Angeles, thus assuring quicker service for western exhibitors.

Another feature that gripped his attention was the healthy condition of the exhibiting business. Every afternoon and evening, during his stay, it was the rule to see long lines of patrons awaiting their turn to enter their favorite theatre. The presentation of pictures in theatres visited by him bore distinctly the high quality mark, in which music was an important factor.

Stowell Leaves Estate of $17,000 to His Aunt

IT IS announced through unofficial channels that Mrs. Ella Rogers, an aunt of William Stowell Farr, who lives at 302 South Winchester avenue, Chicago, has been left an estate of $17,000 by her nephew, who met his death recently in a railroad accident in the Belgian Congo, South Africa, while engaged in a moving picture expedition for Universal and the Smithsonian Institute, New York.

The screen name of William Stowell Farr was William Stowell, under which he won wide popularity and much fame among moving picture fans and the film world generally.

Schaefer Gives House to Workers for New Year's Eve

CHARLES H. RYAN, manager of the Garfield Theatre, 2844 West Madison street, owned by Charles J. Schaefer, during a call last week gave the information that the popular boss of the Garfield had donated the use of the theatre to his house employes for New Year's eve. A high-class vaudeville show will be booked for the occasion by Joe Pilgrim, an old vaudeville manager long connected with the Academy of Music, who will also be stage director for the occasion.

Manager Ryan, who is a live advertiser, is sparing no pains to let every man, woman and youngster in the neighborhood know that the big benefit show is coming off. Muslin banners, posters, dodgers, mailing list and slides have all been pressed into lively service, so that the event may prove both successful and memorable.

The entire receipts will be distributed among the employes of the Garfield, it is announced.

Bee Hive President Plays Santa Claus to Wounded

R. C. CROPPER, president of the Bee Hive Exchange and of the Cropper Distributing Corporation, has played Santa Claus to the wounded soldiers at Fort Sheridan. Through William S. Otis, field director of the American Red Cross at Fort Sheridan, Mr. Cropper has donated two complete shows a week for one year, on Mondays and Wednesdays. The programs will be selected from current releases. Arrangements have been made by Mr. Otis to show the pictures also to the bedridden boys in the various wards by the use of portable machines, as well as to those able to get around to the gymnasium.

It goes without saying that a few thousand of Uncle Sam's brave soldiers wished Mr. Cropper a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Thomas R. Wilson Joins Typhoon Fan Co. Staff

THOMAS R. WILSON, who has been in charge of ventilation of the health department of the city of Chicago for many years, has joined the personnel of the Typhoon Fan Company in Chicago and will work with John P. Gleason, sales engineer, in this territory. Mr. Wilson is well known to Chicago exhibitors by reason of his long service for the city in ventilation matters, and he is thoroughly acquainted with all the requirements for the cooling and ventilation of theatres.

The company's office has just been opened in the Garrick Building, to meet a constantly increasing demand in the territory. Mr. Gleason has been Chicago representative for three years and is well known to the trade.

Playhouse Changes Ownership.

H. M. Smith, manager of The Playhouse, Michigan avenue, for A. G. Spencer, Inc., since its opening, a little over three months ago, has purchased the interests of Mr. Spencer, who will have no further connection with the management. Mr. Spencer's other business activities required so much of his time that it was impossible for him to devote the necessary attention to the interests of the house. The change of ownership took effect Monday, December 8,

Hill Leaves Famous Players.

Walter L. Hill, who has ably filled the position of publicity man for Famous Players-Lasky, in the Chicago office for several years past, and who has been doing fine work also in the exploitation field more recently, has resigned. Daniel Roche has succeeded Mr. Hill and henceforth will have entire charge of publicity and exploitation here.

F. P. Flanagan, special representative of the educational department of Famous Players-Lasky, has been doing intensive work recently among exhibitors in promoting interest in the new Paramount Industrial Digest, a one-reel feature.

Chaplin Comedy Big Success.

Charley Chaplin's latest comedy, "A Day's Pleasure," was released in Chicago by First National, Sunday, December 13, at the Randolph, and at the Rialto and McVickers, Monday, December 14. Aaron J. Jones states that it has been showing to extraordinary business in all three houses and that it will be shown exclusively in the Loop until January 11. On January 12 it will be released generally throughout the city.

DeKruif Writes for Robertson-Cole.

George E. DeKruif, who has had charge of publicity in Universal's Chicago office since Harry Rice left for New York, has resigned that position to become exploitation and publicity representative for the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, in its Chicago office, in the Consumers' Building. Mr DeKruif took up his new duties Monday, December 22. Max Levey, manager of the Robertson-Cole Chicago office, made the appointment.

Big "U" Comedians Visit Chicago.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran stopped over in Chicago December 18, on their way from New York to the Coast, where they will immediately start work on a series of comedy dramas, of five reels each, for Universal. They have just signed a long term contract for this work. These comedy dramas will be based on popular stories, familiar to the fiction reading public.

Jack Ford, Universal's director for Harry Carey, passed through the city last week for Los Angeles, where he will direct James J. Corbett in his coming picture, "Outdone."

Equity Disposes of Last Territorial Franchise

THE last territorial franchise for the productions of Equity Pictures Corporation was disposed of recently when T. E. Larson secured the rights for Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Missouri and left New York for the middle west to establish offices.

"Eyes of Youth" will be the first release. Offices are being opened now at Dallas, Kansas City and St. Louis with branches in other localities.

Mr. Larson has incorporated a new organization for the distribution of Equity productions which has been titled Peacock Productions Company, of which Mr. Larson will be general manager.

Mr. Larson has already secured the services of a number of well known film men who will be installed in his various exchanges as well as a number of salesmen of recognized ability and who have been associated with him before.

Mr. Larson's headquarters will be in the Majestic Theatre Building, Tulsa, Okla., but he will act in the capacity of general traveling manager and devote his personal attention to all contracted engagements in addition to offering co-operation and aid to exhibitors.

"Eyes of Youth" will be released by Peacock early in January.

Wilk Makes Many Sales on Brady and Warwick Films

JACOB WILK, who is handling a series of reissues of Alice Brady and Robert Warwick pictures, reports the sale of the following territorial rights: to M. Feitler, 414 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; to Reliance Film Exchange, Mather Building, Washington, D. C., for Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and District of Columbia.

The Alice Brady pictures include "Maternity," "The Trap," "A Woman Alone," "Darkest Russia," "The Dancer's Peril," "A Gilded Cage," "La Boheme," "The Rack," "The Divorce Game," "Spurs of Sybil," "Miss Petticoats," "A Self-made Widow," and "The Hungry Heart."

The Robert Warwick pictures include "Man of the Hour," "Stolen Voice," "Friday the 13th," "Human Driftwood," "The Man Who Forgot," "Family Honor," "The Face in the Moonlight," "All Man," "A Girl's Folly," "Sudden Riches," and "False Friend."

Boston Sees War Film.

The Boston Photoplay Company, which controls the rights to W. H. Productions Company's seven-reel feature, "The Lost Battalion," for the New England territory, held a special trade showing of this feature at Boston about a week ago. Exhibitors from every corner of the New England territory flocked to see this much discussed production. That they were not disappointed is manifested by the rapidity with which this production is reported as being booked. Bookings are solid, and far in advance, says the Boston Photoplay Company.

"In Old Kentucky" Ran on Stage for 27 Years

BECAUSE of the extensive publicity campaign behind the Louis B. Mayer production, in "In Old Kentucky," starring Anita Stewart and because the play on which the picture is founded has enjoyed a run of twenty-seven continuous years as a "legitimate" production, there is naturally a great deal of interest being manifested in the author, Charles T. Dazey.

The veteran actor, James O'Neill, produced Mr. Dazey's first regular play, "An American King." In quick succession he furnished plays to Newton Gotthold, Katie Putnam, Maggie Mitchell and others. Then came the production of "In Old Kentucky," which at once won a place in the popular heart it has never lost. Thereafter he wrote successful plays for many of our foremost stars, including May Robson, Nat Goodwin, Wilton Lackaye, W. H. Crane and others, besides writing a number of successful melodramas, such as "The War of Wealth," "The Suburban," "Home Folks" and others.

A few years ago Mr. Dazey became much interested in pictures and has since then written mainly for the screen. A long list of successes has come from his pen in this field. Among them may be mentioned: "Manhattan Madness," for Douglas Fairbanks, and "Wolf Lowry," for Bill Hart.

Harold Lloyd Introduces New Fun in Third Comedy

HAROLD LLOYD branches off into a new line of comedy endeavor in "From Hand to Mouth," third of his special $100,000 two-reel features distributed by Pathe, which will be released on December 28. In the first of his series Lloyd leaned more than ever toward a real story and in this offering he has even more plot.

Mildred Davis, Lloyd's new leading woman, makes her debut in two-reel productions in the third of the series. She is an ideal "opposite" for the young comedian, and from her work in "From Hand to Mouth" she should become a prime favorite. She is a beautiful girl, still in her teens, but talented.

Lloyd's originality in putting over and developing comedy "gags" was never more apparent than in "From Hand to Mouth." Snub Pollard assists Lloyd in the mirth making.

The advertising material on this comedy comprises everything that is of value to an exhibitor. A special combination broadside and press sheet is being issued by Pathe, in addition to special one, three and six sheets, and slide; also stock one, three and twenty-four sheets.

Birmingham Newspaper Has Column for Children Devoted to Pictures

MOTION picture theatres of Birmingham, Ala., with the co-operation of one of the leading daily papers of that city are getting some very excellent advertising and, what's more, are getting it virtually free of charge, through an arrangement that could easily be made in other cities.

The Birmingham Ledger every Sunday publishes a full page devoted to the children. There are pictures and stories dear to the hearts of the kiddies, but prominently featured on this page is a department devoted to the screen as it concerns the children. The caption over this department reads as follows:

"Mrs. Myrtle Trout Tells Children the Movies They Should See This Week."

Then across two columns is a letter addressed to the children by Mrs. Trout, and in this letter she tells the kiddies the pictures that would interest them and that are billed to show at the local theatres during the coming week.

Hammond Mainly Responsible.

Manager Hammond, of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises branch in Birmingham, is the one man mainly responsible for getting the Ledger to run such a department. Mrs. Trout is a prominent Birmingham club woman and her word means something. Her articles appeal directly to the children, dealing with the pictures that she knows would particularly interest them and that they can readily understand. Furthermore, these articles impress the parents favorably and create good will on the part of the grown folks toward the motion picture theatres. In addition to the articles, Mrs. Trout frequently addresses the social clubs on the same proposition.

From an advertising standpoint this plan is a dandy, and the Birmingham picture houses are now running in their advertising a sort of a trademark that has evolved from it—"Better Films For The Entire Family."

Picture Screen Goes Dark When Trolley Cars Pass

ALGONA, a village of several hundred inhabitants, including the police department, is located in the hills of Washington, between Seattle and Tacoma, and probably came into being after a landslide. Yet, in spite of the fact that even the interurban trains refuse to recognize its existence, and make no stop at Algona, the hamlet has its own motion picture theatre, and twice weekly shows are staged with Pathe heading the programs.

It is nothing unusual, on the face of it, for Algona to have its film palace—almost every town in the country has one—but it is the difficulties encountered and overcome by H. M. Leonard, owner of the theatre, that make it one of the wonders of filmdom.

In order to get electric current for the exhibition of his pictures, Mr. Leonard connects his wires with the third rail of the interurban line which carries 500 volts. Having no transformer, he uses a barrel of water for a rheostat, in which he has suspended a tire, taken from an old wagon wheel. Even with the high voltage he thus gains, the lights occasionally get rather dim, and, in order to increase the power, he chases out and drops a handful of rock salt in the barrel.

This is not his only difficulty with the light, however. When the interurban train passes the theatre, regardless of whether the villain in "The Thirteenth Chair" is about to strike down his victims, or the hero is about to rescue the pretty heroine from the Zulus in "A Woman of Pleasure," out go the lights entirely. After the train has passed, the connection is resumed.

Despite all these difficulties, Mr. Leonard manages to satisfy his audiences. He has almost succeeded in beating the railroad people by arranging his shows between trains. Mr. Leonard has no opposition and does not need to exploit his shows, for everyone in town knows "show night in Algona."

Effective Plan Book for "Penny Philanthropist"

THE firm of Willis & Eckels & Mack, Chicago, has just prepared for Arthur S. Hyman Attractions an unusually effective campaign book on "The Penny Philanthropist," starring Ralph Morgan and Peggy O'Neil, which will be released the first of the year.

This campaign book contains newspaper advertisements of real pulling power.

Knowing that the half tone ads very seldom print satisfactorily, the producers of the campaign book have made all their ads line drawings to guarantee perfect printing.

The newspaper stories in the book have also been written with the purpose of having them printed for every one are real newspaper stories.

This campaign book also contains points on the exploitation of the picture and a number of feature stories.

United Artists Executives Go On Business Tour, See 1920 as Big Year

HIRAM ABRAMS and Ralph O. Proctor of United Artists Corporation has left New York for a business tour of the country. They will visit the company's exchanges and meetings with exhibitors in all the important centers are looked forward to.

Mr. Abrams in the past, has always been in the closest possible touch with theatremen the country over and his frequent journeys and meetings with exhibitors have been most beneficial in maintaining a complete understanding of mutual problems.

This is the third tour Mr. Abrams and Mr. Proctor have made this year and they attach particular importance to it now that the independent open market policy of United Artists Corporation is in full operation.

To Discuss 1920 Plans.

In Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Denver, Minneapolis, and Kansas City, where United Artists Corporation have branch offices, sales conferences will be held and the plan for the coming year will be discussed.

"Theatres everywhere have been doing splendidly with open market productions," said Mr. Abrams prior to leaving New York, "and there is no doubt in our minds that the next year will find even greater business for the industry at large, and particularly greater prosperity for the exhibitor who directs his policy independently.

"Independent productions are assured in number that will be more than ample to supply the theatres of the country and because these independent producers are marketing their product solely on a basis of merit, a higher quality of pictures is assured.

"The public is interested in but one thing today—better pictures. The theatre exhibitor wants but one thing—better pictures—sold to him on an equitable basis.

"The independent producer, therefore, is left only one thing to do—make the best pictures he knows how.

"The great number of independent producers in the field at the opening of 1920, is assurance in itself, that a free and open market is going to bring to the motion picture industry, the year of its greatest prosperity."

Residential Brooklyn to Have Large Fox Theatre

WILLIAM FOX, president of Fox Film Corporation, will soon build the largest theatre in Brooklyn, representing an expenditure of more than $1,000,000. This announcement is made by Mr. Fox through A. S. Kempner, real estate representative of the Fox Theatrical Enterprises.

Mr. Fox has just purchased a plot of ground on the east side of Flatbush avenue between Tilden avenue and Beverly road, at the corner of Duryea place, one of the best residential parts of the Flatbush district. He will erect a handsome playhouse with a seating capacity of 3,500. The size of the structure can be appreciated when it is considered that the seating capacity of the Brooklyn Academy of Music is 2,207.

The Flatbush avenue entrance will have a magnificent lobby. The auditorium proper will be 110 feet wide and 200 feet deep. Plans for the new structure have been drawn by Thomas W. Lamb. They will be completed before January 1, 1920.

The new playhouse will be the seventh theatre in Brooklyn and vicinity controlled by William Fox. The others are the Bedford, Folly, Bay Ridge, Comedy, Ridgewood and Jamaica. In the Bronx Mr. Fox is erecting a $1,000,000 structure which will have a seating capacity of 4,500.

Fox Film Corporation will soon move into its new home office and studio building, covering a block at Tenth avenue and Fifty-fifth street, New York.

"Carmen" to Have Unique Showing in Washington

THE Exhibitors Film Exchange. Harry Crandall's organization, which recently purchased from Victor Kremer the four reel Chaplin reissue "A Burlesque On Carmen," will present this comedy in an unusual manner in the near future in conjunction with a well known stage comedian who will offer an impersonation of Chaplin, together with a premiere Spanish dancer. The show will also embrace a short prologue in which several performers will appear. A special comedy dialogue has been written for the prologue and the song number "Carmen" will be a feature of this introduction.

This production will be placed in rehearsal shortly under the direction of Abe Dresner, manager of the Exhibitors Film Exchange. The premiere will be given at one of the leading Crandall theatres in Washington.

Cummins Offers Melodramas.

Samuel Cummins, of the Longacre Building, New York City, has arranged to dispose of forty-five well known melodramas, which have been on the American stage for more than twenty-five years, for motion picture production.

Christmas "House Organ" Reflects "Pathe Spirit"

TO print so good a house organ as the Pathe Sun with regularity is, in itself, an accomplishment. But to cap that "grind" with a Christmas issue of surpassing beauty and effectiveness is an achievement. So good a judge of human nature as Paul Brunet must realize, without our telling him, that in Editor Frank V. Bruner he has a "find."

This much is said while a fellow catches his breath, after looking through its pages, and tries to assemble expressions to use in describing the Christmas Sun by written word as weak substitute for the actual reproduction of the work. The "Pathe Spirit" seems to be an impulse begetting real service, for it fairly bubbles forth in every line of the Christmas Sun.

Heavy tinted paper, with green borders of holly and mistletoe linking King Christmas into every page, forms a setting for written expressions from individuals who speak as from their own likenesses; group pictures that illustrate the membership of every Pathe branch office and an assemblage of special articles by Pathe leaders. The "make up" is artistic; typographically the work is beyond criticism.

Pathe Sun goes only to Pathe employes. The outsider seldom gets a "peek" at it. On such occasions—when we were outside looking in—we can see "the works" and admire the leadership that makes the Pathe organization such a composite of effectiveness.

From top to bottom of the commercial structure Pathe employes speak out and speak in community chorus of happiness in employ, appreciation of effort and determination to swap their level best for their financial recompense. The pictured assemblages show bright and happy men and women; the text pages tell in their own words why Pathe is a power in pictures.

Pathe Sun is typographical expression of an enthusiastic pay-roll. It represents a Christmas spirit spread over a twelvemonth.

Baptist Clergy Splits on Question of Church Shows

BAPTIST clergymen of Boston are divided over the question of introducing moving pictures into their churches. The matter was threshed out at a meeting of the ministers. The screen had many defenders. The loudest opponent was the Rev. G. R. Maguire, pastor of the Ruggles Street Baptist Church, who exclaimed: "I do not doubt for one moment the educational value of the motion pictures and the part they are playing in amusing the people. But the people are getting 'movie' crazy. Don't let us get that germ into our Sunday services."

Several speakers replied that moving pictures were already playing a leading part in Sunday services in New England and that their drawing power could not be minimized.

Arrange Pittsfield Showing.

A special big showing is being arranged for the W. H. Productions Company feature now being released on the state rights markets, "The Lost Battalion," at Pittsfield, Mass., the home town of Lt. Colonel Charles W. Whittlesey, commander of the famous battalion, who has re-enacted in this production, together with the other survivors of that famous episode, the actual story of the momentous fight. It is being arranged that Major General Robert Alexander, commander of the Seventy-seventh Division, be present during the showing.

A special exploitation and commemoration week is planned in Pittsfield in honor of their hero, and exchangemen and exhibitors from every section of the country are keeping their eyes on this big Pittsfield event.

Selznick Prides Himself on Good Supporting Casts

A BRIDGE might have a beautiful roadbed but without good supporting trusses it would be unsafe and useless. The same principle may be applied to a screen play—it may have a good star, but without a good supporting cast it is bound to fail, or be so weak that it will fail to please the public.

With this idea in mind, Lewis J. Selznick, within the last year or so, has gathered around the Selznick stars a competent aggregation of supporting players. With these players Selznick productions are assured of success in that each and every individual is fitted for his or her part and gives to the star the support necessary to make a perfect production. Practically every Selznick supporting player has a reputation or is especially suited to the parts he or she is given.

In support of Elaine Hammerstein in "The Woman Game" are two of the screen's best-known leading women and stars, Florence Billings and Ida Darling. Others in "The Woman Game" are Jere Austin, Lewis Broughton, Charles Eldridge, Lawrence Johnson, James Morrison, George Dupree, Betty Plum, Hugh Wynne and Phillips Tead, all of whom have had prominent parts in stage and screen productions. Seena Owen, Katherine Perry, Clifford Gray, Amy Dennison, Edward Brennan and Jane Carlton support Owen Moore in "Who's Who," a new Selznick production.

Supporting Olive Thomas in "Glorious Youth" are such well known players as Crauford Kent, Charles Craig, Helen Gill, Hugh Huntley, Eugene Woodward, Florida Kingsley and Pauline Dempsey.

This list of players has been named to substantiate Mr. Selznick's statement that the best supporting players obtainable are cast in Selznick productions. Of the players mentioned few have been appearing in pictures less than two years, and the majority of them have been screen lights for several years.

Rich Joins Metro's Scenario Staff.

H. Thompson Rich, former editor of The Forum, is the newest addition to the Screen Classics., Inc, scenario staff, which is now composed of seven continuity writers. Mr. Rich has arrived at the Metro studios in Hollywood from New York. Mr. Rich has been associated with Vitagraph.

Rights to Johnny Dooley Comedies Acquired by Tyrad Pictures, Inc.

THE Johnny Dooley Film Comedies announce the signing of contracts whereby the entire world rights comedies have been acquired by Tyrad Pictures, Inc. The comedies will be sold on the state rights basis, and the first comedy will be released January 15. Four pictures are already completed and the present schedule calls for a two-reel comedy release every month.

"Two independent purposes were responsible for our decision to place our comedies through Tyrad Pictures for state rights distribution," said C. L. Bach, president of the Johnny Dooley Comedies. "After looking over both the program and the independent distribution organizations, we felt that in arranging for an independent distribution of our comedies in this manner, we have afforded those exhibitors who want to book a high class, high speed series of comedies an opportunity to get it through a channel that will give them the best possible service and the greatest satisfaction."

Have Well Known Players.

Such players as Sophie Tucker, Martha Mansfield, and Gilda Gray will be seen with Johnny Dooley in his first screen offering, "Some Mind Reader," which will be released January 15.

The stories on which the comedies are based are the Bide Dudley stories which appeared under the general title of the "Office Force" and were published in the New York Evening World and syndicated to over 100 of the leading newspapers throughout the United States.

Various leading women will be used in the succeeding comedies, being selected from the standpoint of beauty as well as suitability to type. Lillian Hall will be seen in an early release as will also Martha Mansfield and several famous beauties now being featured in Broadway productions.

Another feature will be the Folly beauty brigade which consists of twenty New York's most beautiful show girls and are recruited from a famous New York review. These girls will be seen in every picture.

Buyers Show Interest in "The Blindness of Youth"

SCORES of inquiries from territorial buyers in all parts of the country are being received daily by Murray W. Garsson, general manager of the Foundation Film Corporation, who soon will place at the disposal of state right buyers the first of a series of productions, "The Blindness of Youth."

The picture is virtually complete, it is stated and announcement of the initial trade showing will be made shortly.

That independent distributors favor society plays, particularly a story of modern society life, is indicated by the demand created for "The Blindness of Youth." This also proves that the form of advertising directed exclusively toward the exhibitor, which Mr. Garsson has inaugurated, is earning the favor of the territorial buyers.

The publicity and advertising work, which is being conducted for the purpose of paving the way for both the state rights buyers and the exhibitor, will be continued throughout the time the various independent buyers are carrying on their sales campaign.

A press book, containing all conceivable kinds of advertising and publicity helps for the exhibitor, is in the process of manufacture.

Various other kinds of exploitation aids will be at the call of exhibitors, including post cards, stickers, booklets, unique lobby displays and an excellent assortment of posters of all sizes.

Film Exchange Building Completed in Kansas City

THE culmination of a comprehensive plan on the part of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry for lowering fire hazards through erection of specially built film exchange buildings in important exchange centers throughout the country has about been reached. During the past week negotiations have been practically closed by representatives of the association for buildings valued at approximately $3,000,000. It has been only a few days since the roof was placed on the first film structure to be finally completed under the provisions of the association's plan, the $500,000 structure erected in Kansas City.

The Kansas City building has twelve stories and about 5,000 square feet of space on each floor. Ten member companies of the association have agreed to take space in the building.

Another big building proposition the association committee took up was at Cleveland, where a $1,500,000 proposition for a building has been accpted. After two years of agitation it now looks as if something definite will be done about getting a modern, fireproof film exchange building in Chicago. Its location is on North Clark and Kinzie streets.

Pathe Has Art Poster on "Spirit of the Dance"

PATHE will introduce an innovation in short subjects exploitation, when, beginning with the anniversary number of the Pathe Review, to be released January 18, an art one-sheet poster will be issued with each release of the screen magazine.

The poster, in six colors, will be based on Julian Ollendorff's "Spirit of the Dance" series, which also will be inaugurated with this number. The art work for each poster, made by Mr. Ollendorff himself, will be an exact reproduction of the drawing from which the dance in the current issue of the Review originated.

To make the poster more valuable from an exploitation angle aside from the beauty of the drawings and the colors, Pathe will give a description of each dance on each issue of the one sheet. It will also designate the music accompanying the staging of the dance, which Pathe is issuing to exhibitors.

Mr. Ollendorff's "Spirit of the Dance" series will be inaugurated with "Eve" and "The Modern Jazz" as the contrasting subjects. "Eve" will be interpreted by Mme. Desiree Lubovska, while Pat Rooney, assisted by Lillian Fermoyle, will give the version of the modern jazz.

Williams in Role of Novelist.

Vitagraph has just released "When a Man Loves," with Earle Williams in the leading role. The story is an interesting one and concerns the English aristocracy, a real girl and a real man, and a designing society mother. This time Mr. Williams does not play the part of a rich business man, or a French-Canadian trapper, but the role of a titled novelist who goes from England to Japan seeking material for a novel.

Barbara Tennant and Margaret Loomis are the two principal women in the cast. The story was written by Florine Walz Williams and H. H. Van Loan and directed by Chester Bennett.

Coal Shortage and Bleak Weather Play Havoc in Pacific Northwest

THE coal situation in the Pacific Northwest, together with the lowest temperature that has been known in this section for years, is playing havoc with the motion picture business in nearly all parts of the territory except the Coast cities. With the coming of Montana's usual below-zero winter weather, theatres were ordered closed in Billings and numbers of smaller towns.

About the same time bleak weather descended upon Idaho, and theatres in some parts where the coal shortage was severest had to operate on part time. Many of those in the smaller towns cut down the number of show days. Spokane and the surrounding territory was the next to be hit. The theatres in the eastern Washington city were put on a six-hour schedule and the city officials have been unable to guarantee the rescinding of the order for any certain date.

A Regular Down-Easter.

The last straw was when a regular "down-east" blizzard descended upon the coast slope of Oregon and southern Washington during the second week in December, blocking county roads, railroads and even city streets. The street car service in Portland was stopped for twenty-four hours and managers of theatres hastily "pulled" big features that they had booked for the remainder of the week. Trains were several hours late, causing various mix-ups in the arrival of film. Some towns that can be reached only by stage were entirely shut off because of the blocking of the roads, so that films could not be sent in for a week.

At this writing, December 17, the film exchanges of Seattle are receiving wires almost hourly, either asking that all service be cancelled until advised or requesting the curtailment of service, or asking for the less important features with which to fill in the dull time.

Cameraman Adds Realism to George Walsh Picture

IN "The Shark," the William Fox melodramatic production starring the athletic George Walsh, Director Dell Henderson has secured some great "shots" aboard a three-masted schooner chartered by Mr. Fox. Mr. Henderson, a former Griffith director, has brought to the Fox directorial staff some distinct personal touches of realism and artistic effect, and Joe Ruttenberg vouches for the photography.

For five years Ruttenberg has cranked the camera for William Fox with such directors as R. A. Walsh, "Bing" Thompson, Bill Nighe, James Vincent, and Oscar Lund. He has taken all sorts of chances, but in "The Shark," on location in the blue waters outside of Tampa, Ruttenberg extended himself beyond the expectations of even Henderson.

When Walsh went to the topmast of the schooner Ruttenberg was up there, too, with his camera. When Walsh went out on the bowsprit, there was Ruttenberg with his camera. When the star went over the side, Ruttenberg was hanging to a heavy plank extending out over the blue-green swell.

Joseph Ruttenberg has done much to advance the photography of motion pictures, and is constantly after new effects, many of which he has developed in "The Shark." Careful, steady and sure, he goes about his duties with equal calm, whether on the studio floor or lashed to a spar high above the deck of a sea-going steamer.

Chicago Hamilton Club Indorses Realart Picture

THE Hamilton Club, of Chicago, has gone on record as officially indorsing "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production. The Mayflower feature has been privately screened for the members of the social organization, and will soon have its opening at a Chicago motion picture theatre.

In its membership of fifty thousand, the Hamilton Club has former governors and prominent professional and business men of Chicago. An example of the type of entertainment which big men seek for their leisure hours, "Soldiers of Fortune" not only drew one of the largest attendances for motion pictures at the Chicago Club, but Mr. Roderick Ross, who picked this feature for his committee, has received letters commending his choice.

Sennett's Latest Comedy Is Based on Prohibition

MACK SENNETT'S latest comedy production, scheduled for release December 21, deals with a timely subject and gives the exhibitors an opportunity for special exploitation.

The picture deals with prohibition. The subject is two thousand feet in length and is full of fun from start to finish.

For those who are not familiar with the term "speak-easy," we can best explain by calling it a "blind-pig." Charlie Murray, the proprietor of a hotel and a blind-pig at the same time, plays the lead. The supporting cast is Marie Prevost, Fanny Kelly, Garry Odell, Kalla Pasha and Eddie Gribbon.

The various stunts and methods used in getting in and out of Charlie's cellar will keep the audience laughing.

Hortense Saunders Joins Selznick.

Hortense Saunders, for several years special feature writer for the Cleveland Press, has resigned from that position and has become associated with the Selznick publicity department in New York City, under Lee Kugel, director of publicity.

Miss Saunders, besides having been a feature writer for the Cleveland Press, was in charge of the motion picture section of that publication, and in that capacity obtained a wide experience in the writing of interesting motion picture news. In her new position on the Selznick staff she will write articles especially interesting for the women's page of many publications, including the film magazines.

Picture Distorted When Projected on Concave Screen; Other Faults

OTTO HEHN, who has in his hands for exploitation in the United States the concave screen invented by Professor J. Louis Pech, of France, recently gave a practical demonstration of the screen at the Rialto Theatre. This demonstration was, due it is said to an error in the curvature, a flat failure. Later another demonstration was arranged at the Rivoli, at which a goodly number of invited ones were present.

The screen consists of a cloth sheet, probably specially treated, laced into a wooden frame in such manner that what purports to be a scientifically correct curvature, with relation to the objective, is obtained. This, it is claimed, gives a perfectly flat field, removes eye strain and sharpens definition, all of which would be highly desirable if attained and attained without setting up other equally bad faults.

The writer watched the performance of the screen for probably an hour. There being no audience present, except interested ones such as himself, he was at liberty and did move about freely so as to view results from various parts of the house.

Picture Somewhat Distorted.

It so happened that the day before he had attended the performance at the Rivoli, at which the same subject was run as was used for the demonstration. The picture was, it seemed to him, considerably improved at the demonstration, in that it was more brilliant and "stood out" better. He afterward found out, however, that while the subject was identical, a new print was used at the demonstration, which might, or might not have considerable effect. Just how much of the brilliancy and added depth was due to the curvature and how much to the character and newness of the surface itself we could not judge, there being no basis for comparison.

We did, however, find a decidedly objectionable tendency to distortion of the picture outline, which gave the effect of distortion to the picture itself, though the latter was not apparently present in fact.

All that we are able to report from the demonstration is that the sponsor of the screen will have to show us considerably more than was shown at the demonstration before we could conscientiously recommend it as against the present types of flat screen. Sorry, but facts are facts, and demonstrations should NOT be undertaken until those making them are in position to show the thing in perfect form. This last remark is brought forth by reason of the excuses made that the installation was not perfect, and that the outline distortion could be eliminated. Well, if so, then why was it not done before we were called in to pass judgment? And there you are.

RICHARDSON.

Connecticut Men Claim Have Invented New Screen

CLAIMING to be the originator of the vari-colored and stereoptic screen, Dr. Henry McManus, vice-president and founder of the Eureka Screen Company, which was incorporated in Hartford, Conn., two years ago, has conferred with the United States district attorney in that city regarding a possible application for an injunction against D. Louis Pech, of France, who on December 19 exhibited in New York City a stereoptic screen which he says possesses the third dimension.

Dr. McManus said that his company, of which William H. Currie, of New York, is president, is amply protected by eight patents issued during the last three years, and that the so-called third-dimension screens are now in use at the Circle, Plaza and Daly's picture theatres and in other cities. The foreign rights were recently bought by Colonel L. G. Wainwright, of the Cinema Company, of London, which plans, it is said, to place the screens in France.

The Connecticut experimenters took up the color problem, in the solving of which they say they finally evolved the third-dimension feature through a concave surface.

"A Woman in Grey," Serico Producing Corporation's new fifteen episode serial, starring Arline Pretty with Henry G. Sell, is said to have more than the usual amount of serial thrills. Each episode end is said to have a fitting climax, and Miss Pretty or Mr. Sell are called upon several times for one of those dangerous stunts.

Our New Year's Present to Gladys Leslie and Earle Williams Who Star Here in "The Midnight Bride" and "The Fortune Hunter."

Special Committee on Censorship To Meet in New York in January

THE first sessions of a special committee selected by the State Conference of Mayors, which is expected to become a sort of a steering committee of motion picture legislation with the opening of the legislature on January 1, will be held in New York City on Thursday and Friday, January 15 and 16. This announcement was made on December 23 by W. P. Capes, of Albany, secretary of the State Conference of Mayors, who will serve in a similar capacity with the committee.

Coincident with the dates of the first session, Secretary Capes, acting for Mayor Walter R. Stone, of Syracuse, president of the conference, made known the fact that the committee has at last been completed.

John Gilchrist, commissioner of licenses of New York City, whom it was hoped would represent first class cities on the committee, has declined. R. Andrew Hamilton, of Rochester, commissioner of public safety of that city, has been selected for a place on the committee. The other new members are Dr. Everett D. Martin, of New York, who will represent the National Board of Review; Mrs. Howard Ganz, of New York, representing the Federation of Child Study, and James P. Holland, of New York, president of the State Federation of Labor, who will look after labor's interests on the committee.

Tentative Program Announced.

Thus the committee, in addition to the above, includes Mayor Palmer Canfield, of Kingston, as chairman; Walter W. Nicholson, Syracuse; A. K. Smith, New York; Gabriel L. Hess, New York; Walter Hayes, Buffalo; Rex Beach, Ardsley-on-the-Hudson; the Rev. Charles G. Judkins, Glen Falls; Mrs. W. D. Spalding, Schenectady; Peter N. Brady, New York, and Miss Mary Grey Peck, Geneva.

The tentative program of the first sessions calls for a day to be spent with one or more of the big producing concerns in order that members of the committee clearly may understand how pictures are produced, and then later on in the day they will show how a picture is reviewed and any objectionable feature eliminated by the National Board of Review. The second day will be given over to a general discussion, out of which it is expected will develop a line of action which will largely determine exactly how much legislation there will be along motion picture lines from January 1 on.

Committee Has Power.

The committee just announced has in its power the recommending of legislation along censorship lines, if it determines that there is now imperative need of such in this state. In Albany, among those close to the situation, it is generally conceded that there will be a number of bills introduced along censorship lines. In all probability, however, there will be none framed which does not have the committee sanction.

Letters will be sent out as soon as a place of meeting has been settled on, inviting members of the committee to the first sessions on January 15 and 16.

"Some Nerve" Sells Fast.

Practically the entire country has been sold on "Some Nerve," the first of the series of special Charlie Chaplin single-reel comedies which are being released on the state rights market by Tower Film Corporation.

The following territories have already been disposed of: New York City, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Virginia, Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, northern Illinois, Texas, California, Arizona, Nevada, Hawaii, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Canada.

G K. Howard Is Elected By Baltimore Operators

Kingston Howard; first vice-president, William Evans; second vice-president, John Bedford; third vice-president, William George; financial secretary and treasurer, Lawrence Cannatella; recording secretary, N. Basil Morgan; sergeant-at-arms, John Grauling; board of trustees, Arthur Stewart, chairman, Charles Grauling and John Grauling; delegates to Baltimore Federation of Labor, M. Basil Morgan, Arthur Stewart, William George; alternates, G. Kingston Howard and Lawrence Cannatella; delegates to Maryland State and District of Columbia Federation, G. Three Keystone Comedies Are Scheduled for January

THREE Mack Sennett Keystone comedies, featuring some of the greatest comedians ever seen on the screen. have been marked for release the first three weeks in January by Triangle. These are part of a series which Triangle will issue, showing box office favorites in plays in which they acquired their stardom. Many of these comedies contain the original Mack Sennett bathing girls, the Keystone cops, and such stars as Mabel Normand, Fatty Arbuckle, Ford Sterling, Syd Chaplin, Mack Swain, Chester Conklin, Charlie Murray, Mack Sennett and Louise Fazenda.

"A Lunch Room Romance," a one-reel Mack Sennett Keystone comedy with Mabel Normand, Fatty Arbuckle and Ford Sterling, will be released January 4. "Only a Farmer's Daughter," a two-reel Keystone, with Louise Fazenda and Charlie Murray, will be available to exhibitors January 11. On January 18, "Mabel's Speed Cop," a one-reel Mack Sennett Keystone comedy, will be released by Triangle.

"Water, Water, Everywhere."

William R. Lighton's delightful "Billy Fortune" stories have found a screen hero worthy of them in Will Rogers. These stories, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, will be picturized by Goldwyn. The first to find its way to the screen is "Water, Water, Everywhere," taken from Mr. Lighton's "A Hard Proposition."

Clarence Badger has directed the new Rogers picture and Marcel Le Picard was the photographer. In the supporting cast are Irene Rich, Rowland Lee, Wade Boteler, Marguerite Livingston, Lillian Langdon, and that incomparable comedienne, Lydia Yeamans Titus.

"The Flame of the Yukon" Runs Three Days in Denver

"THE FLAME OF THE YUKON," Triangle's recreated production featuring Dorothy Dalton, concluded a three day's run at the Princess Theatre, Denver, under unusual circumstances. T. A. Sullivan, manager of the Princess, sensing a demand for the Dorothy Dalton feature, sought the advice of some of his fellow exhibitors, asking whether it would pay to shelve a first run feature of another company to run the Triangle production.

Mr. Sullivan finally did so and advertised the picture heavily. Quarter-page space was taken in the Denver press and billboards were used extensively.

On the conclusion of the run Mr. Sullivan wired the Triangle home office as follows: "Dorothy Dalton in 'The Flame of the Yukon' went over big. Sorry we could not run it longer."

Everybody Interested.

Special Features Company, of Knoxville, Tenn., which controls the rights to "Everybody's Business" for North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, the six-reel feature being released on the state rights market by W. H. Productions Company, reports that great interest is being manifested by the exhibitors in this big feature.

Thomas Mott Osborne Chose to Tell Story in Photoplay

THOMAS MOTT OSBORNE has has found his way at last to the stage and his first route in spite of flattering offers from spoken play producers has been via the screen, which he believes is the only way in which great vital truths can be brought to the attention of a public. With the advent of screen productions written by notable authors the moving picture theatre is proving a greater magnet than ever for theatregoers. Mr. Osborne appears in his own story, "The Gray Brother," which Edward A. MacManus has given a massive production, and which was directed by Sidney Olcott. It is a romantic narrative of the underworld in which Mr. Osborne has taken a life long interest. Mr. MacManus has made a thrilling visualization of what Mr. Osborne has written and he reveals some of the cruelties that existed under the "old system" of prison management, such as the flogging and stringing up of inmates with the dark cell as the aftermath. Those who have had the privilege of seeing the picture say that it is one of the most startlingly real productions ever conceived for the screen. The steadfastness of a woman's love for a "lifer" is ideally woven into the story, with a pardon and happiness at the end.

Dealings in the Open Market

Conducted by C. S. Sewell

Burston Says "The Hawk's Trail" is First Serial De Luxe and Tells Why

IN the elaborate advertising campaign already launched Louis Burston, president of Burston Films, Inc., presenting the fifteen-episode serial, "The Hawk's Trail," lays special stress on the line "The first serial de luxe." In explanation of this Mr. Burston says: "I hope that the line will be taken for its face value. It is more than an advertising slogan. It is a statement of fact that has cost me many thousands of dollars, months of the hardest sort of effort, and I believe from what has been said about this King Baggot picture by those who have seen it, that I am entitled to have that line accepted as I have stated.

"This serial in which King Baggot is starring is the third serial I have produced and released in a little over 14 months. The first two with Francis Ford were very successful, but along more standardized lines. When I looked over the script of "The Hawk's Trail" and completed my cast I realized that I had an opportunity I have been seeking for a long time. In the first place, the hero is a man of wealth and refinement. That he is a scientific criminologist by avocation and for pleasure rather than the old time Hawkshaw, whose vocation is man-hunting, gave King Baggot an opportunity too.

"A feature of the plot is the assumption by King as "the Hawk" of many disguises, one of which is that of a high caste Chinese. Here was another opportunity for lavish settings and the high class atmosphere. Another high class character is that of Bob, the son of the crook, who, college bred and accustomed to the refinement of wealth, is in blissful ignorance of his father's true character.

"The most startling innovation of my serial de luxe,' however, is the avoidance of punch endings in the sense that they leave the hero or the heroine suspended in midair, or bound to a railroad track, etc. Having a particularly high class company with a plot that promised plenty of chance for swift action, I determined to give the serial fans a surprise. This I did by securing my episode suspense through the plot action rather than by means of interpolated stunts.

Montague Love Engaged for "The Place of Honeymoons"

MONTAGUE LOVE, who finished up with the latest Grace Davison picture last week, was immediately engaged to appear in the leading role of "The Place of Honeymoons," the new production in which Emily Stevens is being starred by the Pioneer-Atlas interests.

Mr. Love's role is that of a globe trotting American millionaire, who becomes the central figure in a romance involving two rival grand opera prima donnas, an English Earl and high officials of the diplomatic service in France and America.

Production on "The Place of Honeymoons" is already under way at the Atlas Studio in Newton, Mass. Six sets were built in telescope fashion so that as soon as the first scene had been taken, the setting could be taken down and the next interior would be in readiness. The plan has worked to the full satisfaction and has saved several days.

As soon as the studio work is finished the company, headed by Director Keenan Buel, will go South for a few weeks to take the exteriors. The schedule under which the company is working calls for a completed picture by March first.

"Sky-Eye" Not a Serial.

Due to a mistaken impression that "Sky-Eye," the aviation picture being distributed by Sol Lesser, is a serial, the organization takes this means of stating that it is a feature production in six reels. This picture really has enough thrills and love interest to make a serial, and was one of the most hazardous ever attempted.

National Reorganizes Scenario Department

THE scenario department of the National Film Corporation has been completely reorganized, L. V. Jefferson, a specialist in adapting books for the screen, is the new editor. Harry Wulze, who wrote Keystone comedies when that firm was first organized, has charge of the comedy continuity, while Mrs. Alma L. Jackson is reader. Mr. Jefferson adapted Zane Grey's "Desert of Wheat" and Opie P. Read's "The Kentucky Colonel" for the screen.

Heavy Demand Reported by Alperstein for Allgood Serial "The Whirlwind"

NEVER in the history of serials has there been such a demand as exists today, says A. Alperstein, general manager of All Good Pictures Corporation. Since our announcement we have been deluged with inquiries for territory, terms, prices etc., on "The Whirlwind," featuring Charles Hutchison.

Among the inquiries received are letters telling of certain houses now running a different serial as often as four and five nights a week, and some running a chapter of a different serial every night.

"That 'The Whirlwind' will surpass in thrills and stunts our former offering, 'The Great Gamble,' released by Pathe, is proven by the stunts performed by Charles Hutchison, whose recklessness and daring are beyond description," says Mr. Alperstein.

"Entirely new action, with thrills bound to make the blood of the most calloused tingle," is the way Allgood describes their new offering. "The Whirlwind" was written and produced by Joseph A. Golden, producer of "The Great Gamble." Mr. E. S. Manheimer is the foreign sales representative. The main offices of the Allgood Pictures Corporation are in the Longacre Building, New York.

Film Rejuvenates Tuneful Waltz.

"Alma Where Do You Live?" the tuneful waltz number in the comedy of the same title, is enjoying rejuvenation in many sections of the country through its use in connection with the showing of the picture, "Alma Where Do You Live?" The photoplay is being presented with the addition of a cast of principals and chorus, song numbers and incidents from the play being interpolated into the action of the screen story. Monopol Pictures Company control the "Alma" film, exploiting it on a state rights basis.

Lessy's Exchange to Open About Middle of January

AT the first conference of the managers of the Eastern Pioneer Exchanges, Michael Lessy, head of the Screenart Pictures, which is to handle the Pioneer attractions in the District of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia, stated that his office would be in working order by the fifteenth of January. The delay which held up the Screenart's entry into the Capitol City was occasioned by the shortage of exchange space.

Advantage of Vogue for the Occult Taken in New "Master Mind" Serial

JOHN W. GREY, president of Supreme Pictures, Inc., announces that his new "Master Mind" serial will take advantage of the present craze for the occult.

"This vogue," says Mr. Grey," is the aftermath of the war in literature and drama. Why not in pictures? That is the question that occurred to me and was confirmed by Arthur B. Reeve, associated with me.

"We secured the services of J. Robert Pauline, well known as a demonstrator of hypnotic power.

"From the start we have handled hypnotism on the highest plane.

"In some instances in pictures attempts have been made to portray hypnotism as an agent of evil. In the 'Master Mind' we use this great force of mind for the good and uplift of humanity, teaching a valuable lesson while we tell a thrilling story.

"Hypnotism is extensively used in Europe in treating disease, and it is rapidly finding its way into practice in this country. In our first episode we show the great things that can be accomplished by the human mind, including hynotism as a substitute for anaesthesia. Other episodes show wonderful cures effected by it. Our filming of scenes has secured the endorsement of some of the most progressive doctors and scientists."

All-Kentucky Cast for "The Kentucky Colonel"

AN "all Kentucky" cast was chosen for the National Film Corporation's newest production, "The Kentucky Colonel," a screen version of Opie P. Read's well known novel of the same name. Joseph J. Dowling, who played the Patriarch in "The Miracle Man," and who has the title role in "The Kentucky Colonel," was born in Lexington; Francis McDonald, the juvenile lead, in Bowling Green; Elinor Field, the daughter, in Paducah, and Lloyd Bacon, in the heavy, in Covington. L. V. Jefferson, who adapted the book for the screen, is a Louisville product.

National Sells "Hearts and Masks."

The National Film Corporation of America, through its production manager, I. Bernstein, announces that the rights to "Hearts and Masks," a six reel comedy drama, have been sold to Fred Gage. "Hearts and Masks," which was taken from the book by Harold McGrath, was the last big picture filmed by the National in the 1919 production year. The all-star cast includes Francis McDonald, Elinor Field and Lloyd Bacon. William A. Seiter directed.

Shooting of Mad Elephant Only One of Thrills in "Lost City" Serial

THE mad elephant introduced into one of the many thrilling episodes of "The Lost City" serial shows a new danger of the jungle to the average spectator, who has been prone to believe that these heavy beasts of burden are ever docile and tame. To witness the crazed beast tearing his way through the jungle, overturning the native huts, ripping up immense trees by the very roots, and trampling down barricades gives one a new insight into the destructive power of these enormous animals. Many will wonder how it were possible to train this animal to perform these feats with such realism. But the secret is, it is explained, that the animal is not trained, but is really mad, and will be shot in the later episodes. The shooting of this animal is said to be only one of the many situations that makes this serial different.

Colonel Selig has made it his hobby to collect wild animals, and is known throughout the country for his beautiful zoological gardens in Los Angeles, which is one of the largest private zoos in the world. He is too much of a lover of animals to have the elephant killed for the pleasure of serial fans, or to add to the thrills of the production, but he is compelled to dispose of the elephant for the good of the community.

Big Jim has caused Mr. Selig no end of trouble and expense in law suits through its destruction of lives and property. It has already killed two of its keepers, and has become so unruly and dangerous that authorities have informed the producer that he would have to dispose of the animal.

Burston Has New Serial with Ford and Ella Hall

WORD comes from the coast that Louis Burston, president of Burston Films, Inc., has several episodes completed of a third Francis Ford serial in which Ella Hall is playing the feminine lead. While not directing them, Mr. Burston supervises the production of all the serials bearing his firm's name, these including "The Silent Mystery," with Francis Ford and Rosemary Theby; "The Mystery of '13,'" starring the same principals, and the recently completed and released "The Hawk's Trail," starring King Baggot, with Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell featured.

Gale Henry to Start Work on Five Reel Comedy Soon

GALE HENRY, Bulls Eye star, will start production on a five-reel comedy early this year, according to announcement made by Bruno J. Becker, general manager of her company, who further states the company will not discontinue production of its two-reel comedies. The special, he says, is to be put on simply as a test picture; to show what Miss Henry can accomplish in five-reelers and to comply with the wishes of the exhibitors. If the first one is a success, it is possible the comedienne may leave the two-reel class altogether.

The story Miss Henry is to make is already prepared, and is a straight human comedy, with thrills, and here and there a touch of pathos.

Three Road Companies for "Alma Where Do You Live"

THREE companies of the "Alma Where Do You Live?" picture and principals, will leave New York the first week in January to tour a circuit of picture theatres and playhouses. The film, with Ruth MacTammany and George Larkin in the leading roles, is said to lend itself well to the interpolation of the breezy songs and situations of the play. According to reports from cities where the attraction has already appeared, it is breaking house-records. Monopol Pictures Company are handling it on a state rights basis.

Large Tract Secured by National.

Three acres of land adjacent to Sunland, a little mountain town about thirty-five miles from Los Angeles, has been leased by the National Film Corporation for a term of five years for "location" purposes. The contour and scenic grandeur in and about Sunland is peculiarly adapted to picture purposes, according to Mr. Bernstein, production manager of the National. Besides the National's production of "The Kentucky Colonel," Sunland was used in making "Heart o' the Hills," with Mary Pickford, and Metro's production of "The Old Lady of 31." The National has built several semi-permanent "sets" on the newly acquired property.

Kremer Enlarges Sales Organization; Adds Phil Goldstone and Bert Lubin

DUE to the volume of business which Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., is now handling, Mr. Kremer this week announced he had enlarged his sales staff. He had engaged Phil Goldstone, well known in the West, to handle for him the five Chaplin productions, "A Burlesque on Carmen," "The Champion," "Jitney Elopement," "Work," and "By the Sea." He has been responsible in the past for the sale of many of the biggest state rights productions, and will start on a sales campaign covering the Northwest and Southwest.

Bert Lubin, recently associated with the sale of territories on "Virtuous Men," has also been engaged to travel in the interest of the Chaplin pictures. He is a brother of Herbert Lubin, of the well known firm of Sawyer and Lubin, has had many years' experience in the selling of state rights. He will cover the East and the South and later on will journey to the west coast.

Both of these road men will carry with them a complete line of advertising and exploitation material and will work in close co-operation with the exhibitor, backed up by the advertising department of the home offices of the Kremer organization.

Price and Cornelius-Clark Offer Reissued Tom Moore Two-Reelers

RIGHTS have been acquired to a series of eleven two-reel Tom Moore reissues by C. B. Price Company, Inc. They will be released on a territorial rights basis. Domestic territory will be handled by Clark-Cornelius Corporation and foreign territory by C. B. Price Company, Inc.

These pictures were produced by Kalem. Marguerite Courtot plays leading woman and Robert Ellis, Paton Gibbs and Ethel Clifton are in the casts.

The series includes "The Secret Room," "The Black Sheep," "For High Stakes," "The Prodigal," "The Adventure at Briarcliff," "The Cabaret Singer," "The Girl and the Bachelor," "The Black Ring," "In Double Harness," "His Inspiration," "The Girl and the Explorer."

"These pictures represent the highest type of two-reel dramas," said Mr Price. "They were made by Kalem at the very height of its history as a producer and released in the days just prior to the five reel feature.

"In announcing these pictures as masterpieces of Tom Moore's early work we are not overemphasizing their value. We recently made an investigation of market conditions and find an unusual demand from exhibitors for two reel subjects which are of sufficient merit to go on the best screens.

"There is a tendency on the part of the exhibitor to buy all the star value he can for his shows, and many good showmen have told me that they wanted them to build up their program."

The series will be released at intervals of one a week, backed by a trade paper campaign.

An elaborate list of advertising material will be issued on the series including one sheets, three sheets, six sheets, lobby photos and cuts.

Many Celebrated Aviators in Sol Lesser's "Sky-Eye"

THE six-reel feature, "Sky-Eye," which is being distributed on state rights basis by the Sol Lesser organization, is said to be unique, not only in its new melodramatic twist, but in the cast, which includes several aerial celebrities. One, is Harold J. Peterson, recently captured and held for ransom by Mexican bandits.

Lieutenant Russel J. Hunt, however, in the role of Sky-Eye leads the field in his performance of death-defying performances, and it is claimed that by taking his life in his hands many times during the production, he succeeded in securing for the camera many unusual and "hair-raising" stunts, including a fight in mid-air, a leap from plane to plane, and the jump from a plane to a moving train.

Lieutenant C. C. Nutt and Lieutenant Fordyce are also prominent in the accomplishment of dangerous stunts in the picture. Many exploitation tie-ups have been provided, and the New York exchange of the Lesser organization expects soon to announce a showing at one of the Broadway houses.

Novel Stunt for Monopol Film.

Among the novel exploitation stunts furnished by Monopol Pictures Company for their feature, "Crimson Shoals," are book of matches carrying a scene from the photoplay on the covers. The title of the film is printed across the face of the book as well as across the matches, with a space on the cover large enough to carry the name of the theatre showing the picture. There has been a healthy demand for the novelty from the theatres playing the attraction. "Crimson Shoals" has an added novelty in the fact that Francis Ford plays three roles at the same time.

M. H. Hoffman of Pioneer Giving Canada Once Over

M. H. HOFFMAN, executive head of Pioneer, is now on a tour of Canada with a view to securing distribution outlets for the product of his concern in the Dominion.

Mr. Hoffman's first stop will be in Toronto, from there he will strike West and probably visit all the Canadian exchange centres until he reaches Vancouver.

Nearly eighty-five per cent. of the United States is covered by the Pioneer co-operative exchanges, and with the projected distribution organizations in Canada in operation the Pioneer will be in a position to offer the independent producer an unusual outlet.

Languishing for Lew and the $500, Females Write Ardent Love Letters

AS AN answer to Robertson-Cole's prize contest for the best love letter sent to Lew Cody, star of the January Robertson-Cole Special, "The Beloved Cheater," more than 3,500 missives from all sections of the country have already been received at the New York office.

"The Beloved Cheater" is being handled by a special staff of publicity and exploitation men. There is a twenty-four page booklet and a campaign of national advertising has been waged in its favor. Trade papers and the best of fan magazines have been employed in carrying the advertising message to millions of readers.

Value of Advertising Shown.

"We planned a great future for 'The Beloved Cheater,'" said A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, "but the avalanche of contracts are way beyond our expectations. The value of trade paper advertising is manifested twofold in this production. First, the number of exhibitors who demanded first runs and the numerous answers we received to our contract to spend $500 for the best love letters.

"The success with which 'The Beloved Cheater' won has stirred us to even bigger productions. In 1920 I am willing to predict that the Robertson-Cole pictures will by far overshadow the best work of our competing companies. We have some stupendous plans for the ensuing year and I honestly believe that 'The Beloved Cheater' is but a forerunner of what we shall give to the trade."

"The Beloved Cheater" is the first of the Robertson-Cole productions made by Gasnier. William Christy Cabanne, who directed, was told to make the best picture possible. Lew Cody is supported by a capable cast headed by Eileen Percy.

Metro Scenario Editor Is Author of a Novel

COLONEL JASPER EWING BRADY, scenario editor for Metro, has surprised and delighted his many friends on both sides of the continent by the writing and publication of a novel called "The Case of Mary Sherman."

Colonel Brady left the Metro studios in Hollywood recently and came on to New York, when the play-reading department of Metro was transferred from the west coast to the home offices of the company in the Longacre Building. Not satisfied, however, with being one of the busiest men in Hollywood, Colonel Brady found time in odd moments to write a strong, compelling novel.

Big "U" Director Perfects New Photography Process

UNUSUAL interest has been aroused by a new process of motion picture photography which gives to the screen the appearance of a painting.

Pastelography, as the process has been named because of its pastel-like quality, has been perfected by Eric Von Stroheim, a Universal director.

At first sight a photodramatic scene made by pastelography appears to be slightly out-of-focus. The impression, however, is set aide after the first few feet of the film have been screened. The effect is that of soft diffusion.

Eric Von Stroheim worked out his system of pastelography in collaboration with Ben Reynolds, a cameraman.

"Mr. Reynolds and I consider pastelography the greatest stride toward more artistic photodramas that has been taken by the industry in years," said Mr. Von Stroheim. "We believe that it has the artistic quality that playgoers so much appreciate without the vagueness of other methods of diffusion."

Just how pastelography is done was not divulged by Von Stroheim or Reynolds.

Trade Paper Criticisms Featured in Press Book

THE publicity department of Burston Films, Inc., announce that the Exhibitor's Book of "The Hawk's Trail," the latest Burston serial, starring King Baggot with Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell, will contain something more than clever advertising stunts, newspaper cuts, reproductions of posters and other advertising supplies. Advance notices of "The Hawk's Trail" have all laid special stress upon the episode endings and the fact that they differed from the average "stunt" endings, in that they depended for carrying suspense into the next installment through situations and plot development rather than by leaving some character in a perilous situation. As proof of this the Exhibitor's Campaign Book will give the exhibitor a goodly quantity of advertising paragraphs, phrases and slogans, compiled from the reviews appearing in the trade papers. The press department adds that this is also proof of the truth of the statement in one of the trade papers that "The Hawk's Trail' showed that Louis Burston was getting into his stride as a standard serial maker. He has three to his credit in a little over a year and another well started.

"Madame X" Will Be Screened.

The motion picture rights to "Madame X" have been secured by Harry Field who will proceed at once with arrangements for production. "Madame X" was a stage drama of great vogue when produced first in New York and during its subsequent tours on the road. It is considered to be possessed of great possibilities for pictures.

Arons Joins Jacobs, Inc.

Bernard P. Arons has just been added to the staff of Arthur H. Jacobs, Inc. Mr. Arons is well fitted to his new position, as he is not only familiar with every branch of the industry, but has been in charge of the casting department of more than one large company.

Begin Work on "Shore Acres."

Art technicians of interior and exterior divisions at the Metro studios in Hollywood have prepared extensive indoor and outdoor settings for the Screen Classics, Inc., version of "Shore Acres." Work on the picturization of James A. Herne's play has been started. Alice Lake will be featured. Rex Ingram will direct. Edward Connelly has been selected to play the part of Uncle Nat Berry.

"The Hope" Going Into Production.

Filming of "The Hope," the second of five Drury Lane melodramas to be produced by Screen Classics, Inc., will start at the Metro studios in Hollywood this week. "The Best of Luck," the first of the Drury Lane plays, was completed a few weeks ago. Herbert Blache will direct. A. S. Le Vino wrote the scenario.

"The Fortune Hunter" Completed.

Despite the fact that nearly three weeks' time was lost through the illness of the star and the leading woman, Vitagraph has completed "The Fortune Hunter," the screen version of the stage success by Winchell Smith. The last scene was taken early in the week on schedule time and the completed picture will be ready for release next month as originally planned.

Earle Williams, who played the title role, caught a severe cold upon his arrival here from California and it was more than ten days before he could resume work on the picture. Then, two weeks ago Jean Paige, his leading woman, suffered with a severe attack of laryngitis, which caused a further delay.

Making Scenes No Cinch.

"Making motion picture scenics is anything but a lazyman's job," say H. H. Brownell and Jock Rantz, cameraman and director for the Adventure Scenics released by Robertson-Cole. At the time they went into Central Oregon to make "Just Over Yonder," it was July in the rest of the country, but Central Oregon was frozen beneath a mantle of snow several feet in depth. They were obliged to travel on the Old Oregon Trail and had to stop every few miles and do what Lewis and Clark did, chop their way through. Although they were traveling in machines, it took them on an average of two days to go fourteen miles.

They feel they have been fortunate in obtaining some fine views of the volcanic country in and about the dense forests of Oregon. They discovered a number of extinct volcanoes and obtained some very beautiful cloud effects over these. "Americans should be thrilled when they see 'Just Over Yonder,' for all the beauty of the Oregon forests and the grandeur of the mountains is in it," say Brownell and Rantz.

Hank Mann Completes "The Knock-Out"

Hank Mann's third two-reeler, just completed for Arrow, has been titled "The Knock-Out" and Hank is introduced as a paper-hanger's assistant in a girl's gymnasium. Fascinated by the fair ones he disguises himself as their instructor and puts them through a few gymnastic lessons originated by himself. Herman C. Raymaker directed and the support includes Madge Kirby, Vernon Dent, Jess Weldon and Jack Richardson.

Sidelights and Reflections

THE range of a reviewer's knowledge of mice and men and of cabbages and kings is an astonishing thing. Think of the erudition that can leap lightly from "abstract nouns" to "ethereal diaphanous lingerie!" Both profound subjects are treated with equal assurance and penetration in the fearlessly written opinions of one industrious astrologer of the silver sheet.

"Mine office is one of danger!" exclaimed the titled gentleman in the old costume play. The office of a reviewer is evidently beset with snares and pitfalls for him who does not know everything that is contained in the encyclopedias, and also the few morsels of information not found in books.

Three scenario writers whose names have been connected with some of the most successful products of the screen had stage experience before taking up scenario work. Their names are Jeanie Macpherson, June Mathis and Eve Unsell, and the training they received in dramatic values while watching plays rehearsed and speaking the lines of their parts was the best sort of preparation for the profession they were to follow.

All three scenarists have adapted a number of stage successes to the screen with the most satisfactory results, and in the keen rivalry among the producers to secure the moving picture rights to so many of the big hits of the footlights is evidence that the photodramatist is to be kept busy in the near future.

The French dramatist who admitted he picked up material wherever he found it and made it his own, set an excellent example for the screen. The writer watched the making of several of the scenes for the screen version of the Augustus Thomas play "The Copperhead," and is in a position to state that everything points to a triumph for the picture and for Lionel Barrymore, who created the role of Milt Shanks in the stage play and has repeated his character study for the screen.

The present stage sensation on Broadway is John Drinkwater's play founded on the life of Abraham Lincoln. The English dramatist has treated the character of the martyred President with great skill and the piece is repeating in New York the hit it made in England. It will be recalled that although Lincoln himself does not appear as one of the characters in "The Copperhead," it is an act of his during the Civil War that is the cornerstone of the plot and that almost the entire last act is devoted to the recital of a scene in the White House between the President and Shanks when Milt was sworn in as a member of the Secret Service.

It would be novel and instructive to see both the play and the picture in the same week. WEITZEL.

"In Old Kentucky"

A First National Attraction Presenting Anita Stewart in Racing Melodrama.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

PLAYS located in Kentucky usually mean a feud or the racetrack. "In Old Kentucky," one of the earliest of these plays, is also the best.

The heroine who cannot read nor write is admirably impersonated by Anita Stewart. There is very little left out of this First National melodrama. Great activity is needed to interestingly fill seven reels. So there is a fine racetrack ensemble, scenes of vengeful feud, a hard-riding chase of the villain and even an element of comedy, an old Kentucky Major who is restricted by his sweetheart of twenty years to one mint julip and one cigar, both of which he has enormously enlarged. There are seven live reels of active entertainment in the play, for it held a crowded house at the Strand from start to finish.

The Story.

In Old Kentucky hills lives Madge Brierly, last of her family, the rest killed off in a long and vengeful feud. Her shack is on a knoll connected with the main part of her land by a rude drawbridge. Up from the blue-grass region comes Frank Layson, owner of a queen of the turf, the wonderful mare Queen Bess. He meets Madge, becomes attracted and teaches her the elements of reading and writing.

Up come also guests of his house, among them Horace Holton and his sister, who has designs on Layson which are frustrated. Holton informs on Lorey, a moonshining young admirer of Madge, and blames Layson, inciting Lorey to revenge. When Layson and his crowd return to the blue-grass region for the races, Madge rides down after them. She has already saved Layson from one act of vengeance and suspects another. She presents a sorry spectacle when she "fashions up" in her best, and is made to feel ridiculous when she is given suitable attire.

Having saved Layson from Lorey, she decides to go back to the hills, but she discovers the barn afire and makes a thrilling rescue of Queen Bess. It is she who rides Queen Bess to victory when Holten gets the regular jockey drunk, but she escapes recognition and sets off for her forlorn home in sadness. She comes upon Joe Lorey and saves him from night riders led by Layson, uncovering the real villain at last as she does so. She is so true-hearted and brave that she wins handsome Layson in the end, and years after, they watch with amusement a tiny feud between their two children, one loving the hills, the other the blue-grass region, all now secure in domestic happiness.

"The Miracle of Love"

Cosmopolitan Production of Cosmo Hamilton Story Depicts English High Society.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

LUCY COTTON and Wyndham Standing are the featured players in "The Miracle of Love," a Paramount-Artcraft picture taken from Cosmo Hamilton's story of English high society. The heroine is a Duchess, and the hero becomes a Duke after the death of his elder brother. There is another Duke in the story, a most despicable person, whose low tastes and evil life bring about the tragic situation which drives his wife into another man's arms. The Duchess remains true to her marriage vows, but is made to suffer in every way possible when the husband discovers her affection for Clive Herbert. It is not a pleasant story, but is strongly dramatic, and the winning fight the lovers make to keep their love unstained more than offsets the baser passions exhibited by the Duke. Some spectators will find the scenes where the nobleman is twice stricken with paralysis too realistic, but will be forced to admit that Ivo Watson gives a remarkably skillful performance of the character.

Lucy Cotton plays the Duchess of Harwich. She is a beautiful woman, tall and graceful, and looks the titled lady to the life. Most of her scenes call for repressed emotion or passive obedience. Miss Cotton is successful in indicating both. Wyndham Standing is capitally cast as Clive Herbert. English by birth and a well schooled actor, his impersonation is thoroughly convincing. Percy Standing, Jackie Saunders and Edwin Earle are prominent members of the excellent cast.

The production is admirable throughout.

The Story.

"The Miracle of Love" is the reward given to a pair of lovers that remain true to their better selves when tempted to defy the moral law. Forced to become the wife of the Duke of Harwich in order to save her father's good name, Helena, the heroine of the story, gives herself to a profligate whom she despises. A chance meeting with Clive Herbert, brother of the Duke of Cheshire, results in the two falling in love. Harwich, who has been away for his health, returns to England. At the meeting with his wife he forces his attentions on her to such an extent that he brings on a stroke of paralysis. He partly recovers, but is forced to go about in a wheel-chair.

Learning that his wife and Clive love each other, he taunts them both at every opportunity. Clive is ready to take Helena and leave the country, but she will not sully their love by such an act. The Cheshire family is poor, and when the elder brother is killed in an accident and Clive succeeds to the title he enters the House of Lords and creates a reputation as a speaker. Here he meets an American heiress. Money must be had to keep up the Cheshire estate, and Clive and the girl become engaged.

Harwich, who is now confined to his bed and slowly dying, shows his wife a paper and she learns that not one penny of the Duke's large fortune will come to her. She goes to see Clive and they have what they believe is their last meeting. The arrival of a young chap from Chicago who is madly in love with Clive's promised bride and determined to marry her finds the girl ready to admit that she raelly loves her fellow countryman, and the death of Harwich and Clive's appointment as Ambassador to the United States leave the English lovers free to marry.

"Flames of the Flesh"

Five-Reel Fox Production Features Gladys Brockwell in Emotional Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SOMETHING rather different from the familiar type of "vampire" stories is presented in this five-reel Fox subject, entitled "Flames of the Flesh." It deals with the career of a pure minded New England girl who finds herself a victim of cruel treatment, abandoned by the man who had pretended to love her and left friendless in a Portuguese port. The situation is unique and promises developments which are necessarily of an unpleasant sort. That the close is destined to be tragic is foreshadowed from the beginning.

Candace, the girl in question, is described as a descendant of the Salem witches. Gladys Brockwell is seen at her best in this part, particularly in the scenes where Candace assumes the name of Laure De Saxe. The story is never entirely convincing, but holds by the unusual character of the plot.

The Story.

Candace, in "Flames of the Flesh," is a New England girl, a direct descendant of the Salem witches. She finds herself alone and friendless, at the beginning of the story, in a Portuguese port, where she had been abandoned by the man who deceived her. She determines to commit suicide and is about to drink poison when she is observed by an American named Craig Boardman. The latter, for purposes of his own, induces the girl to live on.

Boardman takes Candace to Paris and introduces her to an ex-courtesan, Madame Binnat, once the toast of Paris. The latter supplies the girl with fine gowns and sets her up in an establishment of her own. Candace, who has vowed vengeance upon all men for her wrong, assumes the name of Laure De Saxe. She wins the love of one man after another, casting each of them off in turn.

Charles Eastcoat, younger son of Simon Eastcoat, a wealthy American, falls into her clutches. In the course of time the elder brother, Bruce Eastcoat, comes to save Charles from her, but Laure cleverly intrigues him also. Bruce is so infatuated that he enters upon a pretended engagement with her. Later, the father, Simon Eastcoat, appears and in him the girl recognizes the man who betrayed her. But she has by this time actually fallen in love with Bruce. After many stormy scenes she kills herself rather than drag Bruce down, despite her former vows.

"Twelve-Ten"

Edward Godal Presents Marie Doro in a Sensational Story Directed by Herbert Brenon.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE fascinating personality of Marie Doro, splendid workmanship in every detail of production and an exceptional "atmosphere"—the scenes in Paris and in England are taken there—constitute the chief merits of "Twelve-Ten." Marie Doro impersonates a French waif with a wistful charm that is very appealing, and her terror in the deserted castle at twelve-ten is thrilling. She holds the eye with poetry of movement and good taste in self-expression to the point of distracting attention from the story.

Her support is admirable, every member of the company a well-selected type. Honors go easily to Ben Webster as Lord Chatterton, self-appointed granddad of the little French waif. The scenes between him and Marie Doro stand in winning relief to the dark and rather incoherent mood of the play.

Herbert Brenon's work is characteristically thorough, every interior an example of good taste, the exteriors beyond criticism. Only the play seems weak, lacking the elements of true drama, and so inconsistent at moments as to offend common sense. The sum of values, however, is high. The story was magnificently presented at the Capitol and seemed to hold close attention from spectators in all parts of that great theatre. A generally good entertainment.

The Story.

It was not at Twelve-Ten that little Marie Fernande met her great good friend Lord Chatterton, but it was at the fatal hour of her father's suicide in Paris. From that moment the little girl expands in character, endearing herself every day to wealthy Lord Chatterton, now her self-appointed granddad, until he legally adopts her. She becomes the brightest spot in his life.

At the head of large industries, often preyed on by unscrupulous employes, Lord Chatterton adopts a terrifying method of testing all those near him, even those dear to him, the faithless and the faithful, by simulating first the approach of death, his physician assisting in giving forth the impression that another "attack" will prove fatal to the great noble. Chatterton executes a will and directs that it shall be read immediately upon his death. During another "attack" he is given medicine by his confidential man and business adviser. He manages to dispose of it for future examination and simulates death. His will is immediately read.

The most extraordinary provision is that Marie shall go at midnight where his body is to be laid out in an old and unoccupied castle and say a prayer for him. She is taken there by the business manager and left alone with the body, a terror-stricken child, but she does her duty. Hardly is it finished before she has a genuine cause of fright. The business manager, aware that she will inherit a vast fortune, seeks to compromise her, but the dead man comes to life and extorts a frightful confession from the guilty manager, finding out meanwhile those who truly love him, most of all the true-hearted little waif he has adopted.

"The Gay Lord Quex"

Goldwyn Adaption of Pinero Play Features Tom Moore and Proves Good Entertainment.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Goldwyn adaption of the Pinero play, "The Gay Lord Quex," is fairly successful. Tom Moore appears in the title role, and is well suited to the personality which he is called upon to portray. The earlier scenes of the picture, in which the various loves of the "Gay Lord Quex" are listed with an affix of the same old question in each case, "Didn't anyone ever tell you what lovely eyes you have?" are sure to prove amusing; and are followed by moments of more serious intent, when his fickle lordship finally meets the right girl.

Period presented by Tom Moore in Goldwyn's "The Gay Lord Quex."

The characterization of the play is interesting, and has been carefully cast. Hazel Dawn, for instance, in the role of the manicure queen, Sophie Fullgarney, is exactly the type for the part. Gloria Hope's conception of Muriel Eden, a languid English girl, uncertain as to which one of two men her affections belong, is also correct. Naomi Childers as the Duchess of Strood portrays with fine effect a loose type of women well known among English aristocracy, married to one man, but loving another. P. H. McCullough as the worthless Captain Bastling, is another outstanding characterization.

The production will appeal strongly to those who like society drama.

The Story.

The thrilling circumstances surrounding the only serious love affair in the career of Lord Quex, of Nottinghamshire, England, are set forth in the play, "The Gay Lord Quex." After having followed the road of romance through many countries, making love to women of many types, Lord Quex finally falls madly in love with a pretty girl, Muriel Eden, of London. Muriel first meets him in the manicure shop of her friend, Sophie Fullgarney, and is later entertained at the home of Lady Owbridge, an aunt of Lord Quex. Here the romance between the pair ripens, and after much persuasion Muriel promises to forget his ill-reputed past and marry him.

In her heart Muriel still treasures an affection for Captain Bastling, a ne'er-do-well, who is looking for money rather than love with the wife he marries, but is not above making love to a pretty girl at any time. And when she is told of associations between the dowager Duchess of Strood and Lord Quex, a situation brought about through the scheming of the duchess, Muriel quickly turns to Bastling and makes an appointment to meet him at Sophie Fullgarney's shop. Here Sophie, who was the tale-bearer and has relented on discovery of the real character of Bastling, arranges a revelation for Muriel which throws light on the situation, and causes her to return to Lord Quex.

"The Broken Melody"

Eugene O'Brien's Third Starring Vehicle for Selznick Tells Entertaining Love Story.

Reviewed by Herbert J. Hoose.

SENTIMENTALITY is the predominating feature of Eugene O'Brien's latest Selznick picture, "The Broken Melody." As in his two previous starring productions he is seen as a romantic lover and is at no time called upon to do strenuous work during the telling of the story.

The tale is of a young aspiring artist in New York's Greenwich Village who is madly in love with a pretty girl singer living in an adjoining apartment. The artist meets a wealthy woman, who greatly admires him and offers to accompany him to Europe in order that he may study. The main action of the story hinges on these three characters.

There is not much plot material, but the manner in which the love story is told holds the interest. The sets are exceptionally fine and show careful construction. In addition there are several beautiful exterior "shots." Taken as a whole this feature should prove an asset to most programmes and especially pleasing to the O'Brien followers.

In support of Eugene O'Brien is Lucy Cotton, who is delightful as the girl. This player has great acting ability at her command and is an ideal choice for the part. Corinne Barker as Mrs. Drexel Trask and Gus Weinberg as Ivan, the 'cello player, are well drawn characters and do good work. The other members of the cast lend able support.

The Story.

"The Broken Melody" is about Stewart Grant, who is an artist in Greenwich Village. In an adjoining apartment lives his sweetheart, Hedda. Another apartment is occupied by an aged 'cello player, who in his youth was the rage in European music circles. He tells the two lovers that they are wasting their lives and asks why they don't strive for something bigger. The old fellow composes a musical selection which he takes to a stage director and offers it for use in his production. It is turned down, but the owner of the show looks at the song and consents to use it.

The old man informs the producer that he knows a pretty girl with a wonderful voice who would be an excellent choice to introduce the number. Hedda is given a try-out and makes good. She is invited out to dinner by the owner of the company, but she declines. Stewart then enters and together they visit Molly's popular dining establishment in Greenwich Village. While there he meets Howard Thornby, a millionaire. Thornby introduces Stewart to a Mrs. Drexel Trask. She is attracted by Grant and has him paint her picture.

Mrs. Trask offers him the chance of going to Paris at her expense and says that she accompany him. Stewart goes to see Hedda and tells her he wants to marry her immediately. She is bound up in her stage career and refuses him. Grant packs his belongings and leaves for Europe with Mrs. Trask. Before long he gains fame. His first masterpiece is a painting of a girl and it turned out to be the exact features of Hedda, although he had a model for the picture. Mrs. Trask endeavors to force attentions upon Stewart. He learns that Hedda had collapsed during her opening performance, and yearns for his return. Grant goes back to America and finds Hedda waiting for him at the old studio.

The prison scenes at the beginning are done with great realism. A large cast of men appear as the convicts and the escape is accomplished in a way that is at once exciting and convincing. The crossing of the Mojave desert by the three men, the discovery of the dying mother and her child, and their acceptance of her charge that they act as godfathers to the infant, are pictured with an unusual depth of feeling. The subject is one of rare appeal.

After the escape they separate, agreeing to meet at a small town on the edge of the Mojave desert known as Trade Rat. Harry reaches the town first and falls in love with a girl named Ruby Merril. Pete Cushing, the sheriff, is his rival. Ruby is without home or friends and takes employment in a dance hall as waitress. Cheyenne, knowing her to be an innocent girl, desires to get her away and marry her.

But upon the appearance of his pals, Cheyenne is induced to help loot the local bank. The job is done and the three ride out into the desert with the spoils. Their horses are lost during a sand storm, and they are forced to trudge on foot. After traversing many miles in the awful heat they come upon a covered wagon. In this they discover a mother with a newly-born child. The mother, who is dying, appoints them godfathers.

There are many amusing and pathetic scenes connected with the efforts of the three to take this child back to civilization. Two of them die on the trip, but Cheyenne brings it in. His prison term is shortened and he wins the love of Ruby.

THE difficulty of acquiring good screen stories exemplifies itself in the Robertson-Cole-Barriscale release, "Beckoning Roads." The opportunities which it affords the players are scant, and even better direction than the picture boasts would fail to improve largely on the defects of a mediocre story. Bessie Barriscale handles the part of Marquita Shay with the skill which she usually exhibits, covering herself with glory in the more dramatic moments of the play. The picture is well cast, and especially well adapted to the part allotted him is Niles Welch in the role of the young husband, who weakens when he is asked to choose between his parents and his wife, but who afterward, on the attainment of maturer manhood, makes good for former shortcomings. Baron Brinker, played by Joseph J. Dowling, is also an outstanding figure of correct conception and careful outlining. The settings of the production have been well taken

The Story.

Marquita Shay, an orphan girl who had been reared in the backwoods of Canada by a friend of her parents, is placed in boarding school by John Grayson, her foster father, after he has sold his farm to a St. Louis financier, Henry Wells, and invested his money in Billings & Co. stocks, on the recommendation of Wells. Tiring of the prison-like school, she marries Humphrey, the son of Henry Wells, without the knowledge of her guardian or of the young man's parents. She is taken into the Wells home and treated like a servant. In a moment of desperation she turns on her persecutors ,and asks her husband to choose between his father and his wife. Humphrey Wells, in a moment of cowardice, fails to make the answer his wife has hoped for. On entering the room of her guardian, to whom she goes for advice, she finds him lying dead behind the bed, and a note on the table addressed to her telling her that he has lost all he had in the Billings & Co. investment.

The next chapter of the story finds her in New York, living with a friend, through whom she meets Baron Brinker, the proprietor of a fashionable gambling house. She becomes his secretary, and through doing so discovers that his is the stock concern that ruined Grayson, operating under the assumed name of Billings & Co. An opportunity soon comes to her to wreak vengeance on Brinker, when in the management of his affairs she orders his broker to continue to sell certain stock which practically represents his entire fortune. When the price is broken she calls up her husband and tells him to buy; and so she avenges the wrong that ruined John Grayson and robbed her of a friend.

The close of the story shows the reconciliation of husband and wife, and the decision to find a home of their own.

THE story of "The Corsican Brothers" by Alexander Dumas, containing a wealth of material for spectacular and dramatic presentation, has not yet been converted to the screen with the best accoutrements of art. Stories of lesser dramatic values and more ordinary problems have been filmed with a larger degree of artistry and monied magnificance.

For the third time in the history of the screen has the tale of the Corican twins, born as one body, and separated after birth, been picturized; this time by Louis J. Gasnier for the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc. While the production contains many points of merit, including excellent double exposure work in which Dustin Farnum impersonates both brothers, and realism of atmosphere in the Corsican village where the twins were wont to settle local disputes, it has not the earnmarks of a finished production.

The construction is choppy and lacks breadth of vision, but at the same time contains much to please the public. The old-fashioned charm of Emilie de Lesparre as portrayed by Winifred Kingston is exquisite. Olive Thomas in Ralph Ince Production of Selznick Release Makes an Attractive Heroine.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AS the heroine of "Out Yonder," a Selznick release, directed by Ralph Ince, that attractive young woman, Olive Thomas, has been given a part that is nicely adapted to her personality. With most of the scenes laid in and around a lighthouse on a reef off the New England shore and the beauty of the Atlantic for a background, a story is unfolded which touches life interestingly if not deeply and adds another piece of fiction to that class of pictures that are meant to while away an hour pleasantly if not with any degree of profit. A youthful looking heroine who wears her hair under a souester and goes boating dressed in a pair of overalls is not a novel figure on the screen, but she generally has a numerous following. In this case the girl's love story is full of dramatic happenings before the way is cleared for the happy ending which is always to be expected and never fails to arrive.

Ralph Ince has gone to a real lighthouse for his scenes, and a cleverly contrived storm effect is introduced. The authors have not inserted any new material in their plot, but their characters are worth meeting and the action moves along a fair speed. John Smiley is forceful as Amos Bart, a man who believes he is a murderer and who is deeply punished by his conscience. Other well sustained roles are contributed to the cast by Edward Ellis, Huntley Gordon and Mary Coverdale.

The Story.

"Out Yonder" refers to a lighthouse of the New England coast. Flotsam, whose father is the keeper of the light, is loved by her father's helper, a surly brute who holds the older man, Amos Bart, in his power. Years before, Amos quarreled with a passenger in the cabin of his sloop while the two men were drinking, and he believes that he killed him. The helper committed the crime for the purpose of robbery. Flotsam is supposed to be a waif of the sea.

When a party of wealthy pleasure seekers anchor their yacht near the reef, Flotsam saves Mrs. Elmer, the owner of the boat, from drowning. This leads to the girl's meeting Mrs. Elmer's nephew, Edward Elmer, and the two fall in love with each other. An offer from Edward's aunt to take Flotsam home with her and give the girl the social training she lacks is gladly accepted by Amos and his daughter, but the jealous helper interferes and exposes the lighthouse keeper as a murderer. Amos at once claims that he is not the girl's father, that she was brought to the lighthouse by her mother, the woman dying and leaving the baby to his wife's care.

The fact is brought out that the helper is the real murderer, and all ends happily for the lovers.

"The Darkest Hour"

Harry Morey Has Well Fitting Role in Vitagraph Production with Rather Improbable Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE Vitagraph picture, "The Darkest Hour," belongs to the class of fiction that is entertaining enough so long as all of the incidents of the story are accepted without question. The authors have used the familiar device of having the hero hit on the head and being unable to remember even his own name when he recovers consciousness. While in this condition he is married to a young girl, and is attacked shortly after the ceremony and again hit on the head. The blow brings back complete recollection of his life before the first injury, but he can remember nothing of what has taken place since then.

With these situations as a basis a smoothly developed story has been built up which supplies Harry Morey with a well fitting role. His indication of the hero's changes of mental condition is cleverly done and he makes the scenes of physical encounter sufficiently impressive. Jean Paige, as Justine, plays a girl of the lumber woods with pleasing effect. Anna Lehr, George Majeroni and George Howard are the other important members of a competent cast.

The Story.

Peter Schuyler, the principal character in "The Darkest Hour," is a young man of wealth, who is surprised when informed by one of his girl friends that she is in love with him. In reality, she wants to marry him for his money, obtain a divorce and a large settlement and then marry the man she is infatuated with, another supposed friend of Peter's, who has put the girl up to the game. Young Schuyler leaves the girl without giving her much encouragement. That night, while alone in his own house, he is attacked by thieves and struck on the head with a blackjack. When he recovers, he does not remember anything of the past and wanders out into the street. Spending the rest of the night in the park, he stumbles into an employment office and is sent to work in a northern lumber camp, after being given the name of John Doe.

A well set up young fellow, Schuyler's new work agrees with him and he is content to fell trees and make love to the niece of his boss, Justine is a pretty little thing, and when her dishonest uncle is told to leave the camp, Peter will not leave the girl go with him. They are married that night, Peter and the uncle come to blows a few minutes later and the young man is hit on the head with a revolver. Left for dead, he recovers, but the John Doe period of his existence has completely departed from his mind. Without the slightest recollection of the wife waiting for him in his cabin, he remembers only that he is Peter Schuyler, and goes back to New York on the first train.

His arrival at his own home and his loss of memory, give the schemers a chance to claim that Peter married the female schemer the night he was first attacked.

A dishonest justice of the peace is in the plot, and Schuyler is about to be victimized, when he meets his real wife, who has come to New York in search of him. He does not know her at first, but everything is made clear at the end, and Justine finds that she is Mrs. Peter Schuyler and not Mrs. John Doe.

Projection Department

By F. H. RICHARDSON

To Make Operators Projectionists

THE showing of photoplays upon battle and other ships of the United States navy, both amusement and instruction, has proven so beneficial that the Powers That Be have decided that the interpretations of the pictures to the men should no longer be trusted to untrained projectionists.

In the past it has been the custom of the crews of the various ships to purchase a projector through one of various available funds. Those most used for the purpose have been the canteen, athletic or welfare funds. This method has resulted in projectors of about every known type finding place aboard naval vessels.

During the transportation of men overseas it was found advisable to make the showing of photoplays at frequent intervals during the voyage a regular part of the navy program. So deeply impressed were those in charge with the beneficial results of this, that negotiations were begun with the large producers looking to the use of their films for the purpose.

Proper Training Required.

But it was found that, owing to the varying types of projectors in use, and the fact that these were mostly in the hands of men with no training in projection practice, hence in bad repair and worse adjustment, great damage was done to films. This promply brought from the producers a demand for closer supervision and the proper training of projectionists who were to handle their films.

The custom had been to place the projector in charge of any member of the ship's crew who had a smattering of projection knowledge, or if there happened to be none such, then the ship's electrician. The net result, both as to screen results and film damage can well be imagined.

This somewhat costly experience finally decided the navy to go into the matter of projection as thoroughly as might be. Instead of the crew purchasing the ship's projector, the navy itself will purchase standard professional projectors for all battleships and other ships where space for permanent installation can be spared.

For torpedo destroyers and vessels where space is limited, some type of portable projector will be selected. A board has been appointed to determine the type of projector best adapted to the various needs of the navy, and it has already arrived at the above determination.

A Supply of Developed Projectionists.

To the end that a supply of at least reasonably competent projectionists be quickly developed, without going outside the personnel of the navy, a school has been established at the naval dock at the foot of West Ninety-sixth street, New York City.

Here have been installed projectors of about all types. So completely has this plan been carried out that one projector of a type now obsolete is to be found among the collection.

In charge of this work is Lieutenant Charles Swanberg, one of whose duties will be to superintend the instruction of the men selected for projection work.

At this time the "supply train" of the Atlantic fleet is lying in or near New York City, so that the men selected from the various ships for projection work will have opportunity to begin study at once in the "school." The repair ship of the Atlantic fleet will carry a complete complement of projector repair parts.

Major projector repairs will be cared for in the splendidly equipped machine shop of the repair ship. The supply train," be it noted, consists of the various coaling, hospital, repair and other ships needed for attendance on Uncle Samuel's fighters.

To Standardize Equipment.

It is the ultimate purpose of the officers in charge of this new and decidedly progressive step to finally completely standardize everything in the way of motion picture accessories in the United States Navy.

A part of the school program thus far determined upon is to have representatives of manufacturers of standard projectors appear before the classes and explain the details of their various machines. The editor also has been asked to deliver lectures on projection to the men.

Figuring Shutter Blade Problem

From our old friend W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Alberta, comes what seems to be a correct, and what certainly is an ingenious method of solving the shutter blade problem in which I asked for the minimum width in degrees of the master blade of a revolving shutter where (a) the intermittent speed is five to one, (b) the light ray one and one-quarter inches in diameter, and (c) the ray entirely covered during intermittent motion. The only point not covered by Allen's answer is distance of center of ray from center of shutter shaft.

Where We Have Erred.

And right here I see where I and several others have fallen into error. We have assumed that because a degree increase in linear measurement as distance from center is increased, less degrees would be necessary to cover a given ray diameter. We have erred in failing to consider the fact that while the degree is further across as distance from center increases, the shutter is moving faster at that point, so that one thing exactly compensates for the other.

What Allen Says.

Brother Allen, who is, by the way, President of the Edmonton Projectionists' Association, Local 360 of the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. of the U. S. and Canada, says:

To simplify the question, and at the same time make it more practical, we will assume the projection speed to be at the rate of sixty crank turns per minute.

One foot of film then passes a given point in one second and one frame will pass the aperture in 1/16th or .0625 of a second. One movement of the intermittent sprocket would, then, occupy .0652÷6=.010416666 of a second.

For a shutter blade to cover a pin-point in the same time would require 360÷6=60 degrees width, to which we must add one and a quarter inches. Suppose the circumference at center of light ray be 21 inches. Then sixty degrees would be 3.5 inches, to which we must add 1.25, making a total of 4.75 inches or, expressed in degrees, 80.2.

Um, now lemme see. I get all twisted up myself. S'posin the distance from shutter center to center of ray be such that the circumference would be decidedly more—say thirty inches. Would the addition of one and a quarter effect the same result? Certainly not, but expressed in degrees the necessary addition would be precisely the same.

Another Answer for Malone, N. Y.

F. H. Hitchcock, Upper Sandusky, Ohio, offers the following as a possible solution of the troubles of Malone, New York:

Regarding the Regent Theatre trouble of Malone, New York, described in September 27 issue, it resembles a trouble I had with a 55 Ampere G. E. generator not long ago, the seat of which was finally found in a loose connection.

I had trouble starting the arc, but once started it would burn well for twenty to thirty minutes. Then it would sputter and become unsteady.

Feeding the arc would only make a bad matter worse. The sputtering usually would last but a moment or two, and then the arc would become steady again. During such spells the voltage and amperage would both fluctuate a great deal.

When the loose connection was located and fixed the trouble ceased, and I was able to get a large crater with same amount of current. Would suggest that the Regent Projectionist feel his connections, at generator, panel board and switches.

I believe he will find one or more of them warm, though he must do it, of course, after runing for some time.

Said I Skidded.

Hum, Joe Moulton, of the General Electric Company, Campe (if I rightly remember, of the Westinghouse and one or two others criticised my reply to Malone when we met at the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. Said I skidded, ran with my cut-out open and with too lean a mixture, or words to that general effect. Well, mebby I did, but even so I did'nt notice any of them coming across with the right answer. Huh! I made a stab at it anyhow, and I'm danged if I don't believe they knew what was wrong themselves. There consarn ye' stuff that in your pipe an' smoke ut, Messrs Campe, Moulton and Burrows. I pass friend Hitchcock's solution along to Malone, but I'm not going to burn my fingers on the same hot poker twice. Still, they've got to show me that what I suggested is impossible.

The English Have a Plan

The English have a plan for locating the projection room in the front of the balcony. It is graphically set forth in the sketch. Its fault lies in the fact that when loaded to capacity there is a deflection of the balcony amounting to as much, in some cases, as two and one half inches.

This might easily be allowed for were the balcony always loaded to capacity when projection is under way. But it is not. The editor of this department is of the opinion that this might be taken care of by doing away with the pedestal supporting the projector, placing it on a heavy metal table carried on central bearings A, shown in right hand sketch.

These bearings, one on either side, would be supported on legs resting on the floor, and would carry a shaft, resting on ball bearings, supporting the projector table. Lead weight B would be attached to machine table by supporting rods C C, in which would be substantial turn-buckles, the operation being as follows: The entire machine (projector) being in place and lined sidewise, turnbuckles in rods C C would be so adjusted that the light ray centre properly on the screen.

When Balcony Deflects.

Now when the balcony deflects, it is readily seen that the table would automatically adjust itself to take care of the deflection, be it little or much. The weight would have to be something substantial, say 500 pounds, and be hung as low as practicable. With such a weight hung say twenty four inches below the table, I do not think anything, other than the shifting of center of gravity by balcony deflection, would move the machine table, and stops would be provided so that in any event accidental movement would only equal maximum of deflection.

The foregoing is only a crude idea. Maybe it is not practical, but I believe that it is, and I understand that deflection is the only objection the British have found to this ideal location of the projection room. Can any one suggest a better plan for overcoming the deflection difficulty.

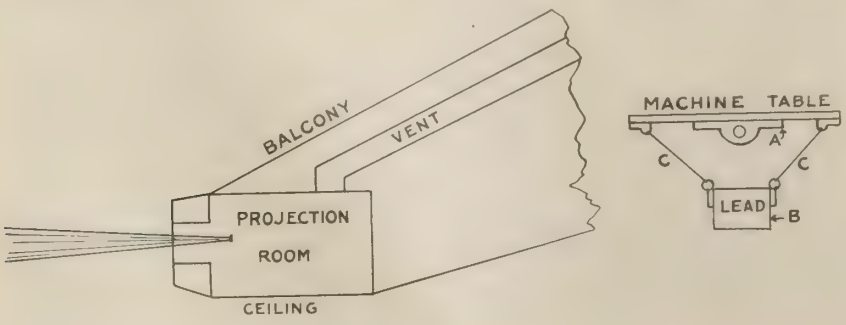
Horting Rewinder

John R. Canhuse, New Orleans, La., asks:

Can you tell me the particulars of the Horting Rewinder?

Well, we don't know just what you had in mind when you asked the above question, but anyhow we can. The "Horting Rewinder" is so designed that both reels of film are, and must be enclosed during re-winding, because when the inclosing casing is opened the motor automatically stops.

A 1/30 h. p. Westinghouse type C. A. motor is belted to the rewinder. An automatic switch stops the motor when rewinding is finished. The motor is normally a 110volt a. c., but the device may be fitted with motor to suit local current, on order. The Horting is made in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. It is approved by the Underwriters. The inclosing casing is of sheet metal, commonly dubbed "Russia iron," the gauge of which we do not know. Two other inclosed rewinders are approved by the Underwriters, viz., the Fulton Company (Chicago) rewinder and the "Safety Fireproof Rewind," made in Philadelphia.



Prompt Preparation of Papers Urged

L. C. Porter, Chairman Papers Committee Society of Motion Picture Engineers, certainly is not inclined to sleep at the switch.

The editor promised a paper on "Effects of Overspreading Projection" for the Montreal meeting of the society, and although that gathering is still months away, friend Porter has been bombarding us with "get busy" letters.

It worked, too, for we soon got tired of reading communications which began "Much of the success of the work of the papers committee depends on prompt receipt of promised papers" and ended "In view of these few facts, where in hallelujah is the paper you promised," or something to that effect, and as a result the danged paper is finished, done, signed, sealed and delivered to the Hon. Chairman of the Hon. Committee.

How's This for a Program.

And now Porter is sending out a general letter, from which we gather we are to have papers for the next meeting, as follows: "Film Tinting and Densities," by G. A. Blair, Eastman Kodak Company; Design of Theatres and Studios," by W. H. Braun; "Studio Lighting," by W. C. Hubbard, Cooper Hewitt Electric Company; "The Design of Gasoline Electric Sets for Motion Picture Work," R. L. Lee, Domestic Engineering Company; A continuation of the paper and demonstration of the use of color, begun at the Pittsburgh meeting, by Wm. Kelley and Max Mayer; "Small Gasoline Generator Sets for Motion Picture Work," by W. H. Rabell, Independent Movie Supply Company; "Projection Speed and Its Effects," by F. H. Richardson, Moving Picture World; "Studio Methods," by W. R. Rothaker; "A New High-speed Intermittent," by W. B. Cook, of the Pathescope Company; "New Developments in Motion Picture Equipment," by C. A. E. Halverson, of the General Electric Company; "The Application of Mazda Lamps to Small Projectors," by H. H. Madgsick, of the National Lamp Works; A Continuation of Dr. W. E. Story's talk on photo-electric methods of comparing condenser results; "Aspheric Condensers," by Dr. Herman Kellner, Bausch and Lomb Optical Company; "Latest Progress in Photography," by Carl Gregory, Moving Picture World; "Educational Possibilities of the Moving Picture," by B. E. Norrish, of Canada; "Fire Risks in Theatres, Studios and Laboratories," by Mr. Lomis, of the Eastman Kodak Company and "Motion Picture Work In China," by W. M. States, of the General Electrical Company, now in Shanghai, China.

Meeting Promises to Be Interesting.

From the foregoing it will be seen that if even a considerable fraction of the papers proposed materialize the Montreal meeting will not only have surpassing interest, but will be of great value to the industry.

The committee is sending out letters to the entire membership, asking for an expression of opinion as to what topics they would perfer to have discussed. We doubt the advisability of this. Our own experience is that some of those things for which there would be the very least popular demand are the very things which, above all others, really need exploiting; also that the average individual will demand that attention be given the particular thing in which he happens to be, at that particular time, most interested, although it may really have small relative value.

Be that as it may, however, there is ample evidence that the papers committee is preparing a most interestng and valuable program for Montreal, all of which is good.

Power Puts Out Excellent Reel

The Nicholas Power Company is now sending out, as a part of their regular equipment, an excellent all-metal, five-inch-hub, fourteen-inch-diameter reel. The sides are embossed to provide stiffness, and the reel is enameled black. Those who know the troubles of which the small-hub reel is father will appreciate the improvement thus brought about in the Power's machine equipment. There are six slots for attaching the film end to the reel, hence that operation is well and effectively provided for.

A Tough Proposition

Lum Fleming, Dallas, Texas, writes asking certain information which raises a question as to the wisdom of unions and government officials prohibiting apprentices. He says:

Was in New York and started a course in Taylor's school for projectionists, but had to leave before I finished. I advanced to where I had passed the examination for license in New York City, but had not had any machine practice at all.

There are no schools nearer Dallas than Chicago. Can you recommend a school in that city that will give me a practical preparation as I cannot get machine practice here for love or money?

Aside From the Fact—

Laying aside the fact that here is a man who, without a particle of practical experience in projection, was, according to his own statement, examined and passed as a competent projectionist by the Board of Motion Picture Examiners of New York City, let me ask the industry in general and the Dallas union and city officials in particular (if the latter has anything to do with Mr. Fleming not being able to serve an apprenticeship in that city) how we are to get competent projectionists if apprenticeships are forbidden.

Curtailing the Supply.

Many unions, in an endeavor to curtail the supply of projectionists (for that is precisely what it amounts to) forbid their members from allowing an apprentice in their projection rooms. Some city officials, to avoid bothering with apprentices, and thus make their jobs the easier (for that is precisely what this amounts to) prohibit apprentices, and thus make it impossible for any one to properly learn the profession of projection within their jurisdiction. New York City is a shining example of this sort of solid ivory top procedure.

What Say, Gentlemen?

If the Dallas local is responsible for Mr. Fleming's inability to serve an apprenticeship, will it be kind enough to explain where, when and how it expects the motion picture industry to secure its supply of competent projectionists. On the one hand, the union cordially, and with good cause, curses the "school." On the other hand, it forces a condition which makes the school an absolute necessity. What have you to say for yourselves, gentlemen?

Chicago Asks a Question

A Chicago exhibitor, whose name I suppress for obvious reasons, writes as follows:

Will you be good enough to answer the following:

In your opion has or has not the exhibitor who complies with all the union requirements as to wages and working conditions, and who employs union projectionists, (I like that word projectionist and believe your position in advocating its use to be correct) the right to choose whom he will employ?

Putting it another way, so that there will be no possible chance to misunderstand my meaning, is it, in your opinion, right that a union compel the exhibitor to employ union help, and then arbitrarily dictate to him what individual union man he shall employ?

Likely to Get "In Wrong."

Yours is a question the answering of which will most likely get me "in wrong" with a few unions. However, that does not worry me in the least. I have long since concluded that the writer who is too cowardly to write the truth, as he sees it, from fear that the truth will be unpleasant to some one, has no business editing such a department as this.

The truth is mighty, so 'tis said, and must prevail, and we're here to assist in the prevailing end of things, regardless of whose toes are pinched in the process.

My Answer Is "No."

My answer to your question is NO. In my opinion such a proceeding on the part of a union would be an unwarranted and outrageous invasion of the rights of the employer.

It would be an utterly unjustifiable procedure, no matter from what point the matter be viewed. A union has the right to, and should, dictate decent working conditions and a minimum wage for its least capable men, which will be at least sufficient to enable them to live and support a family in decency.

But a union has no more moral right to say to the exhibitor, you must not only employ a union man, but must employ this particular union man, than it has to say to him that he must purchase a particular make of projection machine, or dictate the brand of collar he shall wear.

Such Proceedings Would Work Evil.

Such a proceeding on the part of a union would place in the hands of its officials the power to force upon the owner of a high class theatre, where the work is exacting, a man entirely unfit for such a position.

Such a policy would engender hard feeling and needless friction. It would place in the hands of union officials, some of them (whisper) are not quite perfect, the power to graft two ways—viz: to force an exhibitor to "come across" or have an unsatisfactory man forced upon him and to enable the union officials to place in desirable positions men who will "sweeten their palm" or support them in union politics."

The Right Position.

The only right and sensible position for a union to take is that the exhibitor may employ any member of the union he chooses, but that once employed the man cannot be discharged except for reasonable cause, and upon reasonable notice being given. This rule might be set aside in those rare cases where there is well-founded suspicion that collusion exists between an exhibitor and his projectionist which operates to cut the minimum wage scale.

Such cases have been known, but they are rare. In such a case the union could with justice select for that theatre a man or men whom it had reason to believe would not be party to such a proposition, but such action should be done only by the body as a whole, not by its officials.

I trust that I have answered Chicago fully and to his satisfaction. Next!

Lens Cleaner Approved

W. B. Allen, president Edmonton Projectionists' Association, Local No. 360, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., Edmonton, Alberta, says:

I have received from the Blue Bird Products Company a sample of the lens cleaning fluid put out by them, same being sent at your request. They said I was to report my findings to you.

I have given this cleaner what I call a thorough trial on a number of lenses, and am safe in saying it is very satisfactory. It will neither scratch or otherwise injure the high polish of a lens surface, nor do the chemicals of which it is composed affect the glass or its surface in any way.

It must, however, be borne in mind that unless the right sort of polishing cloth or paper be used the best results will not be obtained.

This is, to date, the only report received on this particular article, but the editor will back brother Allen's judgment.

If he, after test, declares the polish to be good, that settles it in our mind, and we are quite willing to recommend the article to projectionists. It is a fluid for cleaning and polishing lenses. It removes all traces of dirt and oil from the lens and gives that high polish so important to excellence of results.

Sun-Light Arc Corporation Announces Two New Methods in Its Distribution

UNDER date of December 17, the Sunlight-Light Arc Corporation of 218 West Forty-Eighth street, New York, manufacturer of the famous Sun-Light arc lamp, announces that in addition to its former rental plan, which will in future be designated as plan 3, it is now placing the apparatus on absolute sale under either cash down or time payment arrangements, to be known as plans 1 and 2, respectively.

This deviation from the former policy of rental exclusively has been made in deference to the urgent requests of many picture producers who, having tested out the merits of the light by long and hard service were desirous of owning the equipment outright.

A Powerful Light.

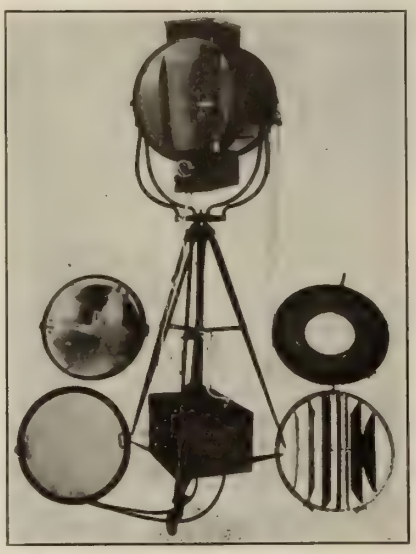
The Sun-Light arc lamp, gives one hundred thousand candle power illumination on a current consumption of 18 k. w. at 120 volts direct current. This light, which may be diffused at an angle of 130 degrees or concentrated in a spot of any desired diameter, gives the true color values of daylight and is beamless except in a foggy or smoke permeated atmosphere.

It may be projected to a distance of 2 miles and at that distance will permit of night photography of objects on which the camera is focussed, either from a distance or close to the object.

The drum light cage in which is housed the lamp, is twenty-four inches diameter and twenty-three inches from front to rear. The lamp consists of a noiseless feed mechanism that obviates all distracting buzz and sputter.

The carbons used are of special cored type, the positive being 5/8 inch diameter and sixteen inches in length while the negative is 7/16 inch diameter and 10 inches long.

The lamp and housing are mounted in a frame allowing vertical movement.



This frame, in turn, is mounted on a pivot at top of tripod for horizontal movement, making it possible to move the lamp in any direction. The tripod carries a rheostat and switch box and the entire unit is supported on large, easy rolling casters that permit its being shifted from place to place in the studio without loss of time or effort. The center of the arc is 8 feet above the floor ordinarily but can be elevated to 11 feet.

Ingenious Attachments.

Much of the adaptability of the light is due to the ingenious attachments with which it is provided. These consist of a diffusing lens of parallel glass strips which throws a diffused light that covers a field greater than that of the widest angle photographic lens that may be used on the camera; a spotlight reflector that concentrates a spotlight of any desired diameter upon the object to be emphasized; an Iris diaphram that may be stopped down from the full opening of the drum to one and one half inches and with which fade out effects may be produced.

"Fade Outs" and "Fade Ins."

In addition there is a device consisting of a metal shutter perforated by several holes. Each of which is fitted with a small Iris diaphram. With this device, it is possible to throw several beams of concentrated light upon several objects simultaneously, making them stand out against almost total blackness in the print. With this same device, any beam may be either stopped out entirely, or reduced to any size making "fade outs" or "fade ins" possible with each spot.

Another accessory consists of a series

Sun-Light Arc Light and Reproductions of Photos Taken by Same.
To left, silhouette effect obtained with perforated shutter; to right, the color values as given by light.

THEATRE LIGHTING

AUDITORIUM: X-Ray indirect lighting with ceiling fixtures, coves, cornices or wall boxes produces illumination results demanded in the finest auditoriums. The newest effects in color lighting are satisfactorily secured only with X-Ray indirect illumination.

STAGE: The powerful X-Ray reflector, with color screen, has revolutionized stage lighting methods. Better color values and light control are to be had with this system; with reduced current.

EXTERIOR: The theatre front must be flood-lighted with X-Ray projectors to show its beauty at night. Outline lighting with studded lamps is an expensive way to hide the theatre beautiful; flood-lighting with powerful X-Ray projectors an economical way to enhance its beauty.

Write for our booklet on complete theatre illumination with X-Ray lighting equipment.

of independently pivoted parallel shutters to be mounted on the front of the drum. This permits of the light being so manipulated that any portion of an interior may receive exactly the degree of illumination desired.

Abolishing Footlights.

The lighting system, built on a smaller scale should be particularly adapted to projection practice and it is said that J. Justice Harmer, president of the corporation is about to announce an adaption of the system that will supplant stage footlights and permit the actor to see his audience almost as plainly as the audience sees the actor.

The Sun-Light Arc Corporation is expanding and also enlarging its activities. In line with this policy comes the announcement that Al Kaufman of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has accepted a directorship in the corporation.

Here's a Novel Man Power Electric Generating Plant

TO those of us who are in the habit of attending a movie theatre once a week or oftener, it may not occur that there are some hundreds of millions of human beings on this earth who never saw a moving picture.

Electricity is absolutely essential to motion picture projection. In the United States practically every hamlet and even many thousand country homes have electricity always on tap. Isolated electric generating plants operated by gasoline and kerosene engines solve the problem where their expense is justified and a sufficiently intelligent caretaker can be found. But the weight, size, complexity and mechanical skill required bar motor generator equipment from some locations.

Hand-Made Electricity.

However, where labor is unskilled, it is always cheap and plentiful, and for such localities the hand operated electric generator illustrated herewith is meeting with a large and deserved success. A couple of husky negroes in Africa, coolies in China, mujiks in Siberia, or Hindoos in India can furnish the necessary electric juice for showing up to an 8 by 10 foot picture with the Peerless Standard Portable Projector and direct Gear Driven Electric Generator, as illustrated.

The manufacturers, whose address appears in the Accessory Section, have shipped a large number of these outfits to China, India, the South Sea Islands, etc., and repeat orders by cable have borne eloquent testimony of the satisfaction which they have given.

Tell Us About It

This department exists for the purpose of spreading the glad tidings of anything in the way of equipment, its use or arrangement that makes or saves money for picture theatres or studios.

The door is wide open and the lid entirely absent to any exhibitor, house or studio manager or manufacturer who has a story to tell or a device to describe, the reading of which will tend to increase efficiency in the showing or making of films.

Send photos and diagrams whenever possible and address your communication to "Better Equipment" Department, Moving Picture World.

A Mid-West Inventor Plans to Make Musical Director of Projectionist

A MID-WEST inventor has incubated a scheme to add the duties of musical director to those of the projectionist, thereby eliminating the pianist, regarding whose lamp, our friend Richardson has many times made observations of an unappreciative nature.

What Will Richardson Say?

Just what Richardson will say about the advisability of adding to the projectionist's duties is problematical, but we are going to give him a chance to express himself by mail and will publish his views in a future issue if he has anything to say on the subject.

The scheme consists of sorting from forty to fifty rolls of suitable music into four classes, very fast, moderate time, very slow and one of odd selections for special pictures.

A switch dial in the projection room permits the playing of any one of the four types in accordance with the requirements of that portion of the film that is being screened.

The playing mechanism which operates the piano is housed in an ornamental case placed just in front of the instrument. Each piano key is played by a mechanical finger controlled by an electrical magnet, the electrical contact being made through the holes of the music rolls by metallic brushes normally held above the paper by springs.

The Picture Tells the Story.

The illustration shows top view of player with lid and front removed to show the motor, drive chains electrical contact brushes and control magnets; the control switch and a front view of player with lid and front removed to show the four classifying departments containing from ten to twelve endless rolls each.

The inventor claims that instantaneous change of music at any moment is possible.

PLYERS are important in the booth, but Richardson's Handbook plays even a more important part to the ambitious projectionist. 700 pages with 300 detailed illustrations. Postpaid for $4. Chalmers Publishing Company, 516 Fifth avenue, New York.

Test pictures of the new Stereospeed camera, the invention of Earle Emlay, has been made and reports indicate that they more than realize the anticipations of the Motion Picture Producing Company of America which controls it. The camera's maximum ability to take 384 pictures a second opens a new field for its exploitation aside from that of furnishing entertainment in public theatres.

Several requests for its rental have been received by the company from manufacturers of scientific organizations in various parts of the country. Its ability to analyze the motion of high-power machinery, etc., is expected to popularize its activity largely in this field.

Still Another Simplex Man Is Issuing a House Organ

NEW recruit has just been added to the ranks of Simplex distributors' house organs by the appearance of the "Teco Tattler" a four page monthly published by the Teco Products Manufacturing Company, Simplex distributors for northern and eastern Iowa and northern and western Wisconsin.

George Feinberg, enterprising manager of that company, is editor-in-chief of this interesting and progressive little sheet, which, judging from its initial number, should become very popular with the purchasers of theatre equipment in its territory.

Whence the Name.

The Teco Company derives its name from the words "Theatre Equipment Company," the trade name of their predecessor. Throughout the first number of the Teco Tatler runs a series of interesting facts concerning the Simplex projector, together with well-written descriptions of the numerous other accessories handled by the Teco company.

Mr. Feinberg, together with Mr. Francis, his partner, recently organized the Teco Company. Their headquarters in the Loeb Arcade building is regarded as one of the finest equipped supply houses in the Middle West.

The number of Simplex Projectors sold through this enterprising house in the past year already reaches close to the three hundred mark.

This Slide Projects Well and May Be Safely Mailed

A RECENT, and what has proven to be a most successful, innovation in slides is the "Fine-Art" projection slide, made by the International Lantern Slide Corporation, of 229 West Twenty-eight street, New York.

The product was introduced but six months ago and is now being used by some of the largest manufacturers.

Something like half a million of these slides have been turned out already, and with the rapid increase in manufacturing facilities the output is expected to greatly increase.

Advantages Claimed.

The manufacturers claim many advantages for these slides as compared with glass slides. Among the advantages claimed are the following: The slides are made by a new, patented process which insures high projection quality. The half tones in the faces are unusually well held and the whites are absolutely clean, clear and brilliant. Much less light is required in their projection without interference with attractiveness or brilliancy of screen results.

May Be Enclosed with Letters.

These slides may be enclosed in a letter or sent separately by first-class mail. This saves postage and insures prompt delivery.

Being printed on celluloid, breakage on transportation is eliminated. Being printed by a photo-mechanical process, each copy is absolutely uniform. It is stated that these slides will stand up under even more heat than silver emulsion glass slides and that the colors are absolutely fast under heat.

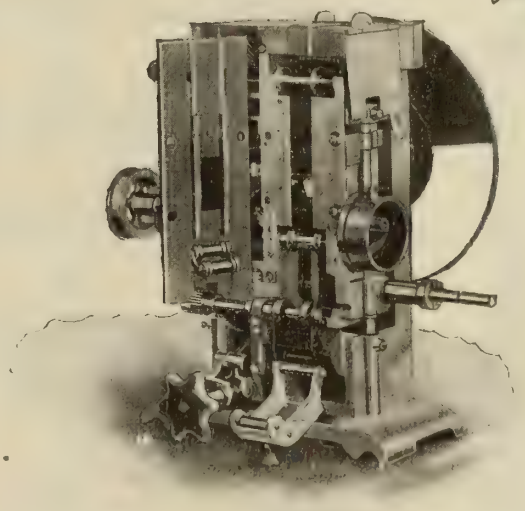
THE MASTER MECHANISM

is designed to operate with a minimum of gears, effecting all movements SIMPLY, SMOOTHLY, DIRECTLY—not a gear or part but that performs a vital driving or operating function. Expense of upkeep and repairs is therefore kept at a minimum.

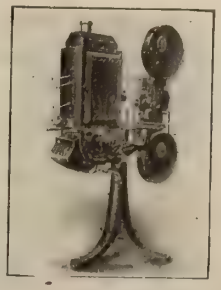


Note these exclusive mechanical features of the MASTER mechanism

INTERMITTENT MOVEMENT—not hidden inside the mechanism, but located on the exterior in plain view. The MASTER Intermittent, consisting of star wheel and cam, each running on two extra long phosphor bronze bearings, operates in a glass-cased oil box. The star wheel and its spindle is made of one solid piece of tool steel.

FILM SLIDE AND LOWER LOOP—The film slide is made 5¾ inches long, holding the film perfectly parallel to the motion picture lens. The loop can be made unusually large. Should the projectionist lose the lower loop, it is not necessary for him to stop the machine even for an instant—but simply by throwing open the idler rollers on the lower sprocket, the loop can be easily caught and replaced.

THE TENSION on the film gate is regulated by a double set of adjustable tension shoes. These can be adjusted for first run or commercial films even while the machine is in operation. On projectors where this tension is not adjustable, trouble is often experienced in projecting first run film.



THE SHUTTER DRIVE is directly connected to the cam shaft, eliminating all lost motion in the shutter, as well as any possibility of "travel ghost." Once the shutter on the MASTER is set, it remains set—no further adjustments being necessary.

THE FIRE SHUTTER on the MASTER is not driven by friction, but is controlled by an automatic governor. The film is completely enclosed —with all danger of film ignition removed.

THE FRAMING DEVICE is distinctly positive, raising or lowering the inner carriage instantaneously, without disturbing the lens or shutter.

The highest grade of Gundlach projection lenses are furnished with every equipment.

"ON WITH THE DANCE"

—the gold endures,
the dross is burned away.

Into the great Manhattan caldron are poured the destinies of four lives, there to brew as their wills and the fates decree. New York—ruthless, sinful, profligate, base, accursed? Yes for the weak, the vicious and the uncourageous.

But New York—magnificent, flashing, awakening, prodigal, inspiring—for the brave, the pure in heart and the strong.

Which shall it be? And where the end?

Let the play proceed! On with the dance!

The very spirit of tumultuous, seething, wonderful, thrilling New York is in this sumptuous, enthralling picture drama.

A MESSAGE TO ALL MOTION

Cleveland, Ohio, December 26, 1919.

Dear Mr. Black:

As you appointed ıe on the Reel and Slide Advertising Committee at the St. Louis meeting, I venture to take advantage of your public offer and submit to you such "questions, comments and suggestions" as may enlighten the exhibitors of the country on the general subject of screen advertising.

Question No. 1. You say that "a searching investigation" led you to the officers of the Universal Film Company where you found happiness in the fulfillment of your hopes. Will you please tell the exhibitors of the country whether you had any aid in your "searching investigation"? Did you consult any of the members of your Slide and Reel Advertising Committee or some one whose office is not so far from the Universal as the city of Cleveland is? Who outside of yourself supervised and arranged the bargain with Universal bringing so much Christmas cheer to the fireside of even the humblest exhibitor? When did the conviction of the Universal's most excellent educational films penetrate your reason? Was it at New Orleans or more recently on the seventh floor of 1600 Broadway when two were company and three constituted a multitude?

Question No. 2. In your "searching investigation" did you discover just about when Universal decided to pay the exhibitor for running its "educational films"? Was it about the time the Committee for the Protection of the Screen began to become inquisitive? Please advise us how much money the company made by running advertising films on the screens of the exhibitor before it decided to pay something? No exact sum is demanded. Our Screen Protection Committee will be very grateful to you for even an approximately accurate estimate.

Question No. 3. You say you have seen "industrial and educational films" recently made by the aforesaid producer and you express a hope that one of them showing how much of the world's rubber supply comes from Sumatra will soon "grace" our screens. What do you think of the "industrial and educational" films "The Awakening of Tim," "Hope of the Hills" and "Heads Win"? Some exhibitors tell me these two were just "raw advertising and an imposition on the exhibitor." What do you say?

Question No. 4. Do you think it wise and a benefit to the exhibitor to be tied up to any particuair film manufacturer, particularly when in the past this same manufacturer has specialized in camouflaged advertising?

Question No. 5. Do you really believe in an exhibitors' organization which must be supported directly or indirectly by the doles of the manufacturers? To me it seems that such an organization might tempt the pencil of the cartoonist and the writer of comic scenarios, but I cannot see it as a source of real usefulness to the exhibitor.

Question No. 6. Who is paying for the lavish advertising in the trade papers wherein you eulogize one certain brand of films and then sign your name to it as "president," etc. In view of the fact that the brand of the aforesaid company is mentioned seven times in two ads to the exclusion of all others, am I oversuspicious in my conclusion that you did not pay for it but that the manufacturer did, although the "Announcement" is made in your name and in the name of your pretended organization? A little "educational advertising" on the printed page, eh?

JUST ONE COMMENT: It is to laugh.

With one statement in your various outbursts I most heartily agree. You say "The World is Full of Wonders." It is, indeed, and the greatest of them all is the accelerated philanthropy of the noble producer under whose protecting wings you would gather your "vast" flock of unsophisticated exhibitors.

With assurances of my most distinguished consideration, I beg to remain,

Yours truly,

HENRY H. LUSTIG,

President Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association.

P. S.—In order to avoid all possible misunderstanding between yourself and the Universal Film Company, please take notice that Cleveland exhibitors are not to be included in your bargain. I tender without regret my resignation as member of your "Reel and Slide Committee."

FELLOW EXHIBITORS:

To judge by the excitement about screen advertising created in the advertising columns of the trade press, one might think that this is the overshadowing issue of the industry. It is not. It is a question of lesser importance. It is significant only because it shows the sharp division between the men who want to sell and mortgage the screens to producing interests and the men who stand for commercial independence of the exhibitor.

There you have the overshadowing issue. Exhibitors in close to forty states have effected state organizations. At last even the exhibitors respond to the instinct of self-preservation. If, at this time the exhibitors are in a particularly helpless condition is it because they have heretofore been sold, betrayed and delivered? The men who are now engaged in an earnest and honest effort to protect the property of the exhibitors are theatre owners with no conflicting interests.

It is not our intention to be turned aside in our constructive work by any personal abuse.

We feel that we are fighting interests who fear for their illegitimate gains. These interests seem to be behind Mr. Alfred S. Black, the shadow president of a shadow organization. We are not hitting at Mr. Black. We want no controversy with Mr. Black. Our case against him was fully proved last September in the trade press, whereupon he and his sponsor disappeared suddenly into the shadows. The exhibitors of this country have sustained us and the matter is closed. He interests us about as much as the inspired dummy dancing on the knee of the clever ventriloquist. We are out to reach the interests and influences which are using Mr. Black.

Mr. Black has seen fit to challenge our record and to charge us with the pursuit of personal gain. It is an old trick to resort to personal attack when you are trying to defend a bad cause. It always tends to divert attention from the inherent weakness of your proposition.

We are willing to let our records be compared with the records of the men who are moving this little pawn across the chessboard these masters of Mr. Black.

As far as the men referred to in the advertisement of Mr. Black are concerned they need no defense. Since they have been identified with organizations they have not directly or indirectly asked or received one penny from any source. Can Mr. Black say the same? They are neither altruists nor grafters. They are interested in organization because they believe that the protection of the screen against hostile legislation or producers' intrigues can best be achieved by united action. Such a mental attitude perhaps defies the comprehension of the men for whom the gentleman from New England is acting—not so much as a spokesman but as a decoy.

As for us, we would never come across even the existence of Mr. Black, if it had not been for our efforts to give the screen owners of America a genuine protection. In the pursuit of that object we discovered that Mr. Black and his Boss were putting obstacles in our path and in devious ways seeking to prevent exhibitors from getting together. Just as we were starting our drive to stop the producer from using our screens as a signboard for his advertising films, the trail of Mr. Black and his boss leads to the offices of one of these producers whence he issues a plea for the use of this particular producer's "industrial and educational" films.

Nothing presses more heavily upon the exhibitor today than the infamous five per cent rental tax which has now grown to the proportion of three times the original size, due to the increase of the price of film service. What effort has Mr. Black made to bring about a revision, if not a repeal, of this burdensome tax? At the recent taxation hearing before the House Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. Black was conspicuous by his absence.

At that hearing in Washington advertised with eclat by Mr. Black's overlord, who as chairman of the taxation committee, appointed innumerable "state directors" throughout the country, only one of these state directors appeared. Mr. Black himself was absent and only one man spoke for the exhibitors, a neighbor of the chairman of his taxation committee. This same man who at the Chicago convention had so tactfully referred to his fellow exhibitors as "cattle," characterized the motion picture theatres of the country as "illegitimate theatres" and only the good sense of the chairman of the committee, Representative Fordney of Michigan, prevented this chaste and refined characterization of the exhibitors from becoming a part of the Congressional Record.

The case of the exhibitors at that hearing was presented in such a pitiful way that one of the members of the Ways and Means Committee commented upon it as quite extraordinary. The exhibitors of the country may indeed deem themselves fortunate to have escaped additional taxes after such a wretched showing on the part of the alleged representative of the motion picture theatre owners of America.

We call particular attention to the letter of Mr. Henry Lustig of Cleveland, Ohio, a one hundred per cent exhibitor who attended the alleged convention at St. Louis and came from it hopeless and disgusted. He answered the questions in Mr. Black's effusion.

As recently as the 5th of August of 1919, it may interest you to know, the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. at the convention held at Rochester made an offer to the executive committee of the New York State Organization of Exhibitors to pay something for the use of our screens. The executive committee carefully considered the proposal and rejected it unanimously. First—because it offered no effectual help against crude and inferior industrial pictures. Second—because the compensation offered was ridiculously inadequate. Third—because the committee did not think it proper to form an alliance with any particular producer, particularly in view of the fact that an exclusive endorsement was asked for.

Mr. Black has indulged in a lot of talk about personal gain. May we not ask Mr. Black to explain a most delightful little paragraph in a most delightful little contract that he entered into with the Book Lovers' Picture Game Corporation on the 17th day of July, 1919, shortly after he had received the benediction by Louis at St. Louis. Here is the paragraph of Mr. Black's contract:

> "Herman A. Mintz, Esq., shall be employed to represent the interest of said 'exhibitors' in the carrying out of this contract and in obtaining the co-operation of the motion picture theatres and shall be paid for such services only out of the revenue received as aforesaid the sum of One Hundred Fifty Dollars weekly and ANY expenses incurred by him in connection with said employment."

And this other paragraph even more interesting and numbered 11 in the contract:

> "After said 'exhibitors' have retained the sums provided for in the preceding paragraphs, the balance remaining on hand shall be paid as follows: Fifty per cent thereof to the said 'company,' fifteen per cent thereof to said Kimball, fifteen per cent to the said Mintz, and the balance shall be retained by the exhibitors in addition to the provisions contained in paragraphs 9 and 10."

You, Mr. Black, appointed Mr. Herman A. Mintz, Esq., to represent the exhibitors. His compensation was to be $150.00 per week, fifteen per cent of the profits and all expenses. Will you deny that Mr. Herman A. Mintz is your personal attorney at Boston?

Under the Book Lovers' contract the exhibitors would have received practically nothing, and the entire scheme came to naught. Will your contract with the Universal, made without consulting any of the appointed commtiteemen, yield any more profit than the Book Lovers did or be any more of a success?

It is quite obvious that this organization has not assumed "a lukewarm attitude in the matter of one harmonious exhibitors' movement" because we have banded together to wage war on any individual or concern that stands in the way of an honest exhibitors' organization, controlled by the exhibitors and maintained exclusively for their benefit.

Before we leave the subject of screen advertising we will say in response to one of Mr. Black's questions that we have been offered and are about to release a number of industrial subjects made by several manufacturers which will be acceptable to the exhibitors. While these industrial films confer a legitimate benefit on the advertiser, their first object is the entertainment of the patrons. In this they differ strikingly from some of the films heretofore offered, which were principally cheap, crude and clumsy products. We will not allow any representative of the predatory interests to draw a red herring across the trail and to confuse the issues, issues which far transcend all personal questions and which we stated at the opening of this article, involve the commercial independence of the exhibitor and the integrity of his investment.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America cannot be thwarted in their determination to have a one hundred per cent exhibitors' organization.

A sample of the spirit which is now abroad was shown at the Syracuse convention in the State of New York where the exploiters were given short shrift. Just as these powers that prey are now dead in the State of New York and have been succeeded by a live, virile, efficient organization there will be a NATIONAL effort to finish the grafters and the job will be done at an early date. To this national gathering every motion picture theatre owner will receive an invitation to assure its thoroughly representative character.

All benefits arising from organization are to be enjoyed in equal measure by every member of the organization. At the next gathering of exhibitors looking toward a national organization the first proposed paragraph in the constitution will read something like this:

"Any officer or member of this organization who uses or attempts to use the name or the advantages of the organization for his own personal benefit in any way whatsoever shall upon proper proof be immediately expelled from the organization."

This is our final word on the subject. We now have thousands of individual contracts, signed by one hundred per cent exhibitors in all parts of the United States, and the list is growing daily. If you have not signed, see the secretary of your local organization or write to this office. Under Mr. Black's plan generous provision is made for his personal attorney. Under our plan, all money received goes directly into the hands of the various exhibitors' organizations for the exhibitors of each State to do with as they see fit. You may be sure that the sum the exhibitors will receive will be a just share of the amount paid by the national advertiser for the use of your screen.

Why?

Mr. Talbot is in business, like most of the rest of us, to make money. He expected Realart Pictures to add to his profits and to the prestige of his theatre.

Was he justified?

Here is his own opinion: "Tremendous crowds . . . . . hundreds turned away . . . . . congratulations."

REALART has rejected a lot of opportunities to do advance boasting and boosting. It might, for instance, have predicted that in her first starring vehicle,

CONSTANCE BINNEY

"ERSTWHILE SUSAN"

directed by John S. Robertson and based on the novel, "Barnabetta," the story of a modern Cinderella, by Helen R. Martin, would win instant recognition. But Realart preferred the message should come to you first hand from other exhibitors—from such men of vision as William Sievers of St. Louis, who says, "Miss Binney is destined to become one of the leading and most popular stars of the screen."

Realart has quoted many other exhibitors in these pages, and will quote more. But the trend of all the comment is the same: "'Erstwhile Susan' is a big buy," and "Constance Binney is a comer who has arrived"

N. Y. NEWSPAPERS REVIEW "12-10"

CAPITOL THEATRE, N.Y.

The picture is a real thriller. Mr. Brenon simply can't make an uninteresting picture. His direction is imaginative and dramatic. Then, too, Marie Doro is more beautiful than we have ever seen her before, and her acting is sensitive and expressive. —"The Morning Telegraph," December 22, 1919.

The ethereal beauty of Miss Doro was never quite so appealing as it is this week on the Capitol Theatre screen, where she is the star of "Twelve-Ten." And it has been a long, long time since Mr. Brenon has produced a picture quite so generally satisfying.—"The Evening Mail," December 23.

It is worth going to the Capitol merely to solve it and see Miss Doro's winsome acting in a story that is like a happy New Year wish —"The Sun," December 22.

Marie Doro, in a really surprising mystery photoplay, "Twelve-Ten." produced in Paris and London, is both beautiful and tensely dramatic.—"The Evening Sun," December 22.

. . . . It is a superior picture . . . scenes reveal the skill and the intelligence that go into the making of the best photoplays. . . . . Mr. Brenon could not have done this all alone. He received invaluable assistance from Miss Doro, who, in addition to her competence on the speaking stage, is a pantomimist of unusual talent. Her actions, especially in emotional scenes, have plain meaning and subtle significance.

PRESENTED BY JOSEPH M. SCHENCK

A chorus girl's life is not always all lobsters and midnight frolics. This one stalls the rent man.

The show girls plan how to get a square deal when hunger stalks and the purse is perfectly flat.

Poverty drives "Lillums" to accept aid from a stage door Johnny, but he is the kind that demands a heavy toll.

"How can I walk with my hand hurt?" she asks, when caught stealing a ride in her flight from the persistent wooer.

"Why, you have scarcely any clothes on. Your picture is a disgrace," says the grouchy bachelor in whose house she takes refuge.

Nobody to love her but the dog in this home of three women-haters, where show girls are taboo.

A "First National" Attraction

There's a Barrel of Fun

"TWO WEEKS"

It's peppy with spice—piquant, bubbling and sparkling with laughter—but with a strong love interest. The world will fall in love with her in this new play.

Adapted from Anthony Wharton's play, "At the Barn"

"We won't let him send you away," and two of the "old bears" are softened by a woman's tears.

A kiss would heal it quicker, but the poor, bruised hand has won the sympathy of the crusty old butler.

And the cook, in this house without love, quickly succumbs to the charmer's winning smile.

But the youngest and handsomest of the three bachelors refuses to fall for her feminine wiles.

Until his sense of chivalry is aroused to protect the weak when the promoter comes again to demand his "toll."

And then, what do you think? The grouchiest of the bears is caught, actually hugging the fair young charmer.

Mr. Auginbaugh of Mingo

WE print on another page a letter from B. A. Auginbaugh, superintendent of public schools in Mingo, Champaign County, Ohio. Mr. Auginbaugh takes exception—strenuous exception, it seems to us, much more so than the circumstances apparently warrant—to editorial comment in the Moving Picture World's issue of December 20, under the caption of "Church Shows Hitting the Theatres."

As our readers may recall we deplored the action of an exchange booking to an exhibitor at a high rental a subject that a few days later was to be issued to a church. The authorities of the latter posted a bulletin setting forth that the production which the theatre owner was advertising would be shown in the church edifice a day or two later. "The inference was, of course, that the parishioners should wait until the church performance could be given," said the news letter on which our comment was based. "That a large number took this advice and patronized the church show was evident by the crowd attending the latter."

We said then that such action plainly was taking advantage of an exhibitor and that it did not seem equitable or at all necessary that in the making up of church programs there should be included pictures the showing of which in any manner would conflict with the subjects recently or soon to be shown in neighborhood theatres.

We reiterate the statement.

Mr. Auginbaugh asks for a square deal for churches and schools. We hope they get it. They seem to be getting it now beyond question. We simply were asking that the exhibitors also be given a square deal.

Our correspondent refers to our "first doing away" with the educational department and adds that "now in your open hostility to schools and churches using pictures you are becoming our enemy instead of our former friend." His letter is dated December 26. Even as it was being penned the issue of the World for January 3 containing an educational department was on the presses. The "open hostility" exists only in the mind of the schoolmaster.

Mr. Auginbaugh's statement that the World aims to destroy "us" through the exchanges not only impugns the intelligence of World readers but carries its own refutation. The denial that the exchange's charges to the churches are not lower than to the theatres may be true so far as Mingo is concerned, but Mr. Auginbaugh hardly can be qualified to speak with authority as to the practice of exchanges all over the country. There is no urgent reason why charges to churches should not be lower if only the exchanges will exercise intelligence and not book competing shows.

In Mingo it seems prices of theatre admissions have been raised through the influence of Mr. Auginbaugh and his coworkers and that the relations between the schools and local theatres are most cordial. This makes for good reading, but the situation in the communities referred to by us in the article complained of was very much different. The schools of Mingo, a 500 population town, pay the same rentals as does Urbana, of 12,000 inhabitants.

The Mingo superintendent is writing more in heat than in sobriety of judgment when he says our editorial was a plea for the "converted livery stable circus showman." Actually it was a plea that all exhibitors might be protected against unfair competition so far as exchange managers had it in their power equitably to protect them.

Perhaps had Mr. Auginbaugh a few years ago discovered Sam Rothapfel in a barroom of a Pennsylvania mining town exhibiting pictures to a number of local residents seated in chairs rented from an undertaker he would have proceeded to "put out of the game" the man who later made famous the Regent, the Strand, the Rialto, the Rivoli and now the California. We say perhaps. Contrary to the position of Mr. Auginbaugh, the Moving Picture World is not for putting out of the moving picture business any man connected with a livery stable or a circus—or with any other honorable calling.

"Let the theatres keep up with us or quit," says the schoolmaster. "To try to support them by your suggested underhand method of extra rental is infamous and un-American." Again Mr. Auginbaugh's temper comes to the surface. The suggestion of extra rental to schools is all Mr. Auginbaugh's own. We absolutely are opposed to that course of procedure.

Mr. Auginbaugh challenges the World to print his letter verbatim. We take pleasure in doing so. We are under the impression, however, his "burning words" will not look as good to him in cold type as they did when he penned them.

Censorship Investigators Select Place of Meeting

THE Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York, has been selected as the place for the first meeting of the recently appointed committee which will investigate the need of censorship in motion pictures in New York State and later on will render a report which will form the base of any attempted legislation along these lines between now and April.

W. S. Capes, secretary of the State Conference of Mayors, has announced the first session of the committee for January 15 and 16 at the well-known New York hotel. Mayor Palmer Canfield of Kingston, chairman of the committee, will preside. The first session will be called to order at 2:30 o'clock.

While the details of the coming sessions are now being worked out by Secretary Capes, it is expected that the first afternoon will be given over to visiting one of the large producing companies in order that the committee may see a film in its making. On the following morning the committee will watch the National Board of Review in the actual process of reviewing some picture.

Philadelphia Managers Plan to Stabilize Work

PHILADELPHIA exchange managers at a representative gathering have taken steps to stabilize the film business in the city for the New Year. An association was organized at a meeting held in the offices of the Metro Film Exchange, to work through the Philadelphia chamber of commerce for the standardization of the affairs of the industry in the territory.

It is understood that the first step will be for the modification of the Pennsylvania censor laws in conjunction with the action of the national committee on censorship. The association will cooperate with the national body at all times in this matter. Although plans for this organization had been long under way, nothing definite was accomplished until the last meeting, which was attended by the managers of eleven of the largest exchanges in this city. They were Harry M. White, Goldwyn; Robert Lynch, Metro; Wiliam U. Bethel, Select; George Dembow, Fox; John Clark, Paramount; William J. Heenan, First National; William Priest, Republic; V. R. Carrick, Inter State; L. Bache, Electric; Herbert Given, United Pictures, and Jay Emanuel, Realart.

MINGO PUBLIC SCHOOLS.
B. A. Auginbaugh, Supt.
Mingo, Champaign County, Ohio.
Member of the Ohio Inter-School Motion Picture Association.

Editor of Moving Picture World.

I NOTE your editorial in your issue of December 20 headed "Church Shows Hitting the Theatres." Permit me to say that this came as a most disagreeable surprise to me. Apparently in your first doing away with your educational department and now in your open hostility to schools and churches using pictures, you are becoming our enemy instead of our former friend. I do not lament this condition on our part, but on your own account. Not long since you heralded our project on your editorial page and praised it. You took up our problems and assisted us. Now you turn on us and aim to destroy us through the exchanges. You cannot do this and the sooner you cease the attempt the sooner it will be to your interest. Your editorial was most ill-advised.

If you will examine your own files (Projection Department), you will find that the school shows have better men in the "booth" than most regular houses. I deny the charge that they undercharge. In fact we brought the price up in our own locality to 10 and 15 cents and later to 10 and 20 cents. We took this matter up with the regular theatres and brought them to see that they were undercharging.

Our relations with our local theatres are most cordial and we mutually help each other. In localities where pleasant relationships do not exist it is more likely to be due to the theatres than the schools.

We now pay the same rentals as the theatres—in fact more. Our town of less than 500 pays the same prices as Urbana of 12,000! We are not asking charity of anyone, but we do ask for a square deal. We are in for putting the "converted-livery-stable" circus-showman out of the game, as what reputable exponent of good pictures should not be —you included! And we are putting them out and no others. They are the only squealers. Your editorial is a plea for them, more to your own shame.

If school and church shows can exist in the face of theatres—there is a reason. They deliver the goods. People buy where they receive the goods, be it church, school or theatre, when the goods are the same material. Let the theatres keep up with us or quit. To try to support them by your suggested underhand method of extra rental is infamous and un-American! I challenge you to print this letter verbatim!

Very truly,
B. A. AUGINBAUGH.

Kress Loses Appeal.

Harry W. Kress, exhibitor of Piqua, Ohio, lost his appeal to the Supreme Court, at Columbus, which refused to hear the case against him of keeping open his theatre on Sunday. He was convicted in the courts of Miami county and fined $100 and costs. He was president of the Ohio Screen League, which has for its purpose the repealing of present laws against Sunday shows, or testing them in an effort to get them clearly defined as regards moving pictures.

Fred Desberg, of Cleveland, attorney for the league, says the fight will go on despite this ruling.

Richard Travers Returns to Screen.

Captain Richard C. Travers, former Essanay leading man, has returned from service in France and will resume his motion picture work at once. William Fox has signed Mr. Travers for the leading role in Pearl White's next picture.

Seek to Repeal Measure Permitting Local Option

WORD has reached Albany that a movement is on foot which has already gained considerable headway over New York State and which will seek to bring about a repeal of the law passed at the last legislature enabling cities to decide through their own governing boards whether or not Sunday motion picture shows would be permitted.

Just what organizations or what individuals are inspiring the present movement is not definitely known, but it is thought that they are the same who fought the bill tooth and nail last winter, and who declared at that time that they would continue the fight despite the fact that the legislature passed the bill and it met with the governor's approval.

It is said that the present movement has already reached Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo and other cities, and that the work which is being attempted will not only undo that of last winter on the part of exhibitors and the tens of thousands of others favorable to Sunday shows, but that the present agitators will seek to close motion picture houses that have been open in a number of cities for several years past.

There is a saving of $4.80 to those who pay the annual subscription rate of $3 to Moving Picture World. The newsstand price is 15 cents.

AN ACTIVE FIELD

Winnipeg Clergy Protests Restrictions on Its Shows

A PROPOSAL by the City of Winnipeg, Manitoba, to place restrictions upon the staging of moving picture performances in buildings other than moving picture theatres has brought protests from the local clergy. It was found that picture shows were being conducted with frequency at churches and in club rooms, no less than four film exhibitions being given in one church building during a recent week.

The fire, water and light committee of the city council drew up a by-law which requires that a licensed operator must be in charge of projection machines when the audience consists of fifty or more persons. Film entertainments on the third or higher floor of a building were also prohibited and the by-law also stipulates that not more than two shows a month can be given in any but a regular moving picture theatre. The provision is made that all seats or chairs must be fixed firmly to the floor in all buildings where film shows are given. The by-law perscribed that a tent in which moving pictures are screened cannot be classed as a moving picture theatre and that all regulations of the by-law would apply to shows in tents as well as permanent buildings.

Copies of the by-laws were sent to members of the Ministerial Association and to the Anglican Synod for perusal and the result has been that objection has been taken to the new requirements. The clause providing for the attachment of chairs or benches to the floor of an auditorium has aroused the loudest protest because, it is argued, such a procedure would place a limitation on the uses to which a parish hall or Sunday School room could be put.

Federal Authorities May Prosecute Abusive Writers

EXCHANGE managers of Washington, D. C., are planning a campaign to clean up the territory in at least one respect. For some time past it has been the practice of a number of exhibitors in the locality to write insulting and often libellous letters to the managers, threatening them with all sorts of dire results if they did not do things these exhibitors wanted.

These letters are to be withdrawn from the files of the exchanges and those that are really bad will probably be turned over to the post-office department for investigation. A committee has been appointed for that purpose, it is said, and the managers are going to do all that they can to make their correspondence clean, courteous and businesslike.

Some of the missives that are received at the exchanges, it is learned, are of a highly inflammatory type and quite likely to get their writers in trouble with the federal authorities. Many of these come from Virginia and West Virginia. Authorities state that regardless of the provocation, the exhibitors in question have no right to send such letters through the mails and their submission to the post office people would make it rather warm for them.

A number of the managers have been assured of the assistance and co-operation of many reputable exhibitors in stamping out this trade abuse. The grievance committee in this territory, made up of exhibitors and exchangemen, has deplored the existence of the present condition. The action contemplated seems the only one that will effectively stop the practice.

Baltimore Kiddies Guests of Four Theatre Managers

FREE moving picture entertainments were held in four theatres in Baltimore during the holidays for the poor children. The managers of the various theatres arranged the shows and donated the playhouses for the occasion. The show for orphans, held at Loew's Hippodrome under the auspices of the Knights of Columbus, was attended by 1,300 orphans on Sunday, December 21. Gifts were provided and each child received a present when he left the theatre. George McDermitt arranged the program.

Under the auspices of the Christmas Club, a performance which did not include moving pictures was given at Ford's Opera House, on Christmas Day, at which 1,400 poor children were present. Charles E. Ford, manager of the theatre, arranged a program for the entertainment and Grant Mitchell, star of "A Prince There Was," then playing at that house, was Santa Claus.

A special program of moving pictures was furnished L. A. DeHoff, manager of the Garden Theatre, for the entertainment which was given to 2,000 poor children at that playhouse under the auspices of the Advertising Club of Baltimore, on Saturday morning, December 27. Gifts were provided and the children had a rollicking time.

At the Maryland Theatre, Manager J. L. Schanberger arranged a Christmas entertainment for all the crippled children in Baltimore for Sunday afternoon, December 28.

Californians Organize Advisory Censor Board

REALIZING that subtle influences are at work to interfere with the development of the moving picture industry along proper lines, and acting upon a suggestion received from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, a meeting of interested parties was held recently at San Francisco at the call of H. L. Kappen, president of the San Francisco Film Board of Trade, and an advisory board of censorship was organized. This organization will pass upon any film productions of a doubtful character, but its real object will be to stand guard and resist any attempts to extend the scope of official censorship.

The organization consists of three units, one representing the general public, one the exhibitors and the third one the film exchanges. The public will be represented by the Rev. Fruehling, of Vacaville; Curran D. Swint, of the San Francisco Call, and Mrs. James Rolph, Jr., wife of the mayor of San Francisco. The interests of exhibitors will be cared for by Eugene H. Roth, of the California, Imperial and Portola Theatres; James Beatty, of the Liberty theatres, San Jose and Fresno, and L. E. Lund, of the Broadway Theatre, Oakland. The film excahnges will be represented by H. L. Knappen, manager of Select; R. B. Quive, manager of Realart, and A. M. Bowles, the American representative.

Co-operation Is Needed Is Rembusch's Message

IN the following telegram to Moving Picture World, received shortly before press time, Frank J. Rembusch, national secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, wishes all a happy New Year and makes recommendations that would insure a prosperous year for all:

"National screen advertising plans are excellent. The actual merits or demerits of either plan in controversy are only known to me from the trade journal advertisements. Any exhibitor organization activities look good even though they seem at cross purposes. We hold a meeting in New York next week which I hope will bring harmony. Exhibitors have before them the greatest opportunity for a successful business this year.

"We need co-operation between competitive exhibitors, better pictures and intelligent efforts with broader co-ordination between all branches of the industry. A happy New Year to all.

Mary Pickford's Grandmother Dies.

The death occurred at Toronto on December 19 of Mrs. Sarah Smith, grandmother of Mary Pickford, Jack Pickford, Lottie Pickford and others. Mrs. Smith's deceased son, John Smith, was the father of the screen stars. According to the published obituaries, there are twenty-four grandchildren in addition to Mary Pickford.

Cradle Rocking for an Infant Industry

Glancing Through Moving Picture World Ten Years Ago

THE issue of Moving Picture World for January 8, 1910, was thin in size and scarce of news. Just at that time Billy Ganes was the Roxey-Riesenfeld of Broadway. He had been graduated from the Manhattan Theatre into a specially-built house at Thirtieth street and was making residenters sit up and take notice with "pictures on Broadway."

But he polluted his bills with cheap vaudeville and got the editor of Moving Picture World after him to this effect: "We looked upon Mr. Ganes as the man to seize the opportunity that lay ready for him—that opportunity being to give Broadway a picture palace, and a picture palace only.

"Broadway has not yet got its picture palace. It has its theatres galore, it has its vaudeville houses, but its picture palace has yet to be erected—erected on a sumptuous scale with the picture beautifully shown, with flowers, music and all the rest of the concomitants which make the sumptuary surroundings of the moving picture as luxurious and as beautiful as those which surround the opera or the high-class play.

Reading the Tea Leaves.

"In other words what we want to see on Broadway is the moving picture treated with the dignity which Mr. Hammerstein treats opera or Charles Frohman treats a play."

On Saturday, April 11, 1914, the editor got his wish. The Strand opened with "The Spoilers," with "flowers, music and all the rest of the concomitants"—including Roxey Rothapfel. The editor of Moving Picture World was only four years and four months ahead of the times with his appeal for picture palaces. Depend upon the World to be just about that far ahead of the times in all things that make for improvement in the industry.

Back in January, 1910, cheap vaudeville was held as a menace to pictures and in proof of which the passing of the Unique, Philadelphia, was noted.

"Those five cent palaces on Market street," said a World editorial, "which started out a year or more ago to give a combination program have found that people who want vaudeville will go to a regular vaudeville house and those who want to see pictures will rather patronize a house that is devoted to the exclusive exhibition of the best pictures.

Jitney Prices and Patronage Prizes.

"The managers of the combination house have done everything they could to stem the tide. The Palace offers elegant souvenirs to ladies. The Victoria decorates its entrance with a department store showcase in which is displayed a dummy showing the petticoats to be given away as souvenirs. The Unique decided that the limit had been reached and instead of giving away souvenirs closed a place that had been erected a year ago at great expense."

Pictures in those days suffered so much from "rain" that waterproof film had been placed upon the market as the latest development of the business.

"The Vitagraph Company is now issuing its own lithograph posters," said one paragraph commending enterprise.

"Every Vitagraph employee received a fat turkey for Christmas, and a group photograph was taken showing the event." Turkey, on the hoof, didn't stand Vitagraph 60 to 65 cents the lb. in 1910!

"The Edison Manufacuring Company is beginning to receive flattering comments on the improvement in the photographic quality of their films of late," was a public ist's paragraph which for modesty is commended in comparison to present-day boosting.

Selig Lays Aside Publicity Quill.

Harry Gordon, for many years head of the firm of Gordon & Bennett, producers of "The Holy City," "The Royal Slave," and other Chicago melodramas, succeeded Thomas Quill as "press representative and advertising agent" for the Selig Polyscope, Inc. Nowadays they are "Directors of Publicity and Advertising."

Just imagine referring to Arthur James as William Fox's "advertising agent"! Or to Ralph Block as Goldwyn's "press representative." The game is getting better—yes, indeed!

The following "well known producers" were under contract with Selig: Francis Boggs, later killed by a Japanese in Los Angeles; Otis Turner, Lorin J. Howard, Frank Beal and Frank Baum. Remember 'em?

Selig Threatens a Revolution.

Not at all as a "Red" did William N. Selig threaten. Nevertheless, he was just back from a trip to Europe, elated over the popularity of his films in Continental cities and "will soon announce some film subjects that will revolutionize the film industry in this country."

Elbert Hubbard declared himself a "moving picture fiend." "For nervous prostration or nervous prosperity try the moving picture," advised the oracle. "Between nicotine and the nickleodeon I prefer the latter," said he.

At the invitation of T. D. Cocharne, general manager of the Independent Moving Picture Company, employees of that concern assembled at Cafe Boulevard for a spread and jolly time on Christmas Eve. L. J. Rubinstein was toastmaster. Bill Ranous, "Silent" Harry Solter and "Doc" Willart contributed their talents to the entertainment. The health of their absent host, Carl Laemmle, was toasted. Proving that it was a wet banquet, his employes presented General Manager Cochrane with a silver-handled umbrella.

Rex Beach Gets Into the Movies.

"Pardners" was the Edison release for January 4. Referred to as "Rex Beach's extraordinary story of life and scenes in the Alaskan gold fields." Edison furnished twelve printed lines on the subject.

"More Refined Audiences Demand a Stricter Censorship" was headline that told a story. "I think very few exhibitors are clamoring for murders and shocking tragedies," said W. C., "as patronage has increased since such pictures were reduced in numbers."

Through the efforts of Herbert F. Streeter, manager of the Bijou, Greenfield, Mass., two great tragedies of Deerfield will be reproduced under contract by the Edison Company. The attack on the town by French and Indians in 1703 and the massacre at Bloody Brook in 1675 were to be re-enacted on the exact local of the original events. Here's a thought for present-day managers who run houses in localities that have a history. Just a tip to Watt Rothacker et al.

"Moving pictures were taken in an aeroplane near Paris last week," said one of the few items of news ten years ago. "Latham, the well known aviator, made a seven-minute flight, carrying a cinematograph and an operator, who worked the camera throughout the trip, which was made at the height of eighty feet with the lens pointed earthward."

Contrast this with the recent display in Pathe News of the "Leap for Life" via parachute.

Among the picture theatres projected we find this item: Academy of Music, New York City, on Fourteenth street, to be opened in two or three weeks by the Shuberts as M. P. theatre, renting for $125,000 per annum.

Line Up of "Licensed" Films.

Very many of the licensed manufacturers live only in the records of this later era—but Pathe and Vitagraph are still on the job and going strong. Here is the weekly lay-out ten years ago:

And there were others, many others, making and distributing pictures and not associated with either "system."

If you can wait that long, in your perusal of this chronological serial, we shall escort you, next week, through the issue of Moving Picture World dated January 15, 1910.

Cohen, Berman and O'Reilly Reply to Statement of President Black

Motion Picture Exhibitors League
State of New York,
708 Times Building, New York.

Editor Moving Picture World:

In your issue dated January 3 (pages 44 and 45) you published what purported to be a statement signed by Alfred S. Black, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc. In the course of this statement the writer makes a number of assertions which we denounce as absolutely false. He purports to describe conversations alleged to have been held between him and ourselves a short time before the recent hearing on taxation held before the House Committee on Ways and Means at Washington, D. C. In these assertions the writer either claims or insinuates that we were anxious to use our offices for personal gain to the detriment of the motion picture exhibitors who had placed confidence in us. We will give the writer an opportunity to prove his allegations.

In the meantime we request you to publish our emphatic denial of all the claims and insinuations contained in the article in your advertising columns and we request you to publish the facts in the case, which were as follows:

Black Sought Unity for Tax Hearing.

First, Mr. Black called upon us and presented to us the necessity of making a united front at Washington. He said that he had heard that the State of New York and other states in sympathy with the State of New York were about to have introduced separate legislation for the repeal of these taxes. He said that he would deplore any such separate action, as it might tend to create a bad impression in the national legislature. We were disinclined to accede to his request because we believed the tax situation had been poorly handled by his predecessor.

He thereupon gave us most explicit assurances to the effect that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee had given him to understand that the committee looked favorably upon at least the modification of the tax. We pointed out to Mr. Black that the exhibitors of the country had no confidence in the man he had appointed as chairman to his tax committee and we urged him to take the leadership himself. We also urged upon Mr. Black the need of having as chairman an exhibitor without any side interests.

Black Refused to Sacrifice Blumenthal.

We told him we thought it unwise to antagonize the trade press by singling out the Exhibitors Trade Review as the champion of tax reform. Mr. Black also begged us not to press this point because it would cause a lot of personal embarrassment to remove Mr. Blumenthal at that time. He also pointed out that his tenure of office would not go beyond a few weeks because of hearing on the tax situation would be held at an early date thereafter.

Placing faith in his earnest and repeated assurances and convinced that even the appearance of a dissension in the ranks of the exhibitors might work to the injury of the cause which was close to all our hearts we yielded to Mr. Black's desires. He thereupon assumed complete responsibility for the consequences of the hearing, and what these consequences were is a matter of public record.

Declares Tax Hearing a Failure.

One member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, at first friendly disposed toward some modification of the tax, after the hearing expressed himself very freely as to the wretched showing made on behalf of the motion picture men. He said in all his experience as a member of the committee he did not recollect a case which was presented more wretchedly and with less skill and ability than that of the motion picture exhibitors.

So much for the tax hearing. As to the advertising question which Mr. Black said he discussed with us and in which according to his statements we were out for our personal gain as the sole object of all our thoughts, the facts were as follows:

Mr. Black told us that he had made arrangements to have three sets of slides made with suitable quotations relating to the need of repealing the proposed taxation. These slides, he said, he proposed to have displayed on the screens throughout the country. On each of these slides was to appear the name of some national advertiser who in return for the advertising value would pay a substantial sum of money in order to defray the expenses of an anti-tax campaign. We told Mr. Black that we did not believe that such a plan would help the situation any in the State of New York because the political situation was satisfactory to us at the time.

"A Book Lovers' Contest."

We took occasion after having declined his slide offer to call his attention to the copy of a contract which had been sent by him to a western exhibitor. The western exhibitor had sent it back to us with a request for information. The copy referred to was a copy of the contract in which Mr. Black described as a "book lovers' contest."

We had examined the contract and had run across the name of H. A. Mintz, Esq., of Boston. Mr. Mintz interested us because under the terms of the contract he seemed to be one of the chief beneficiaries. Mr. Black told us that H. A. Mintz, Esq., of Boston, was his personal attorney. We asked him whether his advertising committee had been consulted by him on this contract proposition and he replied that he had attended to the matter for them.

No Other Discussions.

No other matters of any kind were discussed between us and Mr. Black either at this conference or before the conference or after the conferenc, anywhere or at any time. We cannot make it strong enough that we are not interested in any way in any producing or distributing companies.

Here are the plain, simple facts, contrasted with the distortions of Alfred S. Black.

Realart Pictures Compete in Same Week on Broadway

IN a return engagement to Broadway, "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production, has repeated past performances at the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre, acording to the report of Moss officials.

It was a doubly important week for the young producing company, for at the same time Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables" made her New York debut under the Realart banner at the Rivoli Theatre and proved to be an appealing holiday attraction, the last three days of the picture's run being distinctly notable from the Rivoli box-office point of view.

Because "Soldiers of Fortune" was already well-known through its New York premiere at the big Capitol Theatre several weeks ago, the exploitation of the picture was confined to extensive bill-board and newspaper advertising under the direction of Gerald Spiero of the Moss publicity staff.

"The picture was a knock-out," declared Mr. Spiero, "and following the success which it had at the Broadway Theatre, it will be shown soon over the entire B. S. Moss circuit of theatres."

According to the Moss statements, "Soldiers of Fortune" has the distinction of being one of only three big feature pictures which have had showings at the Broadway Theatre after they had proved their box-office value at other houses on the White Way.

Famous Players Names Two of Its January 4 Releases

STRAIGHT drama and merry comedy are offered by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in its Paramount-Artcraft releases of January 4. They are Enid Bennett in the Thomas H. Ince production, "The Woman in the Suitcase," and Bryant Washburn in "Too Much Johnson."

It is a homely little bit of domestic drama that is unfolded in the Enid Bennett picture. A unique feature, for motion pictures, is that the two leading figures in the picture aren't a pretty girl and a man who is trying to marry her. Filial love is the motif this time—the affection of a resourceful boarding school miss for her father, and her efforts to free him of an entanglement into which a designing siren has led him.

"Too Much Johnson," is the Washburn picture. Wiliam Gillette was the author. It originally was presented at the Standard Theatre, New York, in 1894, with Mr. Gillette himself playing the leading role.

Kline Sues Universal.

Harry D. Kline, who was manager of the production department in the studio of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at Universal City, has filed an action in the United States district court at New York against that company to recover $33,200 for alleged breach of contract. The plaintiff alleges that he was employed under a two-year contract, commencing May 14 last, at a salary of $300 a week during the first year and $500 a week during the second year. He alleges that he was dismissed on December 6 and demands his salary for the unexpired term of the alleged contract.

Metro to Distribute Five S-L Specials in 1920

METRO announces the completion of arrangements with Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of S-L Pictures, whereby Metro will distribute five productions de luxe to be made by S-L during 1920. The arrangement provides that the S-L organization will make these pictures in the Metro studios.

The details of the negotiations for Metro to distribute the S-L productions have been quietly worked out for several weeks. It is now made public that work on the first of the S-L subjects to be released and distributed by Metro, will be started shortly after the first of the year.

The five S-L productions will be picturized only from the biggest Broadway play successes or from novels having world wide circulation and written by authors of international reputation. Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin state that the market will be scoured for the finest available material of this character.

A most elaborate and comprehensive publicity campaign will be worked out between the executives of S-L Pictures and the publicity and advertising department of Metro, the details of which will be announced shortly.

"Beckoning Roads" Shows Beautiful Wearing Apparel

BECKONING ROADS," Bessie Barriscale's latest picture for Robertson-Cole, is the most pretentious offering in which the popular star has appeared and has been heavily booked by first-run houses. It was adapted from the story by Jeanne Judson, which was published in serial form in the Red Book under the title of "The Call of Life."

Miss Barriscale rises to emotional heights in a role that is splendidly suited to her talents. The lovely blonde star is dazzling in a variety of exquisite evening gowns, wraps and frocks, while the production throughout is dressed up with strikingly lavish sets, one in particular—the cafe ballroom—being particularly artistic and original

The cast includes Joseph Dowling, Niles Welch, Dorcas Matthews, Thomas Holding, Emmet King and Gloria Holt. Howard Hickman is responsible for the production.

Tower Announces a Chaplin.

In "Lord Helpus," the Charlie Chaplin single reel Special being released by Tower Film Corporation on the state rights market, Chaplin is given full scope for his funniest and most side-splitting comedy antics. His famous skid, his serious face and his laughable troubles are ludicrously brought out in this short comedy crammed with action and laughs.

As the story goes, Charlie has his hopes crushed, forever it seems. The only chance to win back and assure his "meal-ticket" is to be a hero. But who ever heard of a statue or a monument or anything being built for a live hero? Thereupon, logically, he deduces that he has to be a dead hero to be one at all.

There are some territories still open for this production, which promises to be a big box-office receipts booster.

Griffith's Trip to Nassau Checked By Hector Fuller to Refute "Fake"

THE eventful trip, on board the Gray Duck, from Miami, Fla., to Nassau, Bahama Islands, which kept the fate of David Wark Griffith and his party of thirty-six before the public in front-page newspaper stories for several days, has been described by Hector Fuller, in a most readable and comprehensive story. We have received a copy of the narrative and find it, unfortunately, too long to fully accommodate in the space at our disposal.

So well and so convincingly is it written the omission of its full text is a matter of regret—for the event will be long remembered as one of the most "suspenseful" episodes in the annals of moving pictures. Mr. Fuller was sent to Nassau, via Miami, to cover the trail of the Gray Duck for the purpose of refuting the aftermath of the Griffith voyage—in effect that the whole affair was a press agent's "plant."

Step by step Mr. Fuller goes over the course, first assembling facts that show how foolhardy was the initial move in attempting the voyage in a craft unsuited to requirements. A storm that kept other boats at safe anchor in Miami harbor was disregarded by the inexperienced landsmen and Griffith and his party put to sea with the Gray Duck commanded by an inexperienced skipper, according to the report.

Unsafe Craft on Reckless Voyage.

Rationed for what was to be considered only a ten hour trip, buffeted by wind and waves, "over engined" and "down at the head" the Gray Duck made a bad mess of her mission and, on Hector Fuller's testimony, performed a miracle in staying above the surface of the Gulf Stream. Food and water gave out, boat and passengers were in continuous peril and the whole adventure smacks of recklessness that comes mighty close to criminal disregard of ordinary precaution.

After detailing minutely the incidents of the voyage, as he had assembled them in narrative form, Mr. Fuller gives us a statement made to him by Mr. Griffith after the famous director had read the newspaper accounts that are familiar to all readers of the daily press. Mr. Griffith said:

Griffith's Own Story.

"There seems to be little that I can add to the very full accounts of what happened to us, though I am sorry to see that perhaps the actual dangers we faced were a trifle exaggerated. The initial mistake we made was in trying to reach Nassau from Miami in a boat unfitted to cope with the heavy seas.

"With our party on board, the Gray Duck was overcrowded. But all went well until we reached the Gulf Stream when we encountered a northeaster, that kicked up a choppy sea with heavy pounding waves that a staunch and more seaworthy boat than the Gray Duck would have had grave difficulty in riding.

"What danger we encountered was in trying to force the Gray Duck through the heavy seas. She pitched a lot and the engine stopped, leaving us at the mercy of the winds. This happened several times at the height of the storm.

"We were among the Berry Islands, and laboring heavily, we ran by Great Stirrup Key, the Little Hebrides and Bond Key and on the edge of the Northeast Providence channel, we ran between Whale and Chub Keys. Finally came to under the lee of the latter.

Short on Food and Water.

"It was while we were here, trying to get food and water that we saw the airplanes searching for us flying over our heads and the sea was so rough with so much white water that it is no wonder they failed ot locate us.

"The voyage from Miami to Nassau should have taken us not more than ten hours, that was why we had only one carboy of water and food enough for only one day. From Whale Key we succeeded in getting some brackish water to drink and a small sack of flour; this with some fish we procured from natives was all the food we had.

"It was when we tried to make headway against the waves that the Gray Duck was in the greatest danger. The boat was thrown on her beam ends; the waves broke clear over the boat and two of the party on deck were washed overboard and only dragged back to safety after they had been half drowned.

Company Brave in Danger.

"It was rather a bitter experience, especially so for the ladies of the party, but there were no heroics nor any occasion for heroics; everyone bore up bravely and courageously under what looked to be a very nasty situation.

"We, of course, had no idea how serious our absence was regarded, though some inkling of it came to us when we reached Nassau and found that in the ancient church that records the deaths of hundreds of brave seamen in these treacherous seas, prayers were being devoutly held for our safety. I have only the highest praise for the fine conduct of my associates, and the brave way in which the ladies disregarded the discomfort and the danger."

Sherrill Has Increased Capital Stock of Frohman Corporation

FROM William L. Sherrill, president of Frohman Amusement Corporation, comes the statement that at a meeting of stockholders it was voted to enlarge operations and to increase the capital stock of the company from $500,000 to $1,600,000. Arrangements have been completed for the early utilization of this increased capital.

"After six years of consistent endeavors in production of motion pictures," said Mr. Sherrill, "I feel that the public looks to the independent producer for consistent presentations. As the only producing organization that has never laid down its oars from the time of its initial production, it behooves our corporation to keep in step with the march of progress.

"My study of conditions convinces me that 1920 is the beginning of many years of substantial progress. Since the production of pictures is a business requiring large investments I could not proceed without added capital.

Program Bookings Obsolete.

"There is no longer the situation of being confronted with program productions or of theatres contracting far in advance to fill open dates. For the past six months the reports I have been receiving from independent exchanges indicate a flood of playing dates.

"On our latest release, 'Once to Every Man,' more prints have been used than on any other release of ours. I attribute this to the fact that theatres have been freed from the shackles of program booking or the booking of a series of features with either an individual star or of a single manufacture. In 1920 we will produce four features with a real and not a near star.

Plans Many Productions.

"We will also produce two road show attractions—that is, photoplays built to play in 'legitimate' theatres, and commanding theatrical admission prices.

"There will also be twenty-six two-reel western dramas starring Myna Cunard. In addition we will release twenty-six two-reel comedies with a comedian of popularity, and these, too, will be feature attractions of themselves.

"I recognize that this is an ambitious program for an independent organization. It is prompted not alone by the prosperous condition of the photoplay market, but as well by the demands which we have been receiving from exchangemen and exhibitors to give them more 'Frohman Productions.'

Money All Goes One Way.

"Now in these days when publications are headlining announcements of increased capitalization, a sum of a million and a half might not appear to be impressive. But this million and a half of the Frohman Amusement Corporation is to be devoted to production only—that is, to the making of motion pictures and not toward the maintenance of exchange on theatres.

"With conservative management and all departments concentrated on the making of the best form of photoplay possible, one can conceive that with this concentration we should be in an enviable position. We shall be specialists in production rather than dividing our endeavors to other branches of the industry which of themselves should form separate enterprises."

Critics and Fans Laud Fairbank's Latest Film

WITHOUT exception and in an unprecedented manner, every one throughout the country is expressing his most laudatory compliments on Douglas Fairbanks' latest United Artists' production, "When the Clouds Roll By," which has just been released. Exhibitors from all sections have wired Hiram Abrams their heartiest congratulations on this production; critics have given the picture some of the best reviews any Fairbanks production has ever received, and picture fans have crowded every theatre where it has been shown.

From the Tivoli Theatre in the West, the Criterion Theatre in the South, the Randolph in the North and the Rivoli in the East, and innumerable points between, reports have been received, all to the effect that the picture drew capacity houses. The Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, wired: "Fairbanks in 'When the Clouds Roll By' broke all house records. That was going some. Competition keen." Many other houses wired similar reports.

A few of the principal theatres throughout the country that presented the latest Fairbanks picture during its first week and have reported unprecedented business are the following: Coliseum, Seattle; Majestic Theatre, Portland, Ore.; Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco; McDonough Opera House, Oakland; De Luxe Theatre, San Jose; Liberty Theatre, Fresno; Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles; Criterion Theatre, Atlanta; Palace and Columbia theatres, Washington; Wizard, Baltimore; Victoria, Washington; Rivoli, New York; Strand, Rochester; Hippodrome, Buffalo; Goldwyn, Newark; State Street Theatre, Trenton; Capital Theatre, Elizabeth; American, Denver; Randolph and Castle theatres, Chicago; Majestic, Detroit, and the Stillman, Cleveland.

Anita Stewart Release Still Breaking Records

BREAKING records seems to be the established rule of "In Old Kentucky," the Louis B. Mayer-First National special release, starring Anita Stewart. On Sunday, December 28, the picture opened in St. Louis, Cleveland, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, with record-breaking business at each place. It was acclaimed as the best thing that Anita Stewart has done and as a great melodramatic spectacle.

With the reputation of the stage play's success on which to bank the advertising, "In Old Kentucky" created a furore of anticipation before the opening, and reports up to December 31 show that the record-breaking business of the Sunday performances has held up through the week.

Pathe States Release Date.

"The Web of Deceit," starring Dolores Cassinelli, which marks the debut as an independent producer of Edwin Carewe, the well known director, will be released by Pathe on January 18. Miss Cassinelli has made an enviable reputation as an emotional actress in her previous Pathe pictures. In "The Web of Deceit" Finis Fox, the author, designed a dual role for her that gives her every opportunity to display her marked emotional talents.

Few characters are required to tell the powerful story. Mitchell Harris in the leading male role makes his first appearance on the screen, although he has been seen in a number of Broadway stage successes. Others in the cast are Hugh Cameron, Franklyn Hanna and Letty Ford.

Triangle Starts Special Selling Drive.

Announcement is made by Triangle that a special selling campaign will be inaugurated on the Taylor Holmes and Olive Thomas series of Triangle plays These include Olive Thomas in "The Follies Girl," "Love's Prisoner," "Totan," and "Prudence on Broadway." The Taylor Holmes series include "Upside Down," "A Regular Fellow," "It's a Bear," "Taxi," "Three Black Eyes." Special exploitation is being prepared by Triangle for these series and each one of the nine productions will receive an unusual amount of general advertising such as productions of this caliber warrant.

Foreign Film Trade Expands With Signing of New Commercial Treaties

AFTER five years of repression and restriction brought about by the war, the motion picture industry in Great Britain now stands on the threshold of the greatest period of expansion and prosperity in its history. This, in brief, is the opinion of John Cecil Graham, general foreign representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who returned to New York Christmas Day, after an absence of two years, for a stay of one month.

"The English people have realized the importance and the possibilities of the motion picture as never before," said Mr. Graham. "Now that war-time restrictions have been to a great extent removed, there is a noticeable quickening in the process of develpoment and expansion which bids fair to make up for the past five years. The coming year promises a period of expansion and prosperity.

Attracting the Financiers.

"There is an urgent need in Great Britain of at least 1,000 new picture houses, as theatre building was halted at the beginning of the war. The activities and development of the motion picture industry during the war years have convinced the English people of the tremendous possibilities of the motion picture.

"I believe that the construction of at least 1,000 new theatres will solve to a great extent the problem of advanced booking now under discussion in English film circles. The great number of high grade films and the shortage of houses in which to show them have brought about a condition, which makes it necessary to book many months in advance.

Beautiful Theatres Projected.

"Before leaving London I was informed that a number of large theatre circuits in operation had obtained numerous sites for costly motion picture theatres. The coming months will witness an even greater activity in this respect.

"The relations of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., with the exhibitors have been most satisfactory. Standing room only and long queues before box-offices are regular features with almost every exhibitor as a result of the general prosperity.

"The most significant development of the year, however, has been the launching of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., the European producing organization. The London studio is now ready for operation. War conditions made the progress of organization slow, but Captain Albert A. Kaufman, Milton E. Hoffman and other production department experts have succeeded in whipping things into shape in a remarkably short time.

London Studio Begins Work.

"The first production to be filmed in the London studio will be Marie Corelli's 'The Sorrows of Satan,' which will be directed by Hugh Ford. The production of Paramount-Artcraft pictures in this new studio unit will be given the desired international flavor.

"It is our intention to encourage British talent. The activities of the production department abroad will bring about the intermingling of artists of all nations.

"The London studio will shortly take its place beside the Lasky studio at Hollywood and the New York studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as one of the three great production unit sof the corporation. The operations of the European organization will include a radius which takes in all of Western Europe.

European Trade Expanding.

"Great expansion of the European business of the Famous Players-Lasky has been brought about during the last twelve months. Through the Danish-American Film Corporation, Ltd., a newly organized corporation, arrangements have been made for the opening of great territory in Central Europe.

"The signing of a commercial treaty between Great Britain and Persia is opening the way for the development of that wide territory included in Western Asia. The signing of peace with Turkey and the signing of the commercial treaty with Persia will link India more closely with the British Empire and will be of immense benefit to the foreign business of Famous Players-Lasky.

Treaties Open Virgin Territory.

"The year 1920 will witness the greatest expansion and growth of the motion picture industry ever known. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will share in this period of development and expansion until the entire world is 'movieized.'

"The motion picture industry in France is making rapid recovery from the effects of the war. France also needs at least 1,000 new high grade motion picture theatres, and the coming year will undoubtedly witness a great increase in theatre building.

"Paramount Artcraft productions are distributed throughout France, Belgium, Switzerland and Egypt by Societe des Etablissements Gaumont, one of the largest and most important European organizations. We have just completed arrangements with this company for the distribution of our productions in Holland, Turkey and Greece."

Sam Warner Goes West to Start Helen Holmes Film

SAM WARNER, of Warner Brothers who have the distribution rights of Selig's wild animal serial, "The Lost City," recently arrived in Los Angeles to supervise the production of the second Helen Holmes serial, which will begin shortly.

Being an old friend of Mr. Selig, Mr. Warner arranged a party and called at Selig's zoological gardens. In the party were Sam and Jack Warner, Al St. John, Jack Dempsey, the heavyweight boxing champion, and his manager, Jack Kearns.

Colonel Selig is known throughout the motion picture industry for his hobby or collecting wild animals. He has a varied assortment, which was collected from every part of the world. When the Hallenbach-Wallace Circus was sold at auction last summer, Colonel Selig bought the biggest part of the menagerie, which brought his total of wild animals close to 800.

After luncheon, the colonel invited the party to give his zoo the "once over." He escorted the party through the various buildings and he explained some interesting facts concerning the animals.

"Sooner or Later," Late Film Title Originated by Selznick Executives

CONSIDERING the fact that there are more than 250,000 titles of stage and screen plays which have been copyrighted in America and England, it may be said that finding a new title that has never before been used is no mean task. Yet that is what Selznick officials have done. The new title of "Who's Who," with Owen Moore's second picture for the Selznick organization, is "Sooner or Later."

"Sooner or Later" is brand new. It has never before, so records show, been used for the name of a picture, stage play, book or short story. Therefore, it is entirely individual and original.

The advantage of a new title is almost self-evident. It lends itself to unusual advertising, reading and exploitation. Titles of plays are sometimes more difficult to find than plays themselves.

"Who's Who," the original title of this production, was not a new one. Records show that at least twelve such titles have been copyrighted in America and England, eight of these in the United States. The first "Who's Who" title was copyrighted in 1815, in England.

Another important item to consider in the selection of titles of pictures in America is the fact that unless it is new to England as well as the United States, it will lose its accumulated advertising and reputation when sold to English exhibitors. The English laws are very strict, so it is essential to select a title that will stand in England as well as in America.

"Lord Loves the Irish" Features Omaha Holidays

THE Lord Loves the Irish," J. Warren Kerrigan's new Robert Brunton production, which recently inspired Mae Tinee, critic of the Chicago Tribune, to turn versifier in praising it, was the subject of a four-column cartoon in the Omaha Daily News during the Christmas week showing of the W. W. Hodkinson release at the Moon Theatre, the newest of the Goldberg Brother's picture palaces in the Nebraska metropolis.

Accompanying the cartoon was a glowing review of "The Lord Loves the Irish," a paragraph of which was given over to commending Managing Director H. S. Goldberg on his splendid presentation of the romance.

The Moon management outdid itself in the promotion campaign. To the 4,000 screen enthusiasts on his mailing list, Mr. Goldberg sent the compliments of the season on specially-devised Christmas cards.

Shamrocks ran riot in the Moon lobby during the presentation. In a mammoth shamrock in the center of his lobby, Manager Goldberg had three enlarged pictures of Mr. Kerrigan. The interior of the Moon was also gaily bedecked in shamrocks and holly wreaths. A special program booklet for the week had a detachable portrait of J. Warren Kerrigan on its cover as a souvenir.

Another well known exhibitor, who had a profitable holiday week experience with "The Lord Loves the Irish," is T. E. Christopher, managing director of the Jewel Theatre, Beaumont, Texas, where the Kerrigan picture matched the attendance record set by one of the nationally recognized big pictures of the year.

News Reel Shows Varied Scenes.

In Universal Current Events, news reel No. 52, several unusual views of the newly arrived polar bears are shown in their "apartment" at the New York Zoo. Slipping to the faraway Phillipines, the cameraman shows how Manila and its environs looked when heavy floods recently imperiled the lives of many of its inhabitants.

Maurice Maeterlinck, the famous Belgian poet, is seen arriving on the S. S. LaFrance. Admiral Sims also submits to he caught on the same film. The cameraman helps out with a little trick stuff when he catches tobogganing pictures at Bear Lake, California. The desperate measures employed to free the grounded steamer, North Wind at Martha's Vineyard, Mass., are vividly portrayed, as is the saving of its precious coal cargo.

What Kind of an Edgar Is Little Johnny Jones?

JUDGING from the number of letters received at the Goldwyn offices from exhibitors, who are impatient to know what sort of a boy Booth Tarkington has created for his two-reel Edgar Comedies, now in production at the Culver City studios, this latest screen character is destined to become a figure of national renown. A fair idea of Edgar may be gained from a detailed description of Johnny Jones, the youth selected by E. Mason Hopper from over 200 applicants to fill the role.

Johnny is the son of Edward J. Piel, an actor, and Etta Raynor, an actress. He is 4 feet 10 inches in height and tips the scales at seventy-nine pounds. His hair is brown and his eyes are blue.

Newspaper Man Selznick Scenarist.

Myron Selznick is building up a strong personnel in the scenario department of Selznick Pictures. The latest addition to the scenario staff is Melville Hammett, who steps in as assistant to John Lynch, the editor.

Mr. Hammett has been a free lance writer for the screen as well a theatrical and motion picture reviewer for western newspapers.

Equity Reorganizes to Inaugurate New Policy

THE Equity Pictures Corporation, operating in California, Arizona and Nevada, with headquarters at San Francisco, has been reorganized and will operate along broader lines than at first planned. This concern was organized to handle Clara Kimball Young superfeatures and Harry Garson specials, amounting to about twelve a year, but these have not been completed as rapidly as was expected, owing to the extreme care being taken with them.

It has been decided to expand the organization into an independent film exchange handling high-class features only. Some of the original interests have withdrawn and those who control the organization are heartily in accord with the new policy. The first purchase has been that of "The Confession," and a campaign of propaganda on this has already been launched.

Jack A. Brehany, general manager of Equity, is a familiar figure in the film field, having leaped into prominence when he handled "Quo Vadis" in the West with such success that the accomplishment is even now frequently referred to by film men. He also exploited the "Birth of a Nation," and has always been connected with productions that have proven big box office attractions.

Fox Exchange Prepares to Enter New Quarters

WITH the time near at hand for the removal of the main offices of Fox Film Corporation, the New York exchange of that organization has secured new quarters which will be ready for occupancy by January 15. The new home of the Fox exchange in New York will be in the same building, 130 West Forty-sixth street. The exchange will occupy the entire tenth floor. This will give it 8,500 square feet of space.

Arrangements for the period between January 15 and February 1 are temporary only, but by the latter date the entire floor will be ready for use.

In its new quarters the exchange will offer every facility to the exhibitor. There will be besides the private offices of the manager and his assistants twenty offices for the sales staff. These offices will enable the Fox salesmen to give the theatre owners and managers added personnel assistance on the handling of pictures and exploitation of them and will fill a long-felt want caused by the lack of space.

There will be a spacious reception room for visiting exhibitors and their representatives, and every comfort will be offered these in the way of desks, writing materials and lounging chairs.

Giebler Looks Over Jack Dempsey and Declares Him Regular Fellow

IF I had seen Jack Dempsey before I saw Jess Willard, I would still be out the dollar I parted with as a consequence of the late unpleasantness at Toledo, because I still can't see how in the name of Tophet a medium-sized chap like Jack could knock the everlasting tar out of a big guy like Jess.

All of which goes to show that I am a bum picker when it comes to prize-fighters; and this is the reason that I am not going to do any raving on and on about Jack Dempsey being an actor, because there is a possibility that I may be as bum a picker this time as I was before.

But while I am sawing the wood of silence as to Jack's ability to hold the mirror up to nature, between you and me and the gatepost, I think Dempsey is going to get by in fine shape and that there is a good chance that he will even give a good imitation of a house afire when it comes to pleasing the public.

Jack has the facilities of one of the greatest studios in the country, a good director, a good cast, good backing—Bob Brunton tells me they are going to spend a hundred and eighty thousand dollars on the production—and on top of all that there is Jack himself, with his pleasant smile, an undoubted personality, refreshing modesty, and an honest desire to make as good an actor as he has a scrapper.

He's Dare-Devil Durant.

The Dempsey contribution to the year's films will be in the shape of a fifteen-episode serial to be released on the Pathe program. The production is being made at the Brunton studios in Los Angeles, under the supervision of Robert Brunton himself, and with W. S. Van Dyke, who has just finished piloting King Baggot through "The Hawk's Trail," as director.

The serial, which will be called "Dare-Devil Durant," and is by Frederick Chapin, Pathe production manager, and Harry Hoyt. Jack Cunningham wrote the continuity. It deals with the adventures of a sturdy young chap from the West who works his way through an eastern college.

Josephine Sedgwick, who played the lead opposite Will Rogers in the Goldwyn Film "Jubilo," has the principal feminine role. Lon Chaney, who played the Frog in the "Miracle Man," has an important part, and Herschel Mayall, Frederick Starr, Frank Lanning, Edward Hearn, Albert Cody and Al Kaufman make up the other principals.

Punch Aplenty, But No Prize Ring.

There is to be no prize ring atmosphere to the action. Of course, Jack will be given plenty of opportunities to show his punch—the six last named players in the cast are heavies, and some of them are very heavy. Al Kaufman is a former heavyweight fighter, and has about twenty-five knockouts to his credit. Al is the chap who played the heavy in Charlie Ray's "Egg Crate Wallop."

Jack will be contending with these chaps fistically all through the action of the serial. This alone will make it nice and lively, if nothing else.

Considerable work has already been done on the Dempsey picture. A number of interiors have been made, and quite a few exteriors have been shot on the lot. Several episodes are to be taken in the Coconino forests in the neighborhood of Flagstaff, Arizona, and some of the location stuff will be shot in Wyoming.

Nothing "Up Stage" About Dempsey.

I met Dempsey soon after his arrival on the Coast and have seen him several times since at the studio. Jack is a pleasant fellow, does not put on any "side," dresses in an inconspicuous manner and seems altogether free of anything savoring of the "Great I Am" stuff.

When you are introduced to Jack he gives you a hearty hand, a boyish and somewhat bashful grin, says he is glad to meet you and acts as though he meant it, and then after a few words he will take you by the lapel of the coat and say:

"Why don't you come out to the house—say Monday, Tuesday—any night—and we'll talk things over."

The "house" referred to by Jack is a fine residence on Franklyn avenue, in Hollywood, formerly occupied by Fannie Ward and her husband, Jack Dean, a showy place with terraces, lawns and flowers.

The titleholder is living in style and entertaining his friends and admirers with welcome mats at all doors. He has bought two new cars since coming to town.

The colony seems to like Dempsey. He has been welcomed with the cordial mitt on all hands. Most of the big figures of Filmland have called on him, and have been, or will be, entertained at Jack's house.

Filmland Extends Glad Hand.

The fistic fraternity have all paid their respects. Jim Jeffries and Jim Corbett have called and glad handed Jack, and all the hard hitting boys from Vernon and the other athletic clubs have become volunteer satellites of the new champion.

Spike Robinson, a veteran slugger and former lightweight champion of England, who gained worldwide fame by knocking Bob Fitzsimmons out in an impromptu bout at New Rochelle twenty years ago, is acting as Dempsey's trainer; for, in addition to making movies, Jack is training for the big fight with Carpentier, which will be staged about March 1.

GIEBLER.

A Bunch of Champs.

Pathe's Feature Business Has Another Big Increase

THAT the Pathe policy of staying out of competition with exhibitors and continuing its rule of booking on the open market plan is meeting with approval is evidenced by the increase in feature business recorded during the last two months, according to a statement from the company.

Eight weeks ago Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., stated that an increase of 400 per cent. had been noted in feature collections for the months of July, August and September over the best previous month in Pathe's annals. Topping this record there followed an increase of 25 per cent in October over September, and a further increase of 20 per cent in November over October.

Figures for December have not been tallied yet, but it is a certainty that in spite of the holiday season there will be a marked increase over November.

Goldwyn Engages Hatton.

Scarcely a week passes that Goldwyn Pictures Corporation does not add one or more distinguished players to the already strong stock company that is proving such a valuable factor in the making of productions at the Culver City studios. This week it is Raymond Hatton who has signed a long-term contract to appear exclusively in Goldwyn pictures. He will be assigned to an important role in an early production.

Among the many pictures to which Mr. Hatton has contributed telling characterizations are "One More American," "The Firefly of France," "Less Than Kin," "The Source," "Cruise of the Make-Believe," "The Whispering Chorus," "We Can't Have Everything" and "Arizona."

Inter-Ocean's Third Get-Together Is Highly Enjoyable Family Party

ONE of the jolliest of "film gatherings" was that of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation's family, held at the Astor on the evening of December 27. The occasion was the third annual get-together. The party was all of that. It was under good headway at 9 o'clock, and from that hour until midnight the gayly costumed and masked dancers kept close accompaniment to the fine orchestra provided by the entertainment committee, which under the chairmanship of Gus Schlesinger overlooked no valid bets. At midnight supper was served, and the waiters in performing their appointed rounds waded through hundreds of yards of colored streamers and over many boxes of confetti. Following the supper came the entertainment, and the talented performers held their audience unbroken until 3.10 o'clock. It was an A No. 1 program, worthy of any first-class house.

In the absence abroad of President Paul H. Cromelin, Vice-President George W. Newgass headed the Inter-Ocean forces. Other officers, officials and employes present were Secretary and Treasurer Frederick F. Neuman, Foreign Sales Manager Gus Schlesinger; E. H. Kaufman, manager accessories department, and Mrs. Kaufman; Jacob L. Kempner, manager domestic distribution; Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Foster, Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Son, Harry Neuman, N. Phelps, Al Hartlieb, Louis Goldstein, Fred Shoninger, Carlos Salazar, Eda Schulhof, C. P. Scherer and Irene Epstein.

Among the guests of the company were Ricord Gradwell, of the Producers' Security Corporation, accompanied by E. W. Donahue, general manager of the American Steel and Wire Company; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Garrett, Edward Godal, managing director British and Colonial Kinematograph Company, Ltd., of London; Evelyn Greeley, Major and Mrs. Herbert M. Dawley, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Lownes, Millard Ellison, M. S. Epstin, Mildred Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. James, George Blaisdell, Mayer Schlesinger, Mr. and Mrs. Leon Schlesinger, Henry Goldstone and E. McGowan.

The professional guests included Professor Huber, comedy magician; Miss Emma Ainslee, assisted by Miss Seevers, who also finely accompanied Miss Ethel Whiteside; Jim Dougherty, Burt Walton and Al Pianadosa, Miss Wickie Bird and George F. Curtis.

Just before the party sat down to supper a committee consisting of Mr. Gradwell, Miss Adams and Mr. Blaisdell awarded six prizes for originality of costumes. The winners were William Horne, Carlos Salazar, Gus Schlesinger —who was given a booby prize he had carefully selected and the passing over of which occasioned much merriment— Miss Lillie Schulhof, Miss Raines and Miss Horne.

Inter-Ocean may congratulate itself that it staged a family gathering that will rank among the best of the industry's long list.

Stephenson Buys Rights to "Lost City" for Canada

WORD comes from the Warner Brothers' office, where the distribution rights of Selig's big animal serial, "The Lost City," are for sale, that Charles L. Stephenson, of Toronto, Canada, has bought the Canadian distribution rights. What is claimed to be a record price is said to have been paid for this territory.

Mr. Stephenson is one of Canada's pioneer picture men and has acquired a reputation of putting things over in a big way. He formed the Exhibitors Distribution Corporation, which is similar to the First National Exhibitors Circuit of this country.

Mr. Stephenson, while in this country, related his experience with "Mickey," mentioning that he had considerable trouble getting the first-run houses of Canada to book it. He produced letters showing that the asking price of $1,000 for the first-run in Toronto was refused, and that he was compelled to rent the Grand Opera House of that city for an indefinite run, to get the first-run showing. The final result was that the picture grossed $16,000 for sixteen weeks. To bear out his statement he produced certified box-office statements.

Mr. Stephenson says that "The Lost City," is the greatest serial he has ever seen, and like many other state rights buyers, at first he was not interested in it because it was a serial, but after looking at the first three episodes he saw the box-office possibilities of a serial of this magnitude with wild animals and did not hesitate to close the deal, he says.

Bowker to Manage Two

A story published in Moving Picture World a few months ago called attention to the theatre situation in West Chester, Pa., pointing out that the patronage as brought in from surrounding territory was not sufficient to make the three moving picture houses a week-round success.

This week J. B. Bowker, manager of the Idlehour Theatre, becomes manager of the two other houses, the Opera House and the Rialto, which will be operated by the Stanley Booking Company of Philadelphia. The Idlehour will be closed, cutting out all operating overhead and leaving two houses to take care of the public, which is quite sufficient to guarantee a good return.

Mr. Bowker has the best wishes of the whole community which he supplied with first-class programs while at the Idlehour.

Mary Pickford Is Ready to Play The "Glad Game" of "Pollyanna"

UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION has announced that its first Mary Pickford production would be "Pollyanna," the "glad" story from Eleanor H. Porter's novel, which has the reputation of being one of the country's real "best sellers," and which has been unusually successful on the stage, as a four-act comedy dramatized by Catherine Chisholm Cushing. Release date for the film is January 18.

Mary Pickford's entrance into the independent field with Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith was one of the biggest sensations in the motion picture industry in nineteen nineteen. Only through their own organization was it possible for these stars to enter the independent field and rent their productions on their individual merits.

"Pollyanna" Develops Opportunities.

"Pollyanna" has proven to Miss Pickford that this change has given her the greater opportunities she sought. Miss Pickford has taken an unusually long time to finish "Pollyanna," but she has accomplished wonders, according to those who have seen the picture.

Under her new arrangement, from a script to screen, she has had at her disposal every resource and aid available, absolute freedom for the full expression of her own inimitable personality, and unlimited financial means. These combined factors have brought about a production declared to be of supreme quality.

In making the announcement of the first Pickford production Hiram Abrams of United Artists, said: "There is no doubt in my mind, but that 'Pollyanna' should be a gold mine for exhibitors. The philosophy upon which the story is based constitutes a theme which at the present time has an unusually wide appeal.

"There is a craving at the present time on the part of the public for something more than mere entertainment. Of course, diversion is always the principal thing whenever amusement is considered, but at the same time people want something that will drive home a few truths without preaching a sermon or spoiling the flavor of a show which is meant for entertainment.

May Help Soothe Unrest.

"Such a story is 'Pollyanna' with its cheerful philosophy of gladness. Moreover, this production comes at a time when the country is upset by a period of readjustment.

"'Pollyanna' points out that even when things are bad they might be worse. This thought may tend to stimulate a line of mental activity which may possibly help a little in stabilizing conditions."

There is no more lovable and fascinating figure in story than "Pollyanna," the joyous girl who comes into a soured community to sweeten everybody by playing the "glad game." Her helpful career extends from the gingham period to radiant maidenhood.

An Ideal Role for Mary.

The story concerns a lovable girl who quite unconsciously, through her personality and quiet philosophy, thaws out an entire community where the milk of human kindness has become pretty well frozen. She knits up a ravelled romance of her elders and feels the thrill of her own first love.

At no time in her career has Miss Pickford had the opportunities for characterization as in this production. She is sweet and fascinating and her cheerful spirit in looking on the bright side is indeed a good tonic for all.

Her every presence on the screen in this picture invites sunshine and happiness, though sometimes through a mist of tears. There is a depth of feeling in the character of "Pollyanna" that reaches out and grips the heart.

Frances Marion's Clever Work.

The humor, the pathos, the genuine humanness that may abound in this picture should add the largest and by far the most brilliant jewel in her crown of success. "Pollyanna" will undoubtedly linger in the memory of those who have followed her career.

In the titles Frances Marion, author of the script, is declared to have done some of her cleverest work. In her adaptation of the story she is said to have kept all the quaint essence of the novel, with its unique philosophy of gladness, and at the same time has given due emphasis to the conflict and plot. Miss Marion's knowledge of the Pickford art has enabled her to suggest situations which have been developed to the utmost.

Paul Powell directed the production. Charles Rosher, photographer, is known as "The Van Dyke of the Screen."

Miss Mason Working Fast.

Rapid progress is being made on the screen production of "Her Elephant Man," in which William Fox will present Miss Shirley Mason for the first time as a star under his direction. Scott Dunlap, who is directing the picture, is said to be giving it a fine circus atmosphere and molding a story of great charm and distinction.

"Her Elephant Man" is scheduled for one of the early releases of the New Year, when this dainty debutante of Fox entertainments will be presented for the first time in an elaborate production, she having made her world-wide reputation as a star in serials only.

Special Term of Supreme Court to Hear Suit Against Film Companies

JUSTICE RODENBECK will hold a special term of the supreme court at Rochester at which argument is to be heard on the recent actions started against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the World Film Corporation, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and Irving I. Brown for damages totaling $6,025,000. The actions are an outgrowth of a recent campaign against alleged film pirates by the National Association and the defendant film companies, in which a number of sensational raids were conducted under the direction of Brown, who was understood to be a special investigator for the theft bureau of the National Association.

The first of the suits to be brought into court is that of Mrs. Cora A. Westcott, of Rochester, against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for damages of $25,000 for alleged unlawful entry into her house. She claims that Brown and police officers working under his direction thoroughly ransacked her house in a vain effort to find stolen film and that they did so illegally. The reply of Famous Players-Lasky is that the officers possessed a warrant of search and seizure by Judge Raymond E. Westbury, of the city court, civil branch, Rochester. The court has ordered that Mrs. Westcott make answer to this answer of the plaintiff company.

Claims Fake Arrest.

Her husband, Eugene A. Westcott, manager of the Rochester Film Exchange, has brought an action for $2,000,000, for being falsely arrested, his place of business ransacked, film seized and his business generally hurt. Similar actions, each for a like sum, have been brought by John R. Van Arnam, of Syracuse, an exchangeman, and Hans Frohman, of New York, a broker. Alleged stolen film was also seized from the latter two. All three were held for consideration of their cases by the grand juries, but indictments were not returned owing to the alleged disappearance of Brown, with the resulting failure of his appearing against the film men. Westcott has sworn out a warrant for the arrest of Brown, but it has not been served as he cannot be located.

Alec Ludvigh, of New York, with John J. McInerney, of Rochester, appears for Famous Players-Lasky, and Joseph A. Kirby, of Rochester, is attorney for the Westcotts.

Verse Writing Contest Won Newspaper Space

FOLLOWING a suggestion of the Goldwyn Pictures Corp. Exploitation Department, C. C. Deardouff, service representative at Cleveland, got a lot of space out of the Plain Dealer of that city for the showing of "The Gay Lord Quex" at the Metropolitan.

Prizes of passes good for periods varying from six months to a single performance were awarded the writers of the best two stanza poem about Tom Moore and the play.

Of course, the paper printed the best of the verses in addition to the prize winners, and every bit of verse was a free advertisement for the play. Its cost was small and the returns unusually large.

No Trained Gold Fish for Adda; She Wins by Talent

SHE doesn't raise goldfish that speak French, nor does she have a pondful of alligators that dance the tango. It's strange that she hasn't any of these space-attracting hobbies or fancies that most stars favor.

However, if you should press her to admit that she has a hobby, giving her instances of how her sister-actresses even go in for training spaghetti to take the place of morning glories, she will admit that she has just one little "like." And that's alarm clocks.

No, beg pardon—alarm clock. There's just one. She treats it as her friend. She lavishes it with affection. And some day she's going to have it studded with a clump of jewels and hang it on the wall up at her place at 72 West Fifty-first street.

But do not think that she is entering printer's space by way of alarm clocks. Her claim dates back to the time when she was appearing in World pictures. And that was when World was producing big ones a mile a minute. She played with Paramount also, and her latest picture was "The Star Rover," the Shurtleff production of Jack London's story to be released by Metro.

And we musn't forget that she played on the legitimate stage in "The Man Who Came Back" and just last season too a whirl at musical comedy in "Listen Lester" during its successful run at the Knickerbocker.

And who is this pretty young lady about whom we've said all this?

Why, don't you know?

It's Adda Price.

Yes, Adda's the Girl.

She's pretty and you're interested and you're going to read the accompanying story to find out all about her.

Grossman Begins Second Feature.

Harry Grossman, president of Grossman Pictures, Inc., announces that production has been begun on the second picture of the series of eight detective story features that are to be made at the company studios at Ithaca, N. Y. Marguerite Marsh will be the star in each of the pictures, the first of which, "Wits vs. Wits," has been completed and sold. The second, which will be completed in January is "Face to Face," which is expected by Mr. Grossman to take its place among the best detective stories ever screened.

On January 4 a one-reel Mack Sennett-Keystone comedy, entitled "A Lunchroom Romance," with Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle and Ford Sterling, will be available to exhibitors. Legion to Boost "Everybody's Business."

H. S. Piper of the American Legion, who controls the rights to "Everybody's Business" for Michigan, the six-reel photoplay production being released by W. H. Production Company on the state rights market, advises unique exploitation and publicity stunts to be used for that production. The effects from this special exploitation will be felt not only in their own territory but throughout the entire country.

"The Picture is going to be shown the second week in February," writes Mr. Piper of the American Legion, "and is to be shown in connection with a state wide Americanization campaign. Every state committee of the Legion in America will be informed of the movement here and attention called to the photoplay 'Everybody's Business.' These things I will go into with you in more detail at a later date."

Overbaugh Seriously Ill.

Roy F. Overbaugh, cameraman for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," John Barrymore's starring vehicle for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is ill with pneumonia and has been temporarily replaced by Hal Young, who will work until it is time for him to go to Europe with Hugh Ford for the London production of "The Sorrows of Satan."

Exchange Rate and Duping Driving Export Business to Other Markets

SCANDINAVIA prefers American pictures, but the present abnormal rate of exchange is driving business to other markets, principally Germany," was the striking statement made by Arthur George Gregory, managing director of the Scandinavian Film Agency, Ltd., to a World representative in a recent interview in the office of Chester Beecroft.

In substantiation of this statement Mr. Beecroft pointed to the fact that, while in nomral times 280 kroner are worth $100, it now takes 570 kroner to equal the same value in American dollars. On the other hand, while it formerly took 60 kroner to equal 100 German marks, it now takes only 10.

This enormous difference in value, coupled with the fact that fairly good pictures are being produced in Germany since the war, is naturally having the effect of throwing the business to Germany to a large extent, regardless of the higher quality of the American product. The cost of printing in America averages about 4 cents a foot, while in Germany it averages only three-quarters of 1 cent a foot. It is therefore obviously impossible for the German buyer to have his printing done outside. This means that American producers must be prepared to ship negatives to Germany or forego their sales to the Central Powers.

Duping Is Working Great Injury.

Another great difficulty facing producers and exporters is the duping of films. Certain unscrupulous buyers are making a practice of this. In some instances they buy a limited territory, such as Scandinavia, and make what they term "American export negatives," which are sold along with rights to any other European territory which the buyers desire. Another practice is to buy many more prints than a territory will support and dispose of the surplus. Still another is to sell the same territory to several buyers, taking a substantial deposit on each, and leaving the buyers to fight it out among themselves. The responsible men in the industry are combatting this and, armed with powers of attorney from others, Mr. Gregory reports he has already succeeded in landing one of the parties in jail in Copenhagen.

The Company Is Six Years Old.

The Scandinavian Film Agency, Ltd., has been in operation now for about six years. Chester Beecroft is its buying representative in this country. The company handles Robertson-Cole pictures, as well as the Billy West and Smiling Bill Parsons comedies, certain Hodkinson releases and others, and within the past year has secured over $800,000 worth of rights to American films. In addition to Mr. Gregory the managers are Mr. Scavennis and Mr. Christensen. Branches are maintained in Christiania and Stockholm, with a renting business in the former city. The headquarters are in Copenhagen. The company also has made arrangements to take over the control of two of the largest theatres in Christiania in 1921.

Mr. Gregory reports that in Scandinavia the exhibitors and public are tiring of the star series of pictures and that it is practically impossible to sell on this basis. While certain individual stars are well liked, the exhibitors demand to see each picture in order that they may buy it on its individual merit.

Difficult to Sell to Russia.

Prior to the Russian upheaval the Scandinavian Film Agency maintained branches in Petrograd and Moscow, but they have long since been closed. There is still a small amount of film sold in Southern Russia, but due to the practical absence of a medium of exchange it is necessary to intrust the films to the trading companies, which exchange them for wheat or other commodities, which are in turn sold and converted into cash when the ships return to Denmark.

Mr. Gregory is thoroughly in touch with the European situation, having made many trips to Petrograd, Moscow, London, Berlin, Vienna and Buda-Pest. He reports that in the Central Powers conditions are much worse than in Scandinavia, as $100 is worth 5,000 German marks or 24,000 Austrian kroners; and that in Germany there is a prohibition against the importation of American films. This embargo was to have been raised with the new year, but it has been extended until May. However, if raised then it will not be of much service, as in February the theatres contract for pictures for the next twelve months.

On a recent trip to Berlin Mr. Gregery reports that he came in contact with at least forty buyers from various sections of the world who, attracted by the very low price of the German films, due to the present rate of exchange, were seeking to make purchases for their countries.

Mr. Gregory is confident that unsettled conditions due to the delay in concluding peace with the Central Powers is to a large extent responsible for the abnormal exchange conditions. He also states that if American producers desire to continue to compete in the European markets it will be necessary to materially reduce the price of the films.

"Blindness of Youth" Now Selling Fast Everywhere

THE initial trade showing of "Blindness of Youth," the new society drama presented by Murray W. Garsson, of the Foundation Film Corporation, has just been held and a number of territories were sold immediately, it is announced.

Frank Gersten, Inc., 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, purchased the rights for New Jersey. Sol Lesser and Leon D. Netter, of the Masterpiece Film Corporation, of Cleveland, Ohio, have purchased the picture for distribution in the Buckeye state. Bids for territorial rights have been received from all parts of the country and it is expected that all states will be disposed of within a very short time. Arrangements already have been made for the sale of New York territory, it is stated.

That Mr. Garsson's plans for continuing the advertising campaign he has inaugurated, even after all territories have been sold, is proving popular with the independent distributors is apparent from the many commendations that he has received. It is his plan not only to continue the campaign, but to do everything else possible to insure the success of the production from a financial standpoint of the state rights buyers.

A great variety of posters are in the process of manufacture and will be delivered to the state rights buyers as soon as they are completed. A press book, containing a great variety of exploitation aids for the exhibitor will be at the disposal of exhibitors. In addition to this a number of attractive post cards, stickers, throw-aways and booklets will be available, it is announced.

Gets Rights to Broadway Plays.

"The Wonderful Thing," a play by Mrs. Lillian Trimble Bradley, which was recently placed in rehearsal by George Broadhurst, is one of the Broadhurst dramatic properties the motion picture rights of which have been acquired for Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation also announces it has purchased the motion picture rights of "For the Defense," Elmer L. Rice's melodrama in which Richard Bennett is appearing at the Playhouse.

Covering "The Coast" News Field

By A. H. Giebler

World's Ad Manager on Coast.

A. MACARTHUR, JR., advertising manager of the Moving Picture World, has arrived in Los Angeles for a two-months' stay, during which time he will make a complete survey of the film industry in the West and arrange for a system of closer relations between the producer and the magazine.

Mr. MacArthur's trip to the coast is primarily of a business nature, but he is combining business with pleasure by meeting many of the people on the long list of friends he has made during his connection of more than a decade with the film industry whose work has called them West, as well as adding to the list by forming the acquaintance of many native sons and daughters.

MacArthur, or "Mack," as he is more generally known, expresses himself as delighted with the country and the climate, and the first Sunday of his stay he had the unusual experience of attending a Christmas Tree party on the beach, where the weather was so warm that most of the party wore bathing suits and confetti had to be used to represent snow. The Christmas Tree festivities was given by members of the Christie Comedy organization.

S. L. Von Ronkle, of the Chicago Slide and Poster Company, is in Los Angeles on business, and incidentally to spend the holidays in Southern California.

Los Angeles Banquets Arthur S. Kane.

A testimonial dinner, one of the most elaborate affairs of the season, was given to Arthur S. Kane in Parlor F of the Alexandria Hotel on December 23. Orrin F. Woody, manager of the Realart Exchange, was host of the evening, and Henry L. "Buck" Massie was toastmaster.

The banquet was attended by Meredith P. Snyder, mayor of Los Angeles; Mrs. Snyder; Ivan St. John, the mayor's secretary, and managing and dramatic editors of the local press, trade paper representatives and other friends.

Addresses, both formal and informal, were made, and Mayor Snyder paid a glowing tribute to the film industry by giving facts and figures of the magnitude of the business, and speaking of the help that the films have been in upbuilding the town, increasing the population and providing employment to many thousands of people.

West Coast Representative Visits East.

G. P. Harleman, business representative of the Moving Picture World on the Pacific coast, left Los Angeles on December 24 for a visit to the New York offices of the magazine. Mr. Harleman will be gone about three weeks and will stop over in Chicago on the going trip, where he has many friends made during his stay there as representative of the World. This is Mr. Harleman's first trip East in five years.

Christie Christmas Tree on Beach.

The entire Christie Comedy forces, from Charles H. and Al E. down to Pat Dowling, the press agent, went down to Venice Beach the last Sunday in December, where a huge Christmas tree had been set up in the sand, and where Al Christie in regulation Santa Claus cap and whiskers topping a bathing suit that represented the rest of his costume, did the honors and distributed gifts to employes of the Christie studio.

Eddie Barry, garbed in a bath robe and carrying a scythe and an alarm clock, represented Father Time. An aeroplane from the Venice field circled over the tree and dropped confetti for snow effects, and the Christie bathing girls, in an excess of joy at seeing the snow, ducked Father Time in the ocean.

Teddy Sampson, Fay Tincher, George Ovey, Earl Rodney, Bobby Vernon and Vera Steadman were among the leading players in Christie Comedies who attended the celebration.

Somborn-Swanson.

On the afternoon of December 20, Gloria Swanson, film star, and Herbert Somborn were married in a private parlor of the Alexandria Hotel, the ceremony being performed by Judge Crawford. The couple left immediately for San Francisco on their honeymoon, and will stop in Santa Barbara before returning to Los Angeles soon after the first of the year.

Miss Swanson is under contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Company and has recently appeared in Cecil B. De Mille productions. She was formerly the wife of Wallace Beery, from whom she was divorced more than a year ago. Mr. Somborn, president of the Equity Pictures Corporation, who has spent much time in New York, will for the present make his headquarters at the Harry Garson studio.

Yule Pageant by Film Players.

An open-air pageant of "The Nativity" was presented on the Monday and Tuesday evening of Christmas week in the grounds of the Hollywood Studio Club by a large assembly of motion picture players. Frank Keenan recited the story of the birth of Christ, and Helen Eddy and David Butler were Mary and Joseph; Walter Long played the part of Herod, and Herbert Cole, Lionel Belmore and Antonio Corsi were the three wise men. The proceeds of both performances were donated to the club fund.

Metro Star in Tragic Auto Accident.

Marguerite De La Motte, who is playing a leading role in the Metro feature, "The Hope," narrowly escaped death on December 23 in an automobile accident, in which her father and mother were both severely injured. Miss De La Motte and her mother were in the tonneau of the car, and her father, Joseph De La Motte, a Los Angeles attorney, was driving, when the automobile collided with a South Hollywood street car at Santa Monica and Cahuenga avenues, the street car dragging the automobile fifty feet. Mr. and Mrs. De La Motte both suffered fractures of the skull, besides cuts and bruises, and were taken to a hospital after having had treatment at the Receiving Hospital, but Miss De La Motte was sent to her home, as her injuries were not so severe.

New Producing Unit.

Cyrus J. Williams, general manager of the Bradbury Productions, has launched a new producing unit under the name of the Clark Productions, which will be directed by Frank Howard Clark, and will feature Billie Brunton in a series of polite comedies, the first of which is a two-reel English sketch called "Monacled," and plays up a character of the Lord Dundreary type.

New Gym at Brunton.

A five-room gymnasium is being erected on the Brunton studio lot for the convenience of the players and employes at the plant. The building covers half an acre of ground, and when completed will be equipped with showers, dressing rooms, electric baths, locker and athletic paraphernalia. A boxing ring will be included for the use of Jack Dempsey while he is at the studio during the making of his fifteen-episode serial.

Ray and Wagner Fight Fire.

While Charles Ray and his wife were calling at the home of Rob Wagner,

The Smile of the Yank.

noted writer of movie articles, last Sunday evening, the Wagner home caught fire from a defective flue, causing a loss of personal effects belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Wagner valued at $1,500. Ray, Wagner and a policeman carried out valuable paintings, books and other furnishings. The fire was put out before the house was entirely destroyed, and the loss is partly covered by insurance.

Pickford Doll Auctioned for Fund.

Four dolls, dressed by Mary Pickford, and reposing in a beautiful basket which was decorated by Miss Pickford, are to be auctioned off some day during the holiday season at the Alexandria Hotel, for the benefit of the Actors' Fund. A large photograph of Mary holding the basket of dolls, which she will autograph, will go to the person who gets the dolls.

Citizens Object to Night Studio Noises.

Because a whole neighborhood claims to have been disturbed by the explosion of bombs and the shooting of firearms used for the making of night scenes for pictures that are being produced at the Brunton studio, on Melrose avenue, Councilmen Conaway and Mallard, of Los Angeles, will urge an ordinance regulating the operation of motion picture studios and camps with a view of eliminating and suppressing disturbing noises, such as shooting and bomb explosions, after midnight.

Tally Conducts Contest.

T. L. Tally, proprietor of the Kinema and Tally's Broadway theatres, inaugurated a contest to discover why his patrons like the Charles Chaplin comedies better than Henry Lehrman's, or Lehrman's better than Chaplin's, as the case may be. The contest closed on December 26.

Karger to Make Productions in East.

Maxwell Karger, director general of the Metro Pictures Corporation, will soon return to New York, where he will produce pictures to be known as The Maxwell Karger Productions, for release through the Metro-Screen Classics organization, according to an announcement made this week.

Mr. Karger will probably direct Bert Lytell in several special productions immediately upon arriving in New York, but later will devote his entire time to turning out subjects similar to those of Cecil B. De Mille, the Marshall Neilan, Allan Dwan, and other director-producers.

Nearly five years ago Mr. Karger founded the Columbia and Rolfe companies, which were the original and largest of the Metro producing units. For the last three years he has been the actual supervisor, in scenario, directing and cutting, of all Metro productions.

Clifford P. Butler, now general manager of the Metro Hollywood studio, will probably take over the active management of the plant when Karger leaves.

Balboa Studios Sold.

The Balboa studios in Long Beach, which were built a few years ago by the Horkheimer Brothers, were sold by the Board of Trade, as trustees, to the firm of McCauley & Hunt, who have incorporated under the name of the International Film Company, and who will rent space to moving picture producers.

Ten companies can be accommodated at Balboa, and at present five companies, three of which are making Bulls-Eye productions, are working there. E. W. Welch is manager of the studio.

Phillips and Holubar Leave Universal.

Dorothy Phillips, who recently completed "The Gorgeous Canary," at Universal City, has left the Universal organization, and her husband and director, Allen Holubar, will leave as soon as the cutting and editing of the new film is finished, according to report.

Miss Phillips is preparing to leave for her old home in Baltimore, where she and her husband plan to take a rest of at least two months. Rumors of negotiations between Adolph Zukor and Holubar, in connection with the making of productions for the Realart program, are in circulation.

Laemmle Arrives for Christmas.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, arrived from New York on December 22 on his periodical tour to confer with the heads of Universal City upon 1920 productions and to be present at the opening of "The Great Air Robbery," which opened at the Superba the following Sunday. Mr. Laemmle also visited the California Theatre, where Eric von Stroheim's "Blind Husbands" played during Christmas week.

Production Begun on "Earthbound."

Immediately upon the arrival of Wyndham Standing from the East last week, work was begun on "Earthbound," a Basil King story in which Standing plays the leading role, under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter. Mahlon Hamilton, Flora Ravelle and Alec B. Francis play impotrant roles.

Statement by Mitchell Lewis.

Mitchell Lewis, who recently signed a contract to star in a number of Jack London stories for the Metro-Screen Classics program, announces that he is not connected in any way with the Los Angeles film company bearing his name. Mr. Lewis, who recently starred in pictures with his own company for the Select Corporation, has withdrawn from the producing company that still uses his name, he declares.

After all, Mabel Normand will not work in the East, but will return to Culver City soon after the holidays to produce for Goldwyn.

Marshall Neilan's second independent production will be made at the Douglas Fairbanks studio, with Marjorie Daw, Matt Moore, Wesley Barry, Tom Guise and Betty Bouton in the principale roles.

Jack Mulhall, Ruth Stonehouse and Marguerite De La Motte will play the leading roles in "The Hope," at Metro.

Mabel Julienne Scott will play the leading feminine role opposite Roscoe Arbuckle in "The Round-Up," soon to be produced at the Lasky studio.

Mary Pickford, "Queen of the American Air Service," has received a Christmas present in the shape of a tiny aeroplane, sent to her by the western department of the Army Air Service at San Francisco.

W. A. Howell is a new director at Metro, engaged to direct Viola Dana in "Eliza Comes to Stay."

Beatrice S. Gowland, scenario writer, and her husband, Gibson Gowland, actor, have each filed suit for divorce, each demanding the custody of their four-year-old son.

Frank R. Beal, director of Fox features, will spend a few weeks vacation on his orange grove near Santa Barbara before returning to studio work.

Henry Clive, noted artist, will furnish a series of paintings to accompany the titles of the new Douglas Fairbanks production, "When the Clouds Roll By."

Call for Mr. Chaplin to Go to Work and Make Bilious Millions Laugh

THE subjoined excerpts from an editorial in the Chicago Tribune, of Sunday, December 21, under the heading, "Asking for More of Charlie Chaplin," expresses public sentiment so aptly that they are reproduced here.

If Mr. Chaplin views this subject from the point that he owes the democracy of America much, in order to preserve due equilibrium, in the matter of give and take—and we believe that his inimitable sense of humor will enable him to do so, then we shall have reason to expect that a richer harvest of laughs is in store for us.

What do you say, Charlie?

"Mr. Charles Chaplin is a matter of serious concern in this democracy. He is the corn and circuses of the republic. He is distributed and presented to maintain that general good humor upon which the safety of empire, autocratic or democratic, rests.

"Mr. Chaplin has been the salvation of us masses. He has been the pink in life. He has made the millions laugh and laughing millions are safe millions. With Mr. Chaplin in the arena we knew that the republic was safe, and lean and hungry Cassius could not plot successfully against the security of principles and institutions necessary to the well-being of the American nation.

"With one new picture a month we could live in anticipation of compensating pleasures. Mr. Chaplin is a matter of serious concern because he seems to have been infected by the idea prevalent in other industries that prosperity and contentment can be arrived at by limitation of production.

"We are opposed to involuntary servitude except in the case of Mr. Chaplin. In his case we favor injunction and mandamus, search and seizure, compulsion and a return to slavery. If he knew that he would be sold down the river if he did not produce this republic would be upon sounder foundations."

GENERAL MANAGER R. R. NEHLS, of the American Film Company, has returned to Chicago to spend the holidays with his family, after a stay at the Santa Barbara studios since early in October. Part of the time was employed in supervising arrangements for the production of another important "Flying A" special, entitled "The Honey Bee," the script being adapted from Samuel Merwin's novel of that name.

Marguerita Sylva, the widely known operatic and concert star, will appear in the leading role and Thomas Holding will be the leading man. Another important part, that of an American prize fighter, who pays court to the woman of the story in Paris, is sustained by Nigel Barrie, only recently discharged from the Royal Flying Corps of the British army.

The filmed story will show a fistic contest for the world's championship between the American prize fighter and the champion of France, and to insure an arenic encounter worthy of the occasion the well known middleweight, Kid McCoy, was specially engaged to represent the tricolor champion. Rupert Julian, director of the picture, who will be remembered by his work in "The Beast of Berlin," has handled this encounter most realistically, Mr. Nehls says.

Thomas Furniss of Duluth Retires from the Business

THOMAS FURNISS, of Duluth, sold the Rex and the Lyric in that city about two months ago and has retired from the business. The Twin City Amusement Company, owned by Reuben & Finkelstein, of St. Paul and Minneapolis, was the purchaser of the Rex and the Lyric.

Mr. Furniss was a showman of the highest type and conducted his theatres on a high business plane. Of national reputation in the moving picture business, he took a lively interest in its development and was ever zealous for its uplift and welfare. He was a leader among exhibitors and always took a hearty and active interest in their organizations, when convinced that they stood for the good of the majority. He decried the introduction of politics in exhibitors' organizations and stood like a rock for open and fair dealing always. His word was ever his bond and from long knowledge of Mr. Furniss the writer, while deeply regretting his retirement, is glad of the opportunity to state that he always found him to be a man of honor and a gentleman, in the nicest sense of the word. Moreover, his friendship was a something that was ever highly esteemed by those fortunate enough to gain it.

Arbuckle in First Five-Reel Comedy.

"Fatty" Arbuckle made a short stay in Chicago Christmas week, on the journey from New York to the Coast. On his arrival in Los Angeles he will immediately begin work on his first five-reel comedy, under the direction of George Melford. It will be the first time that Mr. Arbuckle has ever had a director, so that my Los Angeles colleague, A. H. Giebler, famous for his Rubbering stunts in filmland, will doubtless take due advantage of the occasion. Mr. Arbuckle spent his Christmas aboard the westbound train, but he only laughs at such trifles.

Barbee's Theatre to Open in February.

In January, 1919, William S. Barbee secured a lease for twenty-five years on the old Inter-Ocean building, on Monroe street, near Dearborn. The site is historic, as on it the old Columbia Theatre, devoted to the drama, housed for a long time the leading attractions visiting Chicago. The Columbia was wholly destroyed by fire about twenty years ago.

Mr. Barbee, who is an ardent moving picture fan, leased the old Inter-Ocean building for the purpose of transforming it into a high-class picture theatre, but his plans have been greatly delayed by labor strikes and inability to get the steel beams required for the structure. Now he is in a position to state that the house, which will be known as Barbee's Loop Theatre, will be completed about the middle of February.

A large pipe organ has been installed and a twenty-five piece orchestra has been engaged. Admissions will be 50 and 25 cents.

Brown Goes to Los Angeles.

Colvin W. Brown, representing the Clark-Cornelius Corporation and personal representative of William J. Clark, spent a few days in Chicago last week, on his way from New York to Los Angeles, where he will remain for two or three months.

Mr. Brown will probably open an executive office in Los Angeles for his organization and will most likely be joined by H. C. Cornelius, vice-president, about February 1. Mr. Cornelius is now devoting his entire time to the corporation's interests. The proposed Los Angeles office will be used as production headquarters.

President Clark is convinced that the day of the program picture has passed and that the demand henceforth will be for big pictures only, including dramas and comedies—the latter of the lively, farcical type.

Hallmark Has New Milwaukee Manager

F. C. Henzler has been appointed manager of Hallmark's Milwaukee exchange, to take effect Monday, December 29. He spent Christmas week in Chicago, with Frank J. Flaherty, division manager, getting familiarized with details.

Mr. Henzler has spent seven years in exchange business and was manager of the General Film Company's Milwaukee exchange for some time before that company went out of business.

Feist Promises Goldwyn Will Meet Increasing Demand for Short Films

"THE exhibitors are taking notice of the activity of the Goldwyn organization," says Felix Feist, vice-president and manager of sales, "not only in regard to the Goldwyn Star Pictures and the Eminent Authors, but also the short subjects, the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, the Ford Educational Weekly and new subjects under way. More than 7,000 exhibitors are using these reels already, and the new year will find a country-wide call for these scientific and comic subjects that have a popular appeal.

"Besides the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph we shall shortly release the Goldwyn-Bray Comic and the Goldwyn-Bray Graphic, as well as the Ford Educational Weekly, which is covering industrial and scenic subjects. We shall prepare a number of short films in color that will add a new angle of interest to these releases. No expense is being spared to get results and the best brains are being employed to make sure that these reels are entertaining as well as instructive.

Names Short Subjects.

"Booth Tarkington is writing a series of two-reel comedies which Goldwyn will produce and distribute under the title of the Edgar Comedies.

"We are keeping pace with the demand for high quality short subjects of Goldwyn caliber; in fact, anticipating it. I do not agree with some film manufacturers who say the educational film is going to be the backbone of the industry, because the story and the drama will always command the greater audience. Where the exhibitor finds his patrons pleased with intelligent short subjects of the Goldwyn-Bray quality, he will find us ready to supply the best."

Ford Educationals Please Many.

Nineteen releases have already been announced on the Goldwyn-Bray Pictographs, ranging from "The Samoan Follies," the "Mysteries of Snow" and the extraordinary cartoon series called "Out of the Inkwell." Three subjects are usually included in each release, which runs one reel.

The two-reeler Edgar Comedies are now in process. The first eight manuscripts have already been accepted.

Prizma Films Guatemalan Descendants of Montezuma

THE current Prizma is "Guatemala," the modern land of an ancient people, descendants of the great Montezuma. Prizma has thus picturized a land often heard of, but of which very little is known.

This country is one of our little known Central American neighbors. Guatemala City is the capital and is located not far inland from San Jose, the Pacific coast port.

Each morning sees the descendants of the Aztec, Toltec and Maya Indians hurrying along at a dog-trot with heavy loads of food and other wares, which they carry to the public markets. Their dress is quaint and inclines to the spectacular at times.

Here, too, are found some of the ancient remains of temples of the jungle, built nearly fifteen hundred years ago. The existence of a forgotten race is known to us only through these mysterious ruins.

There is much of mystery and interest in this Prizma picture, which is being released by the Republic Distributing Corporation.

"Other Men's Shoes" Has Strong Cast of Players

IN "Other Men's Shoes," the first of the series of big photoplays produced by Edgar Lewis for Pathe, will be seen a strong cast. It embraces names of those who are not only familiar to picturegoers but also actors well known on the legitimate stage.

Crauford Kent, who has a number of stage successes as well as many on the screen to his credit, was selected by Mr. Lewis to play the difficult dual role of the twin brothers. His leading woman is Irene Boyle, who, after a long absence from the screen, returned especially because Mr. Lewis desired her to create the leading feminine role.

Harold Forshay, hitherto seen in juvenile and light comedy roles shows his versatility by playing the villainous character of Dreenen. John P. Wade is the unscrupulous partner of Forshay. Bobby Connelly is seen to advantage in a role that calls for comedy and pathos.

Robertson-Cole Official Gets Diamond-Studded Belt

TO show their esteem for him as a man and leader, the twenty-six branch managers, the field manager and the three supervisors of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation tendered A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager a platinum belt buckle studded with thirty diamonds.

The tribute was in the form of a Christmas gift. The front of the buckle is platinum and inlaid is a map of the United States. The back is of gold. Twenty-six cities are represented on the platinum map with a large diamond. The four corners are decorated with larger diamonds, the gifts of Joe L. Merrick, field manager, O. R. Hanson, Newton E. Levi, and Fred G. Sliter, supervisors. The map of the United States is outlined, and in lieu of naming the exchanges the spot is studded with a large diamond. The presentation was made by Mr. Merrick.

Following are the branch managers who contributed toward the Christmas gift for Mr. Kirkpatrick: Jerome Safron, R. A. Davis, F. F. Kimmerle, E. J. Hayes, Max Levey, Chas. Casanave, Morton A. Levy, R. C. Herman, H. D. Cassidy, Geo. J. DeBute, C. W. Tyler, E. McAvoy, A. R. Patton, Lewis Klar, I. F. Mantzke, Al. Durning, F. Goldfarb, T. R. Richards, E. J. Tilton, J. F. Gill, Geo. Moore, Theo. Johnson, W. A. Crank, Fred A. Keller, L. Wingham and E. L. McShane.

Santa Claus Remembers Seitz.

On the day before Christmas George B. Seitz and his company quit working on his newest Pathe serial, "Pirate Gold," and went to the studio for an advance Christmas dinner. During the dinner a commotion on the studio floor aroused Mr. Seitz's curiosity and he hurried to see what was the matter. He was surrounded by studio attendants, players and other friends and given a big papier-mache axe. The hood was broken open and a handsome gold cigarette case marked with the Seitz monogram taken out and presented to him, the gift of the company and the studio employes. Mr. Seitz responded with a neat speech.

Walter McGrail Signs with Selznick.

The Selznick group of players was further strengthened this week by the announcement of Myron Selznick that he had signed a long term contract with Walter McGrail, who will be seen in the future with the Selznick pictures. He recently appeared opposite Elaine Hammerstein in "The Country Cousin" and "Greater Than Fame."

Rubbernecking in Filmland

The Weather, Glenn Cavender's Nose, Elephantine Tears and Etceteras Amuse Our Own Mack

By Giebler

THIS installment of Rubbernecking should be called "Piloting a Pilgrim," because the choicest seat on the wagon was occupied by a tenderfoot from the east in the person of Archibald MacArthur, better known as "Mack," the advertising manager of the magazine that is kind enough to print this column.

Mack is inspecting Filmland, giving it the third degree, probing its deepest and darkest secrets, shaking hands with the large number of film friends who hace come west, making a lot of new ones and incidently gathering dope and data for a good-for-the-industry scheme that he has had up his sleeve for a long time and will spring soon.

This is Mack's first trip to the coast. We piloted him around, showed him the ropes and the sights of our fair city and helped him watch his step to the best of our ability.

There was only a single instance when we did anything that might be construed as putting one over on him, and that was one day when, emerging from our palatial offices in the Wright & Callender Building, Mack caught sight of a lady with a sunshade.

Mack Makes An Observation.

He stopped in astonishment.

"Think of that!" he said. "A parasol in the middle of December. The boys back home would not believe it."

This was such a grand testimonial to our glorious and etc. climate and we became so swollen with local pride that we entirely forgot to tell Mack that the lady, who is well known to our streets, was a little bit queer and wore her comedy sunshade rain or shine, all the year round.

This was all the deception we practiced on Mack, however, and that was not a very wicked deception because it really was hot enough for a parasol, in spite of the fact that it is getting along toward the shank end of December. In all other things we lived up to the reputation for truth and veracity that we have spent so many years in accumulating, even to the point of explaining that Glenn Cavender's nose does not look that way in real life.

The Studio Tour Starts.

Besides, it would have been hard to put anything over on Mack so far as the films are concerned—we understand that there are still a few small studios in New York and we have noticed that folks coming out here from the East know a good deal about the movies.

We met Glenn Cavender out on the Fox lot, and after we took a good look at his boob make-up we proceeded to "Rubber" the place from stem to stern. I showed Mack Albert Roscoe and his new thirty-eight dollar white pants which he wears in "Her Elephant Man," a circus picture wherein he supports Shirley Mason; and we met Shirley Mason and her dog, Bunk, and she showed us a scratched place on her arm which Memo, the elephant, had done with the rough hide of his ear.

Elephantine Tears.

And then we went over on the circus set where Director Scott Dunlap was working three or four hundred extras and a lot of circus actors and beautiful ladies in tights in a big tent. And we saw Old Memo, the elephant, and Nero, a young elephant who is Memo's nephew, and we heard Nero lift his voice in grief when his Uncle Memo and his Aunt Nellie were unhitched and taken into the tent to act in the movies, and he was left behind.

Did you ever hear an elephant weep? It is heart-rending. Mack and I were almost moved to tears, and we would have gone right over to where Nero was chained to an animal cage and patted the little fellow on the head and said soothing words to him, if the only Yiddish elephant trainer I ever saw or heard of hadn't told us to "get the hell out o' here," and wanted to know if we wanted to get the "stuffin' knocked out of us or what."

Green Vest and Blushing Bride.

And as we didn't, we went and looked in on a set where Hampton Del Ruth was making a big five-reel special comedy with Chester Conklin, Jack Cooper, Dorothy Lee, Lois Scott, Harry Booker, Alta Allison, Aline Griffith and a lot more in the cast, including seven sets of real whiskers worn by seven old boys who have not seen a barber shop since Bryan ran for president the first time.

After this we watched Howard Mitchell directing a Madlaine Traverse play with much fine furniture and Correan Kirkham, a new dramatic find, in the action; peeped in on Dennison Clifts, the youngest director on the Fox lot, who is finishing up a Buck Jones western thriller that was started and left half done by another director.

Food and Figures.

We went into the studio "eatery," the exclusive one inside the studio walls, and allowed Carl Downing, editorial and publicity manager, to pay for our lunch; saw Gladys Brockwell and her leading man, Billy Scott, who are making "White Lies" under the direction of E. J. LeSaint, snatching a bite between scenes; and wound up by talking to Sol Wurtzel, general superintendent of the Fox western studio, who told us so many facts about Fox productions, and filled our systems so full of figures on Fox film footage that it will all have to go into a separate story.

We dropped in at Christie's and saw Charles, the Chesterfieldian in manners, and Al, who was working out stuff for "Bringing Up Father' with Johnny Ray, of the vaudeville team of Johnny and Emma Ray, as Jiggs, and Margaret Fitzroy as Maggie Jiggs, and both looking their parts to a T.

Meeting the Darlings.

We saw Scott Sidney, Billy Beaudine, George Ovey, Bobby Vernon, Pat Dowling, J. Scott Darling and Helen Darling, Teddy Sampson, Rosemary Theby, who was just visiting around that day, Dorothy DeVore, Fay Tincher, and Nan Blair of the scenario department, and Laura La Plant and a lot more darlings.

Miss La Plant will play the part of Daughter in "Bringing Up Father," and everybody around the Christie plant says she is a discovery, and they are all glad she is there, and they expect big things of her, and so on.

The Christie boys invited Mack and me to a Christmas party to be given the next day on the beach at Venice. I couldn't go, but Mack could, and did, and brought back a wonderful tale of sunshine and sea bathing in the winter time, and the sad sea waves made glad at the sight of the Christie girls in beautiful bathing suits, and Al Christie as Santa Claus, and Eddie Barry as Father Time, and Eddie getting ducked in the ocean by the girls.

Mack Meets Izzy.

Mack declared he could hardly believe his eyes at what he saw, and then he sighed and said back home was never like this at this time of the year.

The next day we went out to Metro and watched May Allison making a scene in a big continental hotel for "Judah," which will probably have its name changed before it reaches the screen. We saw a big Nazimova set with Ray Smallwood as director and Charles Bryant in the action; and Bert Lytell's "Alias Jimmy Valentine" location; and then we dropped in at the National plant, where Isadore Bernstein hailed Mack as he would have hailed a long-lost brother, and almost wept with joy, and the two of them talked over the old days, which must have been happy days, from the laughs they got out of it, and "Izzy" told us of the town his company has built out at Sunland, where they are making Opie Read's "Kentucky Colonel," and invited us to go out there, which invitation we accepted for another day.

Another Happy Reunion.

We went over to the Bulls-Eye comedy works, and there another happy reunion took place, and Mack and Nat Spitzer slapped each other on the back and called each other "You old son of a gun, you!" and things like that. We stopped off at Louis J. Burston's place, and Mr. Burston told us about the big serial he has just completed with King Baggot in the lead, and about other big things he will have on the fire soon.

We called on the Warner Brothers at the Al St. John studio, and saw Al in his make-up, anti-prohibition nose and all. We talked over old times with the Warner Brothers, Sam and Jack, and I asked Jack if he remembered "The Perils of the Plains," the first three-reel western ever made, and he said he did, as indeed he has good cause to remember, because the feature was made for Warner Brothers way back yonder in the early days by Gilbert P. Hamilton, of the old St. Louis Motion Picture Company.

"The Perils of the Plains" was some picture, wild and woolly, as we liked them in those days, full of Indians and settlers and scouts and half-breeds. Joe Franz, who is now directing Jesse D. Hampton productions, was one of the sturdy heroes, and Dot Farley, now with the Romayne Company, was the intrepid heroine who braved the Perils of the Plains for the man she loved, and it was a good western, even if it was made almost entirely within the corporate limits of the city of St. Louis.

Mack is going to be in filmland for a month or two, and he seems so delighted at what little surface scratching we have done that I anticipated great pleasure in our future rounds, because I am going to show him the whole works while he is out here.

Non-Members of League Will Be Paid for Showing Universal's Industrials

WITHIN the last two weeks Chicagoans have seen "Heads Win," the industrial-educational picture made by Universal and distributed as a special feature on the basis of the contract recently entered into between the company and the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America. Under this contract, or agreement, the exhibitors who run the picture receive direct payments, through the organization, and the organization itself receives a substantial percentage of the gross percentage.

Many other pictures showing the industrial life and progress of America will be ready for distribution early in the new year. In every case distribution will be made on the direct payment basis arranged with the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, but of course the arrangement includes all exhibitors who show the pictures no matter whether they are members or non-members.

Harry Levey,
Manager of Universal's Industrial Department.

"America's Heritage."

"America's Heritage" is a picture that will show the parents of America what the Boy Scout movement is doing for America's men of to-morrow. Filled with action, the picture takes the spectator on a trip from the Middle West, through the Great Lakes country, visiting the points of interest, including Niagara Falls and other wonders of the northwestern part of the United States to Maine. The scouts then journey down the picturesque Maine coast, stopping off at Kittery.

"Careless America" at the Capitol.

Appropriately enough the last day of the Automobile Show has been selected for the inauguration of the great educational safety first movement, which is aimed at the promiscuous killing of America's children by drivers of automotive vehicles. The first gun will be fired by Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo at a meeting at the Capitol Theatre on the morning of January 10.

Present will be representatives of all of the big automobile concerns, the educational authorities of New York City, a committee of the best known men in New York and 5,300 school children.

Wilkenning-Pickford Suit May Be Heard This Month

THE trial of the suit filed against Mary Pickford by Cora C. Wilkenning to recover $112,625 is expected to take place in the United States District Court this month.

Miss Pickford has filed an answer to the suit, in which she makes a general denial of the allegations made by the plaintiff and refers to the litigation in the Supreme Court involving the same issues, which resulted in favor of the motion picture star.

Moreover, Miss Pickford denies that she ever authorized the plaintiff to act as her personal representative in procuring motion picture contracts or engagements.

ANNOUNCING THE ANNUAL CONVENTION OF WOOD ALCOHOL DISTILLERS TO BE HELD SOON AT BLIND SLOUGH, OREGON.

"If men of the 'bitter end' variety really must have their licker we shall 'see' that they get it" is the slogan. And the newspapers indicate that somebody is delivering the goods.

Al. K. Hall, of the Happy Days cinema, Blind Slough, has arranged this program of features for convention week:

Several hours later the appraiser was found with this list crumpled in his hand:

MacARTHUR BECOMES NATIVE CALIFORNIA SON.

(Special to Rambles from Rubberneck.)

Los Angeles, Dec. 25.—Archie MacArthur, advertising manager of Moving Picture World, wished the Pacific Ocean a Merry Christmas on his first day in Los Angeles. It was a pretty ceremony.

"Mac" was poised in the center of a group of Mack Sennett Bathing Girls. Ten minutes later he wished the Pacific another of the same.

MacArthur was poised in the center of a group of Christie Comedy Girls. It was another pretty ceremony.

Prodigal, as always, with his good wishes, Mr. MacArthur, at the end of another ten minutes, wished the grand old ocean still another of the same.

He was poised in the center of a group of Fox's Sunshine Comedy Girls. Interviewed and asked to express his opinion of California, Mr. MacArthur said:

"I'm going to stay until I can wish the ocean a Happy New Year. Let's have a re-take of Christmas."

"Among the several clever publicity stunts suggested in connection with Anita Stewart's 'In Old Kentucky,' one impressed me so favorably that I immediately passed the good word on to my friend Andrews of this village, who soon exhibits the picture.

"In accordance with your brilliant suggestion, we have secured a capacious cask, filled same to the brim with Eau de Heaven, from Louisville, Ky., eight years old, bottled in the barn, and have hung on the outside thereof gourds from which the thirsty may quaff and acquire one good, final headache.

INTERNATIONALLY famous artists have been selected by Georges Clemenceau to interpret the chief characters in his only photodrama, "The Strongest," now being filmed under the direction of R. A. Walsh at one of the eastern studios of Fox Film Corporation. It is declared to be the best balanced, most carefully selected cast that ever interpreted a master production.

"The Tiger of France" has been a lover and admirer of the screen and stage for many years, and in suggesting to William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, the artists he desired to make his characters live in history, Clemenceau showed that he is as efficient in selecting rare artists as he is in guiding the destinies of a nation.

From this country, from France, from Spain, from the West Indies, has the cast of "The Strongest" been chosen. Carlo Liten, the Sir Henry Irving of Belgium, who is now giving special performances of the works of Maeterlink and other famous authors in New York, makes his screen debut as the marquis in the Clemenceau picture. Liten brings to the part all of that rare finish, hidden force, convincing expression which thirty-five years' experience as a leading actor of his native land has given him.

Supported Sir Henry Irving.

It is not considered strange by those who know him that Harrison Hunter should have been selected to portray the part of the steel king of France. It will be the first appearance of that well-known actor on the silver sheet, but wherever the spoken drama has been given Harrison Hunter is known. Born in Nashville, Tenn., he was sent to England to be educated. After being graduated from college he went on the stage. For nine years he worked steadily in London, supporting Sir Henry Irving, Sir Johnson Forbes Robertson, Sir Charles Wyndham, Wilson Barrett and other well known actors. He came to the United States twenty years ago as leading man for Olga Nethersole, and since that time has supported, as leading man, not less than forty stars. At present he is the outstanding figure of the successful Broadway drama, "The Crimson Alibi."

Direct from the Follies Bergere, the Alhambra and the Casino in Paris comes Renee Adoree, who as the young and attractive heroine of the Clemenceau story will make an auspicious debut on the American screen. Mlle. Adoree is of a distinctive type of beauty for which the Parisian theatres are famous. She has the emotional ability of the French artist and with this combines the bloom of youth.

Villain and Villainess.

Jean de Trigny Gautier and his charming wife—an international union, for Gautier is a Franchman, born in Rheims, while his wife first saw the light of day in Brussels—are cast as the villain and villainess. Gautier, after serving his country for twenty-two months, was invalided out of the service. He came to the United States and when this country declared war on Germany he served as aviation instructor in Mineola. He made his last appearance in France at the Theatre Athenee in Paris as leading man in "I Am True to My Wife."

His wife was the star of the first motion picture actually made in South America.

For the ingenue role R. A. Walsh has selected Miss Teddy Piper. She is making her screen debut in this picture, but has had a successful career on the stage.

C. A. de Lima, a native of the West Indies and of Spanish descent, who appeared in the Theatre Antoine in Paris for more than ten years, has been entrusted with one of the main characters in the story. He is well known in Madrid as well as in Paris, and is no stranger in the United States, where he has appeared in support of several well-known motion picture stars.

The other characters of the great Clemenceau story have been chosen by R. A. Walsh, the director, and his assistant, James Marcus. The production by Fox Film Corporation will be in keeping with the story. It will include many big scenes, in the handling of which Director Walsh is without a superior. Benjamin Bail is handling the camera in this production.

Robertson-Cole Scenic Shows at Capitol Theatre

NEW YORK audiences last week saw Oregon as Clark and Lewis, famous blazers of the Northwest trail did, through medium of the Robertson-Cole Adventure Scenic, "Flaming Ice," which was at the Capitol Theatre. Incidentally, regular patrons of the Capitol got a third taste of Adventure Scenics for which the first ones whetted their appetites.

The Capitol booked the first ten of these pictures upon sight and Manager Edward Bowes, after the showing of the first picture added an additional bit of praise.

"We decided strongly enough for the pictures to take the first ten, after seeing the initial picture," he said. "Public showings of the first has more than backed up our judgment. One of the strongest appeals of the pictures is contained in the fact that each tells a little human story, which adds interest."

"Just Over Yonder," the second scenic, concerns the Oregon mountains and the dense forests which surround a broad volcanic country. H. H. Brownell and Jock Rantz, cameraman and director, traveled over a primitive trail to reach the locations.

"I and the Mountain" will be next in the series. It will tell the appealing story of a young man who "finds himself" close to nature. There will be released week by week, other subjects such as "The Last Resort," laid about a beautiful lake in northern Washington; "Waters of Destiny," a study of two lakes; "Sheep O'Leavenworth," laid in the Oregon sheep country, and others.

Zukor Invites Theatre Managers to Hook Up With Famous Players-Lasky

EXTENSION of the activities of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation into the field of motion picture exhibtion through the association of the company with the present management of large houses strategically situated in leading American cities is the substance of a statement issued by Adolph Zukor, president of the company.

"The outstanding feature of my six weeks' trip to California and through the far Northwest," said Mr. Zukor, "was the very general expression voiced by theatre owners everywhere that they regard with great favor and enthusiasm the opportunity to assure to themselves a consistently steady supply of high class motion pictures of the Paramount standard.

"There is no denying the widespread feeling of confidence in motion picture exhibition. The public's desire to patronize the best theatres exhibiting the best pictures is a sign that so long as producers continue to improve their product at the rate of past growth, theatre enterprises may be undertaken of a most ambitious character, drawing to the industry many millions of dollars for theatre development.

Producers Must Be Encouraged.

"For fifteen years, first as an exhibitor and subsequently as a producer and distributor, I have watched closely each phase of the industry's growth. I have always had a keen recognition and an earnest appreciation of the delicate machinery that must function ceaselessly if one or all branches of the industry are to operate successfully. It is a truism that one cannot exhibit good motion pictures in the finest of theatres unless the incentive to produce the best is given to the man who makes them.

"There was a time in our growth when the thought of closely co-ordinating production and distribution was regarded by the inexperienced in our industry as a sign of danger. All sorts of false prophecies were made. Yet the result has been highly satisfactory, great economies have been effected and clear thinking producers have been able to proceed with their work in the confidence of an intimate understanding of the market for which they are creating.

No Handicap on Enterpise.

"One of the reasons why the motion picture industry has plunged ahead with such gratifying strides has been because of the commercially adventurous men and women that have been its very life and soul. And I do not withhold this compliment from any branch. Personally, I know of men who have risked much to put over a theatre. Any spirit short of indomitable would have been crushed during the period of adolescence for that enterprise until it became a self-supporting and prosperous undertaking.

"That these men—and there are thousands of them—should carefully guard their enterprises from aggression is only natural. They know at the present time that their success is attracting constant attention from other investors in their community. They also know that the real insurance for the continued success of their theatres is an assured supply of motion picture stories, expertly produced, widely exploited and timed to the public's desire. This is and has been the policy of Famous Players—since its inception.

Service to Be Expanded.

"During the past year more than 11,000 theatres exhibited Paramount Pictures. It is a record of which I am very proud. It is a tribute to the men and women of the studios and a mark of credit to our distributing organization. Our service during the present season will be even greater.

"Back of the present, however, are seven years of organization building, large capital outlay and experience. Owners of many of the best theatres in the United States are not lacking in an appreciation of these facts. More theatres have become substantial enterprises because they were founded and have grown with Paramount Pictures than the theatres that have played all other brands combined.

"There is going to be a great stimulus in theatre building in the next few years. One factor only may retard this wholly desirable movement, however, and that is a lack of belief by exhibitors and investors that the source and supply of good motion pictures will continue. I am speaking as a producer when I say that good pictures, in fact great pictures, will continue to be made by us—that the plans which this company has under way will warrant the most certain confidence. I have just had a series of important conferences with Mr. Lasky and Mr. De Mille on this point.

Extends Invitation to Exhibitors.

"Our company for some months has been working with a number of prominent exhibitors who have enlisted our co-operation. Thus they have assured to themselves for a period of years a constant source of picture supply for their screens and we have obtained a permanent outlet for our pictures commensurate with their values.

"I am therefore very happy to invite exhibitors anywhere and everywhere to communicate with me in regard to the establishing of permanent relations between themselves and ourselves. However, I will be glad to furnish pictures as before to any exhibitor on our present contract basis. We are asking nothing from an exhibitor but the opportunity to perpetuate his own and our business and in return we are guaranteeing to him the very best product that money, brains and experience can furnish.

"I regard our exhibitors' good will as one of our greatest assets. The extension of our co-operative policy among the theatres that have supported us in the past and will support us in the future, I believe, will be one of the greatest stabilizing influences ever developed in the industry."

Paul Brunet Leaves for West Coast; Makes No Announcement on Departure

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has left for Los Angeles on a mission that will have an important bearing on Pathe's future activities. For some days it has been rumored that Mr. Brunet would make the trip, but until now no definite confirmation of the report was forthcoming from Pathe. Mr. Brunet had no statement to issue before leaving.

While the motive which takes him across the continent on his first trip to California was not divulged, it must be one of the utmost import to Pathe. At this time the activities of producing organizations affiliated with Pathe are at the their height in California. Jack Dempsey, world's heavyweight boxing champion, is making a serial which, from all reports, will be a big success. Word from California indicates that Dempsey has readily adapted himself to his studio career and is more than making a success as an actor.

Multiplicity of Activities.

Edgar Lewis, one of the foremost producers in the industry, only recently arrived on the west coast to film his second Pathe special, to follow "Other Men's Shoes." The latter picture, adapted from the novel by Andrew Soutar, will be released on February 1. Frank Keenan is working on his own productions, the latest of which is temporarily titled "Enter—A Vagabond." Ruth Roland, heading her own serial producing company, is completing "The Adventures of Ruth," considered one of the biggest continued story films ever issued by Pathe.

It is probable that Mr. Brunet's trip will be partly devoted to the interests of the recently launched Associated Exhibitors, Inc., the organization of which is now virtually complete. The Pathe general manager will be away for some weeks and is leaving at a time when the conditions of the great releasing organization were never more prosperous nor the prospects brighter. There never was a time in the entire annals of Pathe Exchange, Inc., that business has attained the proportions it does today. The feature sales are increasing monthly, with the prospects that the business increase of 1919 will be surpassed during the coming year.

Promoters of Advertising Films Disappoint Public

WHILE a movement is on foot among exhibitors to protect the screens of theatres from advertising films, another matter which might be worth the attention of exhibitors is that relating to the promoting of advertising films, particularly in the smaller cities. With the oldtime newspaper advertising campaigns a dead issue in most communities, the latest stunt of promoters is advertising films for which the merchants and other advertisers pay heavily and sometimes to their regret.

Recently such a film was promoted in the city of Corning, N. Y., and now Edward Preger, president of the chamber of commerce of that city, is busy explaining that the chamber is not to blame for the failure of the pictures. So much has been said about the pictures, the poor photographic work and the dismal appearance of the film on the screen, that the president has felt called upon to make a statement.

The dapper, smart talking promoters who formerly induced the merchants, and all too often a newspaper, to sign up for their project, are now working the screen for all it is worth, and this is a whole lot more than some fellows in the big cities know about. The modus operandi of the promoters in the old days was induce the advertisers to offer heavy premiums, sell at reduced rates, contribute generously to an advertising booklet or newspapers and otherwise induce a short-lived boom. When the bottom fell out, as it did after it was all over, the promoters had taken their share of the spoils and departed, leaving a lot of cuss words behind.

Appoints Doug Fairbanks a War Savings Director

RECOGNIZING the tremendous public following enjoyed by Douglas Fairbanks, Director Robert E. Smith, war loan organization, twelfth federal reserve district, has appointed the United Artists producting star the director of the war savings for the southern California zone.

Prior to making the appointment, the government official offered the screen star the assistant directorship for the entire twelfth federal district, which comprises the seven states of the Pacific Coast. Owing to the great amount of time required for his studio work, Fairbanks preferred the smaller territory. He but recently finished "When the Clouds Roll By," and is now working on his third United Artists picture.

The appointment is not a temporary affair but will continue as long as the war loan organization has work to do. In accepting the appointment, Fairbanks stated that he would do everything in his power to prove worthy of the honor shown him and he at once became actively engaged in the work set aside for him.

Hadley's Movical Comedy and Musical Revue Opens

HOPP HADLEY'S "Movical" Comedy, "The New Wizard of Oz," screen version of L. Frank Baum's book of the same title, with the newest thing in picture presentation, "The Movie Girl's Revue," featuring Alice Eldridge, champion girl swimmer and fancy diver of New England; Janet Stone, recently of Ned Weyborn's "Demi-Tasse Revue," at the Capitol Theatre, and the team of Bailey and Russell, formerly of the Hip Hip Hooray Company, Hipodrome, with a chorus of fourteen girls, opened at Keith's Lincoln Theatre, Union Hill, N. J., to the largest number of paid admissions recorded by the management of the theatre during the current year.

This is one of the few instances in the history of motion pictures where a complete musical comedy revue has been presented in connection with the showing of a feature motion picture, the revue carrying out the spirit and dramatic action of the picture. The idea is Hopp Hadley's.

Following its run at the Lincoln Theatre, the "Movical" Comedy will be given a week's run in White Plains, N. Y., after which it will open for an extended run at one of the big Broadway houses.

Mr. Hadley announces that the "New Wizard of Oz," which is showing in five reels, and its accompanying revue, composed of sixteen people, may be booked direct through William Alexander, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York. Bookings are now open for all parts of the United States.

Conway Made Branch Manager.

H. L. Conway, for some time assistant branch manager of the Cleveland office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has just been appointed manager of Pathe's Des Moines headquarters. Mr. Conway has had a wide experience in the field of motion pictures, and is thoroughly acquainted with exchange direction, through his association with the Pathe Cleveland branch.

Pathe's January Feature Is Miss Sweet in "Cressy"

PATHE announces the Jesse D. Hampton production, "Fighting Cressy," starring Blanche Sweet, as its principal release on January 11. The popular star is not only a big attraction for the exhibitor's box office but the well-known story by Bret Harte, from which the picturization was made, is universally popular.

Jesse D. Hampton made the selection of Bret Harte's charming story, "Cressy," and rechristened it "Fighting Cressy" because Miss Sweet plays the spirited role of the fighting daughter of a fighting Kentuckian. "Cressy" is the author at his best and relates a delightful romance of 1860 in Toulumne County, California.

Director Robert Thornby has selected an admirable group of players to surround the star. Pell Trenton plays opposite Miss Sweet, Russell Simpson is Cressy's father and Frank Lanning is his feud enemy. Antrim short is Cressy's cast-off fiance, Edward Peil is the unscrupulous school teacher and Walter Perry does one of his fine character bits. Others prominent in the large cast are Billie Bennett, Eunice Moore and the child actor, Georgie Stone.

Pathe has begun a strong advertising campaign for the benefit of the exhibitor and is certain that after the reception with which "A Woman of Pleasure," starring Miss Sweet, was received, exhibitors should profit handsomely on this new feature which shows the star in an entirely different role.

Prices Reduced in Salt Lake City.

A general reduction of admission prices is announced by W. H. Swanson, president of the Swanson Theatre Circuit, for the American and Gem theatres in Salt Lake City. The two theatres will pay all war taxes hereafter.

The admission prices at the American, where first run pictures only are exhibited, will be 17, 30 and 40 cents for night performances. For matinees the prices will be 15, 25 and 35 cents a seat. At the Gem Theatre, the home of big special productions, the admission will be 25, 50 and 75 cents. Matinees are 11 cents for children and 22 cents for adults for all seats on the lower floor, while divan seats will be 55 cents. The run of pictures at the Gem Theatre is for one week or longer.

Montreal Theatre Re-Named.

The Connaught Theatre, 338 St. Catherine street west, Montreal, Quebec, has been re-named the Regal Theatre. A recent attraction at this theatre was an industrial picture, illustrating the local dairy industry, which has been made by Canadian Films, Ltd., a concern that has been engaged in the preparation of various film subjects.

Minneapolis League Is Prepared to Fight Free Advertising Reels

MEMBERS of the Minneapolis Exhibitors Protective League are lining up for what they expect to be a strenuous fight against the distributors and exchange managers over the film advertising troubles. Under Charles W. Gates, the president, they have been quietly assembling their forces for the last few months until now they declare they have practically aligned the entire body of exhibitors in the Northwest with them. Plans are being worked out for an opposition advertising reel to be promulgated by the exhibitors.

A committee of the league has been successful in its first skirmish in the compaign. They have submitted proposals to the Northwest exchange managers, which are now being considered, with an ultimatum to follow, if there is not some adjustment worked out.

Following a meeting of the league this week, Mr. Gates issued this statement:

Promises Money for Same Films.

"At a recent meeting of exchange managers held in New York the question of national advertising was taken up and disposed of by national managers, stating that they could sign up every exhibitor in their territory to run a free reel containing national advertising. They claim that this is a movement to help America, but this whole movement is to deliver the screens of the theatre owners to national advertisers, with whom they have contracts signed up already.

"Can they deliver the goods? They cannot and will not if the exhibitors will give the Exhibitors Protective League thirty days to work out their plans. Exhibitors should not fall for this free stuff. We will get them real money for the same films and build up an organization at the same time that will demand the attention of those who would attack them.

"These producers can see the possibilities of a gigantic exhibitors' association in the very near future if we are allowed to continue with our present plans uninterrupted. In hopes of eliminating the only real chance that the exhibitors have ever had to perfect an organization that would finance itself, they create an opposition advertising reel and pledge the screens to the national advertisers."

Would Burn Opera House for Roman Holiday Scene

TO permit the burning of the local opera house to provide a Roman holiday climax for a moving picture or not is the question that is being discussed by the authorities of New Westminster, British Columbia. The city has a large opera house, erected twenty years ago, that has proved to be a veritable white elephant. Many showmen have attempted to make the theatre a paying proposition, but without success, and the place has not been used for several years. Not long ago the representative of a moving picture producer made an offer for the burning of the structure to provide a thrill for a forthcoming release.

Fire Chief Watson, of New Westminster, is in favor of the fire, it is reported, but Mayor Gray does not want to see the flare up unless the producing company will guarantee to erect a more suitable structure in its place. The producing company, which has its headquarters in the United States, declared, however, that if it finds it necessary to replace the burned building, steps might as well be taken to erect a make-believe theatre especially for the one scene and be done with it.

Not a Monkey Gland Was Employed in Resuscitation of This Theatre

IT WASN'T very long ago that the Ada Meade Theatre, Lexington, Ky., was as hopeless and forsaken as a boarding-house prune bowl. Even if Dr. Gufier, the celebrated French surgeon who claims to be able to transplant a monkey gland to a human and thus preserve life, was an expert on theatres, he would have laid down his knife if he could have seen the Ada Meade.

The interstitial theory regarding transplantation was only conceivable in one way, and that was to transplant hundreds of residents of Lexington from their front porches to the Ada Meade.

In short, it was plainly a case of resurrection.

Residents of Lexington used to buy some of the 25-cent magazines in the vain hope of reading about the Ada Meade Theatre because Basil King claims to receive messages from the dead. There was no disputing the fact that the Ada Meade was dead.

The Transition Begins.

But just about this time J. Real Neth cast a showman's gaze on the Ada Meade. He was interested in the town of Lexington and wondered why the Ada Meade could not mete out even a meagre cigarette fund for the unfortunate exhibitor.

And thereupon J. Real Neth, the present manager of the Ada Meade Theatre, became known as the Dr. Gufier of showdom. By a little manipulation he turned an aged, frail, weakling sort of a house into a real theatre.

If Mr. Neth were to explain just what operation took place he might say:

"I found that the Ada Meade had been providing itself with a poor assortment of glands. There were glands of the Wild West sort at prices ranging all the way from 65 cents to $1.20 per reel.

"To get down to facts, I found that the Ada Meade had been making a desperate effort to run a motion picture theatre without pictures. They were showing films but not pictures."

Faced Serious Competition.

That's the way Mr. Neth, the Dr. Gufier of showdom, put renewed vitality and extra life in a crippled specimen that had one foot in the grave and the other on a banana peel.

It is doubtful if an exhibitor had a harder task than that which Mr. Neth met. In the first place, there was serious competition in Lexington.

James A. Todd, manager of the Ben Ali Theatre, was using the latest exploitation methods and keeping on the alert for every little thing that could win public friendship and increase the box office receipts of his house.

Mr. Neth's realization that it was highly essential to secure the best productions, with stars of unquestioned box office power, was apparently the same as Mr. Tood's. When those gentlemen were first introduced it was at the Kentucky exchange of the First National Exhibitors Circuit.

Goldberg Was Mediator.

Secretary Lee L. Goldberg was in a quandry when each exhibitor began bidding for the Norma Talmadge, D. W. Griffith, Marshall Neilan and other productions to be distributed by First National Exhibitors Circuit. Rather than encourage an antagonistic feeling between the two exhibitors, Mr. Goldberg agreed that each exhibitor should have four of the Norma Talmadge pictures.

They drew lots for first choice. Unfortunately for the Lexington exhibitors,some of the Griffith and Neilan series of productions to be distributed by First National were in uneven numbers, making an equal division of pictures impossible.

Thus has the Ada Meade Theatre been turned into a paying theatre by Mr. Neth through his policy of playing those pictures that would insure gratifying audiences and not those that can be obtained cheap. Among First National releases that Mr. Neth has played at the Ada Meade since the day of its return to life are the Anita Stewart features, "Her Kingdom of Dreams" and "Human Desire," and the Constance Talmadge features, "A Temperamental Wife" and "A Virtuous Vamp," both of which were adapted for screen use by John Emerson and Anita Loos.

Rivalry between the exhibitor-owners of the Ada Meade and Ben Ali is now a thing unknown. In Lexington it's a question of "Love Thy Exhibitor As Thyself." And it's outfitting them with jazz-boats.

Vitagraph to Increase Its Production in 1920

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, who recently returned from a six weeks' trip to the West, during which he spent some time at the Hollywood studio, has laid out an ambitious plan for Vitagraph's activities during the coming year. While Mr. Smith has made public a few of the big things arranged for, complete details of the many innovations and unusual features will not be announced until after the Christmas holidays. It is known, however, that Vitagraph will greatly increase its output without lowering the high standard of its features and special productions. To this end the studio at Hollywood has been enlarged so as to nearly double its former capacity, and many improvements, including greatly increased lighting facilities and electrical equipment, have been made at the Eastern plant at Brooklyn.

Mr. Smith announced some days ago the new agreement with Larry Semon, Vitagraph's leading comedian, which insures his continuance with Vitagraph until at least the close of 1922. Following this came the further announcement that during his visit to Hollywood Mr. Smith also renewed the contract for William Duncan for three years.

Still another of Mr. Smith's early announcements is that Joe Ryan and Jean Paige have been raised to stardom and will appear as co-stars in a new Smith-Brady serial.

These are some of the big things that Mr. Smith has already made public in a preliminary announcement. More are to follow. Vitagraph anticipates a banner year in the motion picture world and is making every provision to meet the increased demands on its output.

Bookings on "The Hellion."

C. A. Stimson, general sales manager of the American, reports the Northwest Exhibitors' Circuit among the recent heavy bookings which continue to come in on the sensational "Flying A" superfeature, "The Hellion." F. W. Normand secured the contract for the same 105 theatres which were packed by "Six-Feet-Four."

Seven theatres in Seattle, and leading houses in Tacoma, Spokane, Olympia, Bellingham, Hoquiam, Pullman, Everett, Centralia, Aberdeen and other Washington state cities are included in the circuit; also Butte, Billings, Anaconda, Livingston, Miles City, Missoula, Harlowtown, Helena, Kalispell, and Havre in Montana; Boise, Pocatello, Moscow and Lewiston in Idaho; Portland, Salem, Astor, Baker and Pendleton in Oregon.

New York News Is Small Town Stuff for Average Showman, Says Williams

CONTRASTING with the facts obtained at first hand on his recent trip of five weeks into 80 per cent. of the exchange territories the pre-tour opinions and ideas expressed to him by prominent film men in New York on a score of important film topics, J. D. Williams, manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has returned from his work of nationalizing that organization's exhibitor campaign with the declaration that New York film circles are just 8 per cent. acurate in their gauge of country-wide conditions in the industry.

"And that 8 per cent of accuracy in New York-born opinions that are supposed to be statements applying to the entire United States," he declares, "is no less because New York City, as a film territory, represent about 8 per cent. of the gross revenue on the average release.

Semi-Annual Trips Essential.

"Moreover, no motion picture executive has either the right or the ability to assume the responsibility for directing the national destinies of a film concern unless he considers it a very important part of his success to visit the various territories at least once each year, and acts accordingly. A theatre tour at least once every six months by film executives would be nearer to a practical discharge of executive duties.

"Film conditions, according to the Broadway ideas, may be accepted, as an average, as being 8 per cent. correct. Before Mr. Schwalbe, Mr. Gordon and I left New York we had heard countless opinions about what exhibitors were doing, what they intended to do, what trend the business would take in the year to come, what the big developments of the next twelvemonth would be, and, of equal volume in discussion, but of greater inaccuracy and greater importance, the actual conditions now existent in all territories, and which have a very material bearing on the immediate future. We heard local happenings talked about with a gusto which made obvious the opinion of the speakers that they considered these New York events of prime national importance.

Unconcerned by New York Gossip.

"The actual fact is that exhibitors out in the territories read very little, and care less, about the changes in the administrative personnels of the various film concerns, about the rumors that the president or general director of this company or that has resigned, or is about to resign or that a certain production was given a private showing atop the Grand Central train sheds to a selected audience copied from the Congresional Blue Book.

"In personal talks with many keen, capable exhibitors there was not an instance when one of them requested any verification or denial of the choicest bits of gossip current in New York film circles. They did not appear at all interested in the personalities of the executive side of the producing and distributing branches. But they did ask innumerable questions about matters that are directly pertinent to their own immediate affairs.

Capitol Interests Theatre Men.

"Everywhere there was voiced a genuine interest in the new Capitol Theatre here. They wanted to know all about its appointments, what new architectural features it had, how its floor plan had been arranged; the decorations in the lobby and foyers; the type and kind of projection equipment, and the arrangement of the programs which Mr. Bowes creates. The reason for this interest was that the Capitol, as an unprecedented example of theatre construction, offered suggestions and ideas for exhibitors' use in improving their own properties. And there was a great deal of pride in being able to recommend many of its unique features.

"Exhibitors want ideas on showmanship, on advertising, on novel but practical, public stunts that will help them to attract more patronage to their houses. They want to know what other exhibitors are doing to win the elusive 'occasionals' among theatre patrons.

J. D. Williams
Manager of First National Exhibitors Circuit.

"Paris Is Not France."

"The New York viewpoint on the industry as a whole is at least 92 per cent. short of being comprehensive on the majority of subjects it elects to envision. This is not strange or in any way a result to be criticized. It is something that is typical of every film territory.

"Most surprising and prophetic of the many facts which the trip developed is the almost unanimous sentiment among exhibitors, large and small, for larger and more luxurious theatres. The big, underlying reason for this tendency to speed evolution is the many evidences that the great special feature productions of last season gave of the prime need for more capacity. Exhibitors with theatres seating fifteen or eighteen hundred are thinking now of houses that will accommodate 2,500 or 3,000. The theatre men who have been operating with from 600 to 1,000 seats are convinced that houses are needed that will accommodate twelve or fifteen hundred patrons.

Tendency Towards Larger Houses.

"Many of the small town exhibitors, with 300 and 400 seat theatres, are thinking about remodeling or of building entirely new structures, with from 50 to 150 per cent. increases in capacity. Of course, this is going to mean fewer theatres, in the end, because one large theatre, erected in a locality that is now supporting three small houses, eventually will close at least one of the others.

"But this should tend to intensify the public demand for screen entertainment. Records for theatre patronage for the United States show, in their total, a considerable difference against the Government's total of adult population. New and more elaborate theatres will encourage the reluctant element to unbend and follow in the wake of popular fancy. With the new era of theatre enlargement there will be an ever increasing market for bigger production effort.

Says Tall Stories Dwindle.

"It was extremely interesting to check up some of the many rumors common to New York about the elaborate theatre holdings being rapidly acquired by some of the producer-distributors and chain theatre operators. On Broadway it was daily gossip that house after house and chain after chain was being purchased. The rumors grew until, before I left on the trip, I was told in all confidence that the total for two or three concerns had reached close to 400 theatres. The fact is that not more than three out of twenty reported transactions actually took place, or will take place, in the territories we visited during our trip.

Expect Order Out of Chaos.

"The greatest question in the mind of the average exhibitor is about the future changes in the releasing affiliations of stars and producers whose pictures are in demand. The rapidity with which these changes have occurred in the last year or two has been the source of great difficulty for theatre owners. Moreover, it has added materially to their costs of operation without benefitting either the producers or exhibitors. They are hopeful of a better degree of order out of the recent chaos of changes and upheavals which, in many instances, have deprived theatres of stars after the owners had gone to great expense in popularizing and identifying them with houses through several forms of advertising."

Mayer Selects "Polly" When Storm Damages Prints of "Inferior Sex"

AFTER spending thousands of dollars advertising "The Inferior Sex" as the first release of the Mildred Harris Chaplin series, announcement has come from the Louis B. Mayer offices that the initial release has been changed on account of an accident damaging the negative of "The Inferior Sex." The following telegram was received from the Louis B. Mayer Studios in Los Angeles: "Unfortunate experience at studio. Heavy winter rain washed out wall of temporary cutting room, badly damaging almost half of 'Inferior Sex' negative necessitating retakes. Therefore cannot release early part of January as planned. First release will be 'Polly of the Storm Country.' 'Polly' is a wonderful picture from every standpoint. Start your advertising accordingly."

Just prior to the accident, "The Inferior Sex" in its completed form was viewed by Mr. Mayer and all the members of his coast staff, in addition to several outsiders considered competent to pass judgment. The opinion was that it was a remarkable production and should prove an ideal vehicle in which to launch Mrs. Chaplin under the Louis B. Mayer banner.

Wanted Gotham Background.

There was one dissenter. That was Mr. Mayer himself, who, while agreeing that the picture was nearly perfect, regretted the absence of metropolitan background to many of the scenes called for in the story. He believed that this background should be secured, even though it meant six to eight weeks' delay in transportaing the entire company to New York for that purpose; but everybody else was opposed to this view, declaring that the metropolitan backgrounds were so cleverly reproduced that unless one were told that the picture was taken in Los Angeles, it would be hard to believe that it was not actually taken in New York City. So it was finally settled that the picture should be released as finally passed.

Then the terrific storm which broke down the wall of the temporary cutting room made considerable retaking necessary and Mr. Mayer thereupon decided to retake the scenes which require a New York background in the East, regardless of delay and expense, because he felt that it would be for the benefit of the picture.

Prepare "Polly" Publicity.

"Polly of the Storm Country," which was intended as the second release of the Mildred Harris Chaplin series, was completed and in process of cutting and titling. Mr. Mayer immediately wired Little, Brown & Co., of Boston, who are publishing the book, and finding out that it would be on sale all over the country the latter part of January, he determined to make "Polly" the first release of the Chaplin series.

Mayer's New York offices are therefore humming with activity in preparation of a big publicity campaign for "Polly of the Storm Country." It is from the pen of Grace Miller White, who wrote "Tess of the Storm Country" for Mary Pickford and "The Secrets of the Storm Country" for Norma Talmadge. "Polly of the Storm Country" is laid in the same interesting locality but is radically different in story and treatment from the other two.

"Polly" is being directed by Arthur H. Rosson, from the scenario by Frank M. Dazey. The cameraman is Harold Rosson and the art director is George Hopkins. A strong cast supporting Mildred Harris Chaplin includes Emery Johnson, Charles West, Charlotte Burton, Harry Northrup, Ruby Lafayette, Fred Kohler, Cora Drew, Cameron Coffey, Mickey Moore, Maurice Valentin and Dick Rosson.

Earl and Cassard Originate Traveling Sales Convention

PRESIDENT EDWARD EARL, of the Nicholas Power Company, is a great believer in those effective and modern business developers called sales conventions, but he has always found it impractable to hold them. This year, however, he hit upon the idea of what he calls traveling sales conventions. He determined to have a personal representative of the company visit exhibitors, distributors, dealers and salesmen. He chose Sales Manager S. S. Cassard, and how well Mr. Cassard succeeded is now a matter of record.

"Dick" Cassard is so well known to the industry that it will be difficult for many to believe it was necessary for him to get acquainted with those interested in his line. But there is quite a bit of land north, south and west of the metropolis which is inhabited by exhibitors who spend just as much money and have just as well furnished and well equipped theatres as the finest in New York.

Mr. Cassard found that a majority of these exhibitors had been buying Power's projectors for years through distributors and dealers, but had never come into personal contract with anybody connected with the main office. He found his assignment of meeting such individuals even more pleasant than he had anticipated.

The sales manager is a past master in the art of putting the personal touch into correspondence, but to really know him the exhibitor has to meet him. On this trip Mr. Cassard left behind him a long trail of friends and good will, and many smiling faces, because "Dick" Cassard would never qualify as an undertaker. The trail, which extended from New York to New Orleans and as far west and north as Minneapolis, was well illuminated with smiles at all important points.

Mr. Earl regards his idea as a proved success and the traveling sales convention will hereafter be a regular feature of the company's program.

Triangle Film Booking Heavily.

"Betty of Greystone," containing that four star combination, Dorothy Gish, Owen Moore, Allan Dwan and D. W. Griffith, which was released by Triangle December 14 as its holiday offering to exhibitors, is reported to be booked heavily as its predecessor in Triangle's list of recreated production, "The Flame of the Yukon."

The picture was produced by Triangle under the personal supervision of D. W. Griffith. Allan Dwan directed Miss Gish who plays the stellar role. Owen Moore leads an exceptionally capable supporting cast which includes George Fawcett, Kate Bruce and Norman Selby (Kid McCoy.)

"Night of the Dub" Spreads Smiles.

Ernest Truex is spreading sunny smiles by his comic characterization of Ernie Biggs in "The Night of the Dub," the initial Paramount-Truex comedy presented by Amedee J. Van Beuren. Some of the theatres in which this comedy has created merriment are: The Nixon-Grand in Pittsburgh: the Modern and the Beacon in Boston: the Strand in Birmingham, Ala.; Loew's Palace Washington, D. C.; the Arcade in Jacksonville, Fla.; and the Strand in Providence, Rhode Island.

Printed Program of a New Theatre Should Be More or Less Historical

By W. M. Gladish

WITH the erection and opening of so many picture theatres in many cities on this continent, there is a current need for ideas for announcement programs for distribution at opening performances or during a first week of a new theatre.

Just what should be featured in such an opening program or souvenir booklet? The man who is able to build a big theatre is sometimes at sea when it comes to details of printing, whereas the experienced writer would have little or no idea how to go about the construction of a film palace. A suggested introduction for a souvenir program for a house opening therefore probably is not out of place.

The opening program of a new theatre should be more or less historical in order to show the big contrast between the modern moving picture theatre and the store show of a few years ago. There should also be an indirect comparison with the legitimate stage, but more harm than good will be accomplished if the theatre manager takes a "rap" at the "speakies."

In a Class by Itself.

Many truthful claims can be made for appointments in the up-to-date moving picture theatre and the truth about orchestral features, the variety of the screen, the comfort details and other facts is also quite sufficient to earn attention and respect. For it is indeed true that the modern moving picture theatre is in a class by itself and that it is the near-goal of perfection in numerous respects.

Below is given editorial material that can be used, with possible variations, for the opening of any large moving picture theatre in practically any city of the country, if desired. The offered statement, if used in whole or in part, can be headed "Something about Moving Pictures" or "Introducing Ourselves" or "A Word About the Great Industry," "The Advancement of Moving Pictures," "The Development of the Moving Picture Theatre," "The Advance in Film Art," "The Culmination of Ideals," etc.

Following is the suggested introduction for the printed program of a new theatre:

One of the outstanding romances of modern life has been the phenomenal development of the moving picture business. Within a comparatively short period of a few years, moving pictures have advanced from the experimental stage to a plane of perfection. It was only in 1893 that Holland Brothers, of Ottawa, Ontario, made the first practical presentation of moving pictures, this being the "screening" of Edison's Kinetoscope in New York. Several years followed, however, before any further advancement of note was made with moving picture films for practical purposes.

The films produced were more than double the size of the present celluloid strips and many faults could be seen in their presentation. Progress came slowly but surely, however, and forerunner of the modern moving picture palace made its appearance. This was the old "store show" which was soon to be found in many cities.

The Old Store Show.

Not more than 500 feet of film made up the sole feature which was presented in the store shows and every detail of a performance was crude. The one-piece "orchestra" rattled off a couple of tunes, a "lecturer" told of the wonderful facts about moving pictures and the one picture was then presented. This picture probably consisted of a passing railway train or a view of horsemen galloping rapidly down a road. The picture was all over in five minutes and the whole performance was concluded in ten minutes.

The usual charge was 5 cents and the quicker that the proprietor could get patrons into and out of the store the more successful he was. There was no thought for comfort, ventilation, lighting effects or other details which are now so important. Frequently a small phonograph scraped away on one tune out in front of the store show and the proprietor of the show acted as spieler, ticket seller, ticket taker, machine operator, lecturer, pianist and usher—all in one.

Theatres Begin Developing the Industry.

The store show had its day because a few experiences were sufficient. After the novelty of seeing the first pictures had passed off, the crude store show held little attractiveness for the discriminating person. The small theatre replaced the store show and 5 cent admission prices became forgotten eventually. The moving picture theatre gradually, yet rapidly, became more pretentious. It has expanded in every direction. The one-man show has become an amusement palace in which the number of employes frequently reaches the fifty or one hundred mark. The orchestra of the big modern moving picture theatre is now invariably larger than that found in the best of high class dramatic theatres, and the music feature alone receives a vast amount of attention.

Luxurious Appointments.

How different in every respect is the modern moving picture palace to the tiny show of just a few years ago! The film theatre has a style of architecture all its own and the many appointments show the result of intensified study. What is more comfortable and entertaining than a few hours spent in a moving picture theatre of an afternoon or an evening? There is an elegance of appointment that is both elevating and inspiring. The usual programme is entertaining, amusing, edifying and thrilling. The music is wonderfully sublime. The theatre attendants are obliging and courteous. As you recline in your seat there is not a strain or discomfort while the magnificent film production unfolds before your gaze.

The World Before Your Eyes.

The screen takes you to all parts of the world in just a few minutes. The story of a book is revealed in life-like form before your eyes. You laugh heartily over the antics of comedians or complex situations in a funny picture. The news of the day is portrayed in actual representation so that you can see more in a moment than what could be described in a column of newspaper space. Developments in the sphere of science are unfolded. You are taught how various commodities are manufactured. The scenic beauties of nature's playgrounds are shown in all their splendor. All the while wonderful music adds color to the views before you. It is all remarkable.

Such is the situation to be found in this theatre, every detail of which has been arranged with a view to giving a maximum of healthy pleasure and entertainment for every patron, old or young, large or small. Tens of thousands of dollars—a real fortune—has been spent in providing such a theatre as this, and in so doing every thought has been given to details which will make it all to be desired.

This theatre stands as the latest word in perfection of moving picture entertainment. That our service to you will be in keeping with the richness of structural appointments is also self-evident and assured. You will find in this theatre every possible comfort, attraction and service.

The Management.

To Feature Ince Productions.

A series of Ralph Ince special productions for 1920 is announced from the office of the Selznick Enterprises by Myron Selznick, who at the same time stated that it was intended to make these specials the big feature productions of the year.

"Eyes of Youth" at the Woodlawn Helped Chicago Celebrate New Year

WHAT is, perhaps, the greatest holiday celebration in the history of the spoken or silent drama, is claimed by Chicago, where, for the first time in its breezy life, six theatres are conducting midnight performances. Chicago inaugurated this method of taking care of the holiday crowds more comfortably, because the fun-loving, gaiety-seeking, generous-speaking Middle West metropolis wants to celebrate its Christmas and incoming New Year with all the verve and dash of the gallants so often seen on stage and screen—and for this reason they turn out in overwhelming numbers to see their favorites.

"Eyes of Youth," booked for New Year's Eve, was the crowning event of the entire youth. For the third time within the past few weeks, each occasion having been under distinctly different auspices, "Eyes of Youth" was presented in that city on Sunday, December 28, at the Woodlawn Theatre. Notwithstanding the inclement weather, throngs of people anxious to see the picture waited all day to push, crowd, or smile their way through in order to gain admittance. So great were the throngs that after a hurried consultation of the theatre management, it was decided that an extra performance put on in the evening would be the only way of solving the difficulty—which was done.

Booked Well Ahead.

The presentation of "Eyes of Youth" in Chicago has been accompanied with the most satisfactory results. The Playhouse Theatre enjoyed a three-weeks' run, beginning November 23, at increased admissions, and announced the house record broken the very first day, as did the Castle Theatre, which played the picture the last two weeks in December to unprecedented business.

Following the engagement at the Woodlawn Theatre, "Eyes of Youth" will be seen at the People's Theatre and Halfield Theatre and will play all theatres in the Ascher Brothers' Circuit, as well as Trinz & Lubliner Theatres and the Balaban & Katz Circuit.

New Vitagraph Film Gives Miss Leslie Opportunities

GLADYS LESLIE has a most emotional role in "The Midnight Bride," her final Vitagraph feature which will be an early January release. It was during the middle of last summer that Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, decided that Miss Leslie had displayed a decided ability for serious roles and that she should no longer devote her talents entirely to the lighter comedy roles. As Belinda, in "The Girl Woman," her first serious role, she made a decided hit and then followed "The Gray Towers Mystery" and "The Golden Shower," in both of which she added to her fame.

"The Midnight Bride" was adapted to the screen from "The Marriage of Little Jeanne Sterling," a magazine story by Charles Stokes Wayne.

Vitagraph Engages Brown.

Melville Brown, who has written and directed a number of successful comedies, has been engaged by Vitagraph to direct Montgomery and Rock in their future comedies. Before joining Vitagraph as a director Mr. Brown was associated with Charlie Chaplin. He was co-director for Mabel Normand and wrote the script for "The Pest," in which she starred.

Indorsement from Miami Valley Men For National Picture Theatres, Inc.

AN indorsement was given the National Picture Theatres, Inc., founded by Lewis J. Selznick, by the Miami Valley Exhibitors League at a special meeting of that organization held recently. Three members of the organization, comprising a special committee, spent four days in New York investigating the merits of the new organization.

The three men were: John Seifert, president of the Miami Valley League; A. F. Kinsler, secretary, and Peter Zander. They conferred with Mr. Selznick and officers of the New York State Exhibitors' League, with which the Ohio organization is closely associated.

The report of the investigating committee resulted in a hearty indorsement of the National Picture Theatres, Inc., which it is hoped will prove the salvation of the independent exhibitor. The forming of this organization by the head of the Selznick enterprises has been welcomed by exhibitors, and this indorsement by the Miami Valley League is proof of appreciation.

Pioneer Names New Manager for Buffalo and Cleveland

PIONEER FILM CORPORATION announces that new managers have been installed in some of its exchanges, beginning with the New Year. In Buffalo, R. T. Murphy, formerly chief assistant to the exchange manager, becomes manager, in place of I. Come, who recently resigned after nearly a year's service. Mr. Cobe will go to Florida.

In the Cleveland office, D. C. Davidson succeeds C. R. Nelson Morris. It is the purpose of the new managers to begin intensive drives in their respective territories. Mr. Murphy is already well acquainted with his territory, and Mr. Davidson has been an exhibitor in the Ohio territory. Later he joined the Fox forces in Cleveland, with which he made an enviable record. Mr. Davidson's assistant will be R. E. Kerely.

Kinograms' Holiday Issue Replete with Filmed News

The holiday issue of Kinograms is full of interesting news that should gladden the hearts of all screen patrons. The "Soviet Ark" is at sea, bound for an unknown port in Russia.

Kinograms seems to be very fond of students. This time we meet the Japanese cadets as they arrive on the Imperial training ship "Yakuma" in San Francisco. To bring relief to the victims of the flood at Montgomery, Ala., a number of planes are flying over that city into the stricken river regions, seeking ways to aid the inundated sections.

Where does Christmas holly come from? Kinograms takes us to the woodlands of Tennessee, where the cutting of these decorative garlands takes place.

We have all been reading about Tabby, the political cat that is accused of graft. Her pictures are very scarce, but Kinograms managed to snap her.

Everybody is interested in unusual weddings. This particular ceremony took place in the gardens at Tokio where Gaishiro Asanac, head of Toyo Kison Kaisha (steamship company) and his bride posed for a Kinograms photographer. We see little Frank Emery Nealon, who was expressed from San Francisco to London, England, reach New York City on time, despite the Xmas rush. Richard Croker and his Indian bride, who visit New York just about this time every year, before leaving for their home in Palm Beach for the winter months, arrived from England on the Carmania.

Breaking the News Gently.

Realizing that exhibitors often have difficulty in making changes of prices, Fred W. Voigt, manager of the Metro branch at San Francisco, has made up a series of ten slides for the use of customers, designed to break the news gently to patrons that higher prices of admission are to follow. These slides call attention to the great improvement in the quality of moving pictures of late and of the plans for maintaining and even bettering this standard. The increased cost of operating theatres is cited, and the statement is then made that slight advances in admission prices must be made. Exhibitors who have made use of the service declare that complaints are much fewer than when prices are increased without warning.

Tries Midnight Matinee and Town Sits Up, Takes Notice and Goes

AN exploitation campaign recommended to exhibitors in cities under 100,000 population as a sure-fire means of arousing a storm of public interest has just been advanced by Lawrence J. Lester, manager of the Rivoli Theatre, Columbia, S. C., in the preferment of a special feature attraction.

According to Mr. Lester, the most certain way of setting the public interest bee to buzzing is to launch some undertaking that requires the co-operation and attention of that portion of a city which wants to be known as "big-timers." With this idea in view, Mr.

IF MY OLD WOMAN WASN'T SEEIN' THE SHOW SHE'D NEVER BELIEVE I WAS WORKIN' THIS LATE
I AIN'T TOOK IN A FARE AFTER MIDNIGHT SINCE THE YEAR OF THE BIG WIND

The Two Citizens Who Didn't See It.
"It," of course, being the first midnight motion picture show in Columbia, S. C.

Lester decided on a "midnight frolic" in the form of a midnight showing of "Auction of Souls," starring Aurora Mardiganian and for which First National Exhibitors' Circuit is the official distributor, as the means of widespread promotion interests.

Ticket Speculators Get Busy.

"There are cities," said Mr. Lester, "where such a thing as a show at 12.01 is nothing out of the ordinary. But in Columbia this sort of an affair means only a New Year's or Armistice Day celebration. We set Monday at 12.01 a. m. as the hour to start off the first showing of 'Auction of Souls,' and although it was reasonable to suppose that the young blood of the city would be present we were hardly prepared for the things that happened."

Seizing upon the event as a logical forewarning of the bringing of the glamour of New York's theatrical fascination to Columbia, ticket speculators quickly bought up a large portion of the best seats. When the news spread that ticket speculation was very much in evidence, this further enhanced the value and novelty of the affair in the minds of local people. And, rather than be thought cheap, especially in the sight of ladies, Columbia gentlemen enjoyed being scalped to the sum of $4 or more for a fifty-cent seat.

Traction Company Co-operates.

Further exploitation was added to the campaign when Mr. Lester arranged with the local street car company to provide extra cars until the wee hours of the morning for those who decided to partake of the "midnight matinee" at the Rivoli. When announcement to this effect was thrown on the screen a few days before the big joyfest the audience broke into applause and cheers.

When midnight on Monday arrived, approximately 1,200 persons were on hand for the performance. Two solid blocks were lined at the curbs with automobiles. Hundreds were unable to gain admission.

Quickly Spots an Armenian.

Mr. Lester had occasion to evidence his showmanship when he spotted an unusual-looking individual attempting to make his way into the theatre. It happened that this person was a native Armenian. He was soon closeted in a private office with Mr. Lester where he authenticated every incident in the picture. He was prevailed upon to write a letter to the daily papers of Columbia, explaining that the screen story of his ravished country was wonderful. This brought more free space for the Rivoli.

"Write to Every Paper in Columbia"—
"As a native Armenian you can verify everything in the production."

With this start, such a popular demand for "Auction of Souls" arose that Mr. Lester found it expedient to show the attraction at the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, both of which he controls, simultaneously.

"Buying a picture as cheap as you can, spreading a few one and three sheets in the lobby and hiring an orchestra isn't managing a theatre," explained Mr. Lester. "It takes showmanship and that means exploitation."

The advertising pages of Moving Picture World tell the story of picture production as it progresses week by week. The text pages give the minute details. What the style pages represent to the up-to-date merchant so do the advertising pages of Moving Picture World inform and keep posted the picture showman.

Realart Advertising the Direct Line of Communication With the Exhibitor

ADVERTISING has been the direct line of communication between Realart Pictures Corporation, exhibitor and public since the first day of the producing company's existence. Whether by printed page or by electric display, Realart has placed itself and its promise before the country through the medium of advertising.

Like all modern industries Realart has depended upon publicity to put across its new message, and by consistent advertising in the trade journals it has become a familiar name in the motion picture business. A page of printed promises was the exhibitor's first acquaintance with Realart. The company has subsequently spared neither effort nor expense to put before the exhibitor through the recognized trade mediums the story of its activities in behalf of the Realart initial "Program for 1919-1920 and forever afterward."

Spokesmen of the Industry.

Believing that the trade papers are the true spokesmen of the industry and that the exhibitors who subscribe to them are the wide-awake and progressive members of a business that develops overnight. Realart has never failed to work hand in hand with these journals, not alone through the advertising columns but through the new pages and the splendid sections devoted to special service for the exhibitor.

In all of its advertising Realart has maintained a distinctive policy of combining artistic effect with sound business representation, so that in this field, too, the motion picture business might retain the privilege of being an industry that works hand in hand with the arts. The colored inserts that have marked the advertising presentation of Realart policies and pictures from the beginning, have attracted comment from many directions.

Costly Electric Sign.

The Realart electric sign, at the corner of Forty-second street and Broadway, New York City, is a definite example of this young corporation's belief in the value of large scale advertising. Towering twelve stories above one of the most famous corners of the world, the "Girl in the Swing" electric display cost $108,000 and is said to be visible to more than 1,000,000 people every twenty-four hours.

Under the direction of John Pond Fritts, Realart has organized an efficient publicity department whose aim is to give real service to the exhibitor and at the same time to avoid the waste and errors that have been natural in the development of this field. Through the aid of branch managers and exploitation men, Realart is keeping in direct touch with experienced exhibitors who are informed as to the practical benefits of exploitation and publicity work. In this way the company is not only keeping to its original policy of exhibitor service, but is giving showmen the kind of help that experience has taught them is necessary and beneficial.

A Disciple of Advertising.

Although Realart was organized only a short time ago, its development has been rapid and certain and by means of advertising and publicity its officials believe that now it is as well known as many other concerns which have been in the field for years. A disciple of consistent advertising, Realart has put its program and its plans before the exhibitor and the public in a comprehensive campaign that has left nothing undone to acquaint everyone with its activities.

Famous Players Studio to Elaborate on "Still" Work

ONE of the most elaborate still photograph studios and laboratories in the country will be installed in the new studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. J. N. Naulty, general manager of the eastern studios, has taken great care that this important branch of the studio will be perfect in every detail to insure excellent results. The capacity will be 10,000 of 8 by 10 stills a day.

The most important feature will be the portrait gallery, which will be equipped with two cameras using the best portrait lenses obtainable and with facilities for daylight or artificial lighting. Any kind of background desired may be constructed at a moment's notice.

One large room will be devoted exclusively to the making of bromide enlargements. Two modern enlarging machines will take care of this work. The drying room will be equipped with electrically driven and heated machines for drying matte surface prints and a specially designed machine for drying ferrotyped prints. Coloring and spotting will be done in a room by itself and the retouching, experts being employed in this work, will be carried on in the room adjoining.

Automatic and hand printing machines will be installed in a separate room with the tanks containing the developing and washing fluids. In the filing room thousands of negatives will be filed so that any scene in any picture may be located at a moment's notice.

Mr. Naulty has put William O. Lyman in charge of this department. Mr. Lyman has for a year and a half been connected with the studio in this line of work.

First Lyons-Moran Comedy Drama.

The first of the five-reel comedy dramas in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, Universal's team of fun-flingers, will be featured will be "Everything But the Truth," Edgar Franklyn's humorous story, the screen rights of which have just been purchased from the Frank A. Munsey Company, by Universal.

Brunet Announces Branch Managers Who Won Prizes Offered by Pathé

IN a competition among branch managers that brought the business of every Pathe department to the highest totals ever recorded in its history, the following winners of the three big prizes during "Quimby Tribute Month" has been announced by Vice-President Paul Brunet.

W. A. Aschmann, Milwaukee, winner of first prize, a $1,000 platinum diamond ring, which under the conditions of the contest went to "the wife of the manager who secured during November the greatest amount of new business in proportion to the rating of his office, and the greatest increase in collections over the average collections for his office for the months of July, August and September.

C. A. Taylor, of Buffalo, winner of second prize, a $500 platinum diamond ring, "awarded the wife of the manager whose showing was second best to the winner of the first prize."

Thirty-Two Participated.

R. S. Shrader, of Indianapolis, winner of the special prize, $1,000 in cash, "awarded by Hal E. Roach, producer of the Harold Lloyd comedies, to the branch manager who secured the greatest amount of business in proportion to the rating of his office, on the special $100,000 two-reel Lloyd comedies during the month of November."

In announcing the awards, Mr. Brunet added that "Quimby Tribute Month" was a success beyond comprehension. The November collections were by far the greatest in the history of Pathe, and they topped a figure the organization had long been striving to attain.

Thirty-two branch managers participated in the competition, and there was not a single office which did not surpass its best previous month.

Doris Kenyon Play Has Many Profitable Showings

DORIS KENYON'S first W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Bandbox," the Deitrich-Beck production of Louis Joseph Vance's gripping stroy, is winning for the beautiful artist exhibitor and public esteem—the same high favor in which she is held by New York theatre goers as the featured player in the Broadway stage success, "The Girl in the Limousine." "The Bandbox" effectively brings out the charm, diversified talents and beauty of this accomplished young artiste, who, in a comparatively short time, enjoys the distinction of being at once a successful star in pictures and a pronounced favorite in the spoken drama.

Western as well as eastern showmen report success with the production. One of these is E. J. Myrick, managing director of the Peoples Theatre, Butte, Mont., where "The Bandbox" has just completed a very successful engagement, despite the fact that it was Doris Kenyon's first appearance at that house. The New Yale, Muskogee, Okla., also reported business far beyond the management's expectations in its holiday week engagement of "The Bandbox."

Two Indiana theatres, the La Salle, South Bend, and the Grand, Gary, found the Doris Kenyon picture a banner box office magnet during the holiday week. W. Waldo Freeman, managing director of the Palace, Great Falls, Mont., is now engaged on a big exploitation and advertising campaign for heralding "The Bandbox," which he has booked for early January presentation.

Canadians Want Pictures With a British Flavor

THE educationalists of Canada, to the number of 1,504 from all parts of the country, in session recently at Winnipeg, Manitoba, adopted a resolution in which a desire was expressed for moving pictures with a Canadian or British tone. They also asked that the hand of the various boards of censorship in Canada be strengthened for the usual reason—the raising of the standard of the moving picture industry.

The suggestion that posters are risque in order to arouse interest in a comparatively calm feature is quite a new impression, and if the National Educational Council is able to carry through its wishes, all theatre advertisements in newspapers and magazines, as well as the poster displays, may have to be passed by the censors. In this connection, it is pointed out that the municipal authorities of Toronto and Montreal actually do examine all posters to require the covering up of weapons and to hide scenes that are a little too vampish. The Montreal police officials, by the way, have formed a habit of stamping their "Approuve" mark on the face, neck or shoulders of a star player—so that he who runs may read. This habit led to protests upon the part of Montreal moving picture interests not long ago.

It has also been a fact that Montreal police officials have wrecked handsome lobby displays because the proprietor of the theatre had not sought the approval of the police for a painted setting of original design which had been arranged for a current attraction. All that was needed to make these settings or displays perfect in the eyes of the authorities was the stamped word "Approuve" on the figure or scene depicted. As a majority of the people of Montreal are of French extraction, the official stamp is in the French language.

Numa Starts Its New Year with "Return of Tarzan"

NUMA Pictures Corporation starts the New Year with "The Return of Tarzan," promising to be one of the big screen production of the year, near completion. Under the direction and supervision of Harry Revier and George M. Merrick, the company has, according to reports, and no little protesting from players, obtained some startling camera effects for the jungle episodes of the story, now being filmed in California. Gene Pollar, who plays "Tarzan," has had two encounters with lions, supposedly trained, but according to the actor, "trained to be lions," while Armond Cortez was severely injured while film-fighting a big ape.

Four new names have been added to the cast. Karla Schramm plays the leading feminine role, with Arthur Morriston, Jack Leonard and Phil Gostrock.

Incidentally, according to A. L. Burt, publishers of the Tarzan books, they are among the best sellers in fictionland today. Harry Burt, of the firm, is quoted as saying: "We have great difficulty in meeting the insistant demand for the Tarzan stories. Their popularity has never waned. You would be surprised to know the number of inquiries we receive from all sections o fthe country as to when there is to be a further adventure story of this character."

Zellners Are Now Members of Metro Scenario Family

THE Zellners—Arthur and Lois—have moved into offices in the administration building of the Metro studios in Hollywood and are now members of the Metro scenario staff headed by June Mathis. They are picturizing "Fine Feathers" and "An Outsider," having completed the continuity for "Judah" and "Shore Acres."

Although Lois and Arthur Zellner plan their work together, Mrs. Zellner is rounding out the continuity and accepting the credit for pictures featuring Alice Lake, while Mr. Zellner is doing the same with those in which May Allison stars.

Lois Zellner will, therefore, have the screen credit for "Shore Acres," the American rural drama by the late James A. Herne. She is preparing "An Outsider," Miss Lake's next featuring vehicle. This play is by Julie Herne, daughter of James A., and deals with New York smart life.

Arthur Zellner will be credited with the continuity of "Judah." This "miracle girl" play by Henry Arthur Jones, the eminent English playwright, offers Miss Allison the most exacting dramatic role of her career. She will follow it with the characterization of the pretty wife in Eugene Walter's "Fine Feathers." Mr. Zellner is already working on the scenario script for this.

Morning Shows for Children.

Manager John T. Fiddes, of the Holman Theatre, Montreal, Quebec, gave a special children's show each morning during Christmas Week, the feature being the Fox special, "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves." Mr. Fiddes engaged maids to be in attendance at each of these shows so that children could be left at the theatre while parents went shopping. The admission to children was 10 cents.

"Fighting Chance" Shows the Ultra-Fashionable Set

THERE have been two distinct periods in the writing career of Robert W. Chambers, American novelist: his first works dealt either with historical subjects or with fantasies that have seldom been equalled for imaginative power and weird charm; his later books have been largely confined to society life in and about the metropolis.

"The Fighting Chance," which is now being filmed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with Charles Maigne as director and two noted players, Conrad Nagle and Anna Q. Nilsson, in the leading roles, was the first of the series of books which dealt with the ultra-fashionable set which in a sense has carried on the traditions of aristocracy of the old world, such as fox hunting and the like, in the hills of Westchester county and other environs of Manhattan.

The central figures, a man and a girl, both young and handsome, witty and cultured, obsessed by some hereditary peculiarity, offer unparalleled opportunities for screen interpretation and the other figures, the villain in particular, are equally good. Chambers is an adept at character drawing. His people are real, however artificial their environment.

Now Selecting Cast for Fitzmaurice Production

GEORGE FITZMAURICE is now selecting his cast preparatory to beginning his second George Fitzmaurice production for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The title will be "The Man Who Killed," which was also the title of the famous French book and play. The play is by Pierre Frondaie and is based on the novel by Claude Farrere called "L'Homme qui Assassina." This French play was translated into English by Gilbert Cannan and Francis Keyser as "The Right to Kill" and produced with great success at His Majesty's Theatre, London, in 1915.

Pierre Frondaie, who dramatized the French novel also dramatized Pierre Louys' "Aphrodite," the motion picture rights to which were recently bought by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Ouida Bergere is at present working on the continuity of "The Man Who Killed." The story has to do with the embassies in Turkey. Mr. Fitzmaurice has picked out a house of Turkish architecture built on one of the keys off the coast of Florida where he expects to film the exterior scenes. Also some scenes will be taken at Miami, where he will take his company as soon as the cast is complete.

Hampton Adds To List of Successes in Picturizing Emerson Hough Story

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON'S career as a producer of a group of powerful author-supervised pictures from novels that have scored big successes has, in addition, built for him the record of "the producer without a failure." It is not often that a producer makes four such pictures as Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners," Zane Grey's "Desert Gold," Emerson Hough's "The Sagebrusher," now ready for pre-release in the larger cities, and Zane Greys' "Desert of Wheat," now completed but held for later release by the Hodkinson organization because of the record-breaking success of "Desert Gold" in all parts of the United States.

"The Sagebrusher" is from Mr. Hough's most recent novel, still rated by booksellers as one of the literary hits of the year. There is a slight and unintentional element of deception in the title, "The Sagebrusher," prompting a surmise that it is a western picture, whereas but for the name, which is, of course, retained from the very widespread popularity the novel attained, the story might just as easily be laid in Vermont or up-state New York.

Mr. Hough, in building the story and in aiding Mr. Hampton in producing it to the point where he autographs the main title as a sign of his complete satisfaction with it, really wrote a story that is independent of all environment.

Roy Stewart is the Doctor Barnes of both the novel and its picturization of "The Sagebrusher" and Marguerite De La Motte is the beautiful and pathetic Mary Warren. Noah Beery is the Sim Gage of the story. Other well known players in "The Sagebrusher," all having conspicuous roles, are Arthur Morrison, Betty Brice, Gordon Russell, Aggie Herring and Edwin Wallock.

Bacon to Produce Musical Comedy.

Louise Winter's short story, "Princess Virtue," has been dramatized by Lewis Allen Browne, and will be placed in rehearsal, shortly after the New Year by Gerald F. Bacon, prominent producer for both the stage and screen. B. C. Hilliam, composer of "Buddies" and Gitz Rice, who wrote the popular song success, "Dear Old Pal of Mine," are now engaged in writing the music and lyrics in collaboration.

Owen Moore to Appear in Another Wodehouse Story

OWEN MOORE is to be featured in another story by Pelham Grenville Wodehouse. This announcement by Myron Selznick should gladden the admirers of this comedy-drama star.

"Love Among the Chickens" is the title of this new story which Mr. Selznick has purchased from this well-known author. It is a noteworthy fact that the first Owen Moore production under the Selznick banner was from the pen of Mr. Wodehouse. It was "Piccadilly Jim" and it has scored a remarkable success over the entire country.

Owen Moore is the type suited to give a screen version to the Wodehouse stories and in view of the fact that he scored such a success in the first one, it is only logical that this should be repeated in the newer one just purchased.

Production will start in the near future.

Next Viola Dana Picture To Be Directed by Howell

W. A. HOWELL has been engaged by Maxwell Karger, Metro director general, to direct Viola Dana in the Screen Classics, Inc., production of the comedy, "Eliza Comes to Stay." Mr. Howell left the legitimate stage in 1910 to start producing comedies, He originated the Falstaff comedy series, which was issued for three years.

Befor entering the motion picture field, Mr. Howell supported such actors as Richard Mansfield, Henry Irving and Louis James on the stage. Mr. Howell's father, Curtiss Howell, was an actor and producer of note, as was his grandfather.

"Eliza Comes to Stay" is a comedy drama written by H. V. Esmond. Miss Dana will enact "that daring girl, Eliza." In the original production at the Criterion Theatre in London, the part of Eliza was taken by the playwright's wife, Eva Moore.

"Bearcat" Film Going Strong.

The branch managers and sales force of the Republic Distributing Corporation decided that "When Bearcat Went Dry" would do a certain amount of business. Seven weeks after the picture was released it had passed its quota and now everything points to just double the amount of gross rentals the Republic Corporation hoped to receive. The Minneapolis district, which had agreed to do $6,000, has already passed the $15,000 mark. The New York City exchange will exceed their quota by $8,000. This branch will do on "Bearcat" in excess of $25,000.

For and Against As Applied to the Location of the Projection Room

By F. H. Richardson

LAST week we examined into the points in favor of and against the rear - of - the - auditorium - at - the-ceiling-line location arriving at the inevitable conclusion that, while it has unquestioned advantages, still such location automatically compels a more or less distorted picture, heavy waste in light, which means waste in electric energy, and inclines to decidedly inferior results as to sharpness of definition which results in added tendency to eyestrain.

In short, with its admitted advantages along certain lines, that location makes perfect screen results impossible and therefore lessens the power of the screen to sell seats, which is the real measure of efficiency in everything connected with a theatre. If by changing projection room location we sacrifice twenty seats, and so improve screen results that an average of fifty more seats a day are sold, then the sacrifice in fact is a gain.

Other Locations.

Let us now examine into other available locations. First there is the one at the rear of the main auditorium, in favor of which are:

(A) The fact that the lens will be very nearly directly opposite the center of the screen, with no distortion of the picture, which will be in its true proportions with objects therein appearing just as they actually did appear in life.

(B) As a rule the distance of projection will be very nearly ideal, hence there will be no unnecessary waste of light.

Against this location we find several things, as follows:

(A) The room will occupy space which might be devoted to the most expensive seats in the house.

(B) Due to clause A the tendency is to restrict the size of the room and thus seriously impede the work of projection by compelling the projectionist to work in cramped, uncomfortable quarters.

(C) Difficulty of making the room entirely sound proof.

(D) In this location the room would, unless the plans much favored for modern theatre auditoriums be changed, detract from the symmetry and beauty of the rear auditorium crescent.

(E) In many theatres the balcony front hangs so low that, if the light ray cleared the head of a man in standing position, as it must, it would not clear the balcony, and if it could be made to do both these, the projectionist could not see the top of his picture except when seated.

(F) Difficulty of ventilating in such manner that in case of fire all smoke and gases would be carried away.

Front of Balcony Location.

On the whole, while from the standpoint of an undistorted picture and ideal distance of projection the location is the very best there is, still the objections outweigh the advantages, except in the case of some theatres, where, due to the favorable balcony and rear auditorium construction, the objections either are greatly reduced or entirely removed.

In passing let it be noted that when this location is chosen, spacious rewinding, work and motor rooms may be arranged in the basement, immediately beneath the projection room.

The third available location for the projection room is at the front of the balcony. The writer, after a somewhat exhaustive examination into the practicability of this location, is convinced that, with some comparatively slight and entirely practical changes in balcony construction, the balcony front offers the best location of any.

Disadvantages of Location.

The following points are against it

(A) Liability of deflection of balcony under load, which would operate to move the light ray from its proper register on the screen. This, however, could, we are very sure, be easily taken care of in such manner that all up and down movement of the ray would be avoided, and such slight possible side movement as might take place would be entirely invisible if the picture lap over slightly on black. The writer will be glad without charges to supply his idea of a method for overcoming this fault to those interested.

(B) The unsightliness of all plans thus far presented for front-of-balcony location. This, also, we are quite certain could be almost if not entirely overcome. In fact, we are convinced that it is quite possible to locate the projection room in the balcony front and so camouflage it that very close inspection would be necessary by the ordinary observer to detect its presence.

Good Seats Sacrificed.

(C) The necessary sacrifice of high-priced seats. But this, too, may be, we are convinced, confined to the loss of one (the center) loge, or a total of perhaps eight feet wide (maybe a bit less) by whatever the depth of the loge boxes may be. Admitting the objection to this sacrifice, still if by making it we can so improve the screen result that a greater number of the other seats will be sold, then perhaps the apparent sacrifice will be indeed a gain. And surely no one will dispute the proposition that the avoidance of distortion will improve the screen result from the viewpoint of the audience, to say nothing of the gain through saving of electric energy and improvement of definition of the picture by reason of the shorter distance of projection.

(D) The liability of annoyance to the audience by noise emanating from the projection room. This, however, really amounts to nothing at all, because the location offers ample opportunity for sound-proofing, and if the projection ports be reduced to the actual requirement of the picture ray and the observation ports be properly covered with glass, no sound from the room will reach the audience, even though a portion thereof be seated immediately above and but perhaps a foot or two away from its ceiling.

No Smoke or Gas.

(E) Danger from panic caused by smoke in case of fire.

If ample vent pipes be supplied, and properly arranged and fused port shutters be provided, not one particle of smoke or gas will reach the auditorium, even from the worst possible film fire, and there will be plenty of room to provide vent pipes of any required dimensions.

(F) Added cost of construction. This is a valid objection, and one which cannot be overcome. To construct a proper projection room in the balcony front would probably cost considerably more than to construct it in the rear at the ceiling line. But, most emphatically, the added outlay would be more than justified. Fine, upholstered seats cost more than plain wooden ones, but what modern manager would hesitate at the added expenditure they involve? A plain, undecorated interior is very much cheaper than one which is artistically decorated, but who balks at the necessary expenditure?

A high-class feature is many times more costly than a production of inferior merit, but the modern manager fights for the first chance to book the costly feature. Why not, then, expend a few hundreds of dollars in providing a projection so located that the costly feature can be placed on the screen in the best possible way? Sounds like just plain common sense, does it not?

Many Architects at Fault.

In closing let me make the blunt assertion that the failure of architects to understand the requirements of practical projection, or to consult with those who do, has caused the serious hampering of projection in practically every high-class theatre in New York City, making for inferior screen results and the loss of probably 2,000 watts of electric energy a theatre, though the last is admittedly a very rough estimate only. However, taking ten downtown theatres in Manhattan and Brooklyn I venture the assertion that had the projection rooms been properly located, as they might have been, an equal could have been had at a saving of 200,000 watt hours of energy per day, which, incidentally, means quite a goodly number of tons of coal.

Please do not run away with the idea that I am making dogmatic statements, or quoting concrete figures. The loss I have indicated is but a very rough estimate, based, however, on many years' study of projection matters. It may be less or it may be more. But that the loss is present and is a very serious one cannot be successfully disputed; also there can be no manner of question as to the evil effects of distortion, or the effects of excessive distance on sharpness of focus.

The fact that a projection distance calling for the use of an objective of not less than four-inch or more than five-inch equivalent focus is very much better than anything greater or less is beyond question, though it is not always practical to keep within those limits.

Anything less than four-inch equivalent focus involves difficulty in securing perfect sharpness of definition all over the screen, and anything over five-inch involves loss of light when working with high amperage, though up to a certain point this may be partially overcome and with advantage as to sharpness of picture. Beyond that point loss cannot be controlled.

Polish Star Engaged by Selznick Marvels at America's Lavishness

AMERICA'S lavishness and ability to entertain today is even more than a revelation to an actress who is already a star and who is the idol of her own nation. She is Mme. Halina Bruzovna, the Polish star who recently arrived in America after having served as a soldier and nurse in the war. Mme. Bruzovna came to America for two purposes, to win recognition on the American stage and to study the American people and their customs. While studying the English language she is to appear in Selznick productions, and has already completed "The Faded Butterfly," in which she had the leading role. This subject is one of the "Herbert Kaufman Weekly Page" releases, a departure in screen production which was announced last week by Lewis J. Selznick.

According to Mme. Bruzovna there are in America thousands of stars compared to a few in Poland, where she was considered a leading actress of the stage and screen. She held this distinguished position for more than eight years in Poland, and during that time devoted four summer seasons to appearing in motion picture productions with the Sfinc-Warsaw Company.

Artificial Unknown in Poland.

American motion pictures are beyond the comprehension of the average foreign producer, Mme. Bruzovna has stated. There are no large studios in Russia or Poland, and no pictures are made except during the summer season when the light is good. Inclosed studios with artificial lightings are unknown. When interviewed recently she made two interesting statements regarding the future of pictures in Poland. One was that for several years, in her opinion, the production of pictures would be small. This, she said, was due to the fact that there would and could not be any sale for Polish films in Russia or Germany due to the enmity existing. The other was that American films will probably dominate the market in Poland, especially the American dramas.

This Polish star was more than surprised to learn that beauty was one of the principal assets for making a reputation on the screens of America. American audiences demand beauty as well as talent, but in Poland and Russia dramatic talent is considered above all else.

Was Both Soldier and Nurse.

"American women," Mme. Bruzovna said, "are so different and really so wonderful that it is not surprising to find so many beautiful actresses on the stage and screen. America has such a population and vast field from which to draw, and although it is at first startling, it is easy to understand why the American audiences demand both beauty and brains."

She is very much interested in motion pictures, and while in America will make a study of the studio methods and production. While her husband was alive, and as major was senior officer of his regiment, she made a war drama in which this entire regiment took part. After she had served as a soldier and nurse during the war she again took up pictures, but the facilities were few. No motor cars and few capable male actors were to be had.

Prior to the war, Mme. Bruzovna stated, there was a marked interest in Poland and Russia in the production of photoplays, but actual production to a large degree was not started at the time the war commenced. All of the theatres exhibited pictures, but they were not considered money-makers as the American picture theatre is today.

Demand Melodrama.

Exploitation and advertising campaigns are unknown to Polish exhibitors. The theatre lobby contains the pictures of the stars and the newspapers carry announcements of the film which will be shown. Mme. Bruzovna said her pictures were heralded on the front page by the editors of the newspapers. According to a statement she made: "Every chauffeur, policeman, workingman and business man in Poland knows me—the theatre man doesn't have to advertise my picture or my stage play. It was seldom that I was not greeted by a crowd at the station when I was touring the cities of Poland."

The Polish people do not favor comedies, but demand on the screen or the stage melodramatic themes with intensified action. Every scene must have a thrill, and the more dramatic a production is, the better it is received.

Minister Uses Screen in His Social Service Work

HOW a minister and his flock use a motion picture theatre to better social conditions in the home town was told to members of the Saint Andrew's Church Brotherhood, of Buffalo, at a recent meeting by the Rev. Dr. Robert E. Robbins, of Saint Mary's Church, Salamanca, N. Y.

Dr. Robbins discussed the social service problem of the modern community and advocated more recreation properly directed for the young men and women. Dr. Robbins was one of the factors in bringing about better social conditions in Salamanca. With the assistance of members of his congregation he took over a motion picture theatre in that city and put on the best plays available. The house is now paying a good profit. This is a tip for the pastors of other cities, if they want to better the social conditions in their village, he says. The motion picture will do it every time.

"Superman" Warmly Greeted.

Tower Film Corporation announces that its six-reel feature, "The Superman," which is now being released on the state rights market, is being received with great success in the territories where it is shown. Special exploitation is being arranged locally in every territory and the reports from exchangemen and exhibitors show big box office profits.

"The Superman" is now being released in the following territories: Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, North Carolina, South Carolina.

Many Novel Features Embodied in This Beautiful Copenhagen House

THE Palads-Theatre, at Copenhagen, is a theatre with a living, breathing personality. A fine, beautiful building in the very heart of the city, the theatre stands for all that is best in motion pictures and with unfailing fascination draws the crowds daily for the matinee and evening performances as well as for luncheon, tea, dinner and after-the-theatre supper. The theatre is built with imposing lines, part of the lower floor being used as a restaurant and cafe, while the rest is devoted to pictures, a French supper room and a promenade balcony jutting off from the main promenade on the upper floor.

A grand staircase resembling that of the Paris Opera House is one of the features that gives the building a distinguished air seldom found in moving picture theatres. The supporting arches and columns are of superb marble and add to the air of elegance without detracting from the cosy, homelike feeling of the place. The auditorium, which will seat 2,000, is also built in a lofty, simple style, the decorations consisting mainly in delicate handcarvings and handpaintings on the walls. Quaintly and ingeniously hand-wrought gratings cover the windows and make a pleasing decoration.

Tempting Danish Cooking.

The color scheme of the theatre adds to its charm. In the auditorium the tone is a soft, warm wistaria contrasted with old gold, which also appears in the huge, silk-covered lamps that light the theatre. In the restaurant the colorings are harmonious, the soft shades of the ceiling blending into the dainty colored marble paneling and mosaic floors. Numerous potted plants and palms fill the windows and nooks and corners, while cut flowers in silver vases furnish the decorations for the tables. One of the interesting novelties of the dining room is the cleverly-contrived cakes of ice in which bottles of wine, beer and liquor are served at the tables.

cooking is served from the magic hands of Danish chefs, chief among the tempting things being real Danish pastries which are so popular on Broadway. Excellent music, both classical and popular, is played during the open hours, the guests often joining in with the words of the songs the orchestra plays.

The patrons of the theatre-restaurant comprise notables of Copenhagen's literary, art and political circles. The fashionable world as well as the work-a-day folk also attend the pictures and the audiences at the evening performances are usually dressed in evening clothes. Hats and cloaks are required to be checked at the cloak room before the people enter the auditorium. During the entr'acte the audience promenades, takes refreshments and smokes. After the intermission smoking is permitted in the theatre proper.

Go in Search of Ideas.

The managers and owners of the Palads-Theatre are progressive, wide-awake men. Among them is Sophus Madsen, a retired actor, who owns the license and built the theatre, and who now devotes his time to assisting in the management of the place, driving his car and sailing his yacht, which used to be one of the ex-Kaiser's prize winners. John Olsen, the managing director of the theatre, is a keen, young film man to whom the theatre owes much of its success. Mr. Olsen is not satisfied with seeing how things are done in Copenhagen, but wants to learn the best from every source, and as a consequence is always taking tours of investigation to New York, London, Paris, Berlin, Stockholm or any place where there is anything new in the way of theatres or films.

Mr. Olsen recently spent several months in New York. He was accompanied by Mrs. Olsen, who takes a keen interest in the theatre and who helped her husband choose the best American music, the best phonograph and records which would teach the Danish orches-

Another of the directors is Carl Anderson, an able young banker who believes motion pictures are worth the serious consideration of bankers. Director F. Skaarup, a big film producer and one who knows the business from A to Z, has much to do with the selection of the films for the theatre. The managers publish a little weekly program-magazine which keeps the news of the theatre well before its patrons and attracts new ones.

"Auction of Souls" May Be Shown in Art Museum

SELDOM if ever does a motion picture evoke enough comment among the art enthusiasts of a city to warrant an official request from its art authorities to go forward to a film exchange for permanent exhibits of some scenes in the production.

That is what occurred, however, in Constantine, Mich., following the engagement of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, special, "Auction of Souls," which recently played a two-days' engagement in that city. The picture created unusual comment, not only among the regular picture goers of Constantine, but among those with whom art is a hobby. Manager Harry Scott, of the Frist National Michigan Exchange, in Detroit, received a communication from H. J. Meyers, of Constantine, asking if arrangements could not be made to supply the Constantine Art Museum with several permanent exhibits based on several of the most beautiful scenes in the picture.

Although the request is unusual and consequently hard to grant, Mr. Scott is making every endeavor to furnish the people of Constantine with the exhibit. It is likely that oil paintings will be made from some of the scenes depicted in the large lobby displays that are accompanying the show in its tour.

Clothing Shortage on East Side, Thinks Miss Pearson

FOLKS on the lower East Side of New York have a marked love for souvenirs, so Virginia Pearson discovered on a recent personal appearance at Loew's Avenue B Theatre. To such extremes did the souvenir hunters and admirers of Miss Pearson go on this occasion that the police had difficulty in keeping Miss Pearson's wardrobe intact.

Sheldon Lewis, Miss Pearson's leading man and N. T. Grandlund, publicity director of the Loew houses, were in a disheveled condition when they finally succeeded in getting away.

The picture which Miss Pearson accompanied was "Impossible Catharine," made by Virginia Pearson Photoplays and released through Pathe. According to Marcus Loew the crowds at the Avenue B Theatre smashed all records for personal appearances on the East Side.

Miss Pearson and Sheldon Lewis have received several offers to return and be starred in legitimate productions on Broadway. It is likely that they will link up their stage and picture work and a big announcement of their plans is expected soon.

Views of Submarine U-35 Please Officials of Navy

C. B. PRICE CO., INC., who own the rights to "U-35.," showing the exploits of a German submarine, presented by permission of the British admiralty, report a heavy demand for this portrayal of underseas warfare. The pictures of the activities of "U-35" are said to have been taken for the exclusive entertainment of the Kaiser. The films were captured by the British navy and permission for their general release was obtained by the C. B. Price Co.

C. A. Meade, representative of C. B. Price, showed these pictures to Commander Foote of the United States Navy and many other officials at Washington, and received a most enthusiastic endorsement and a request that the Navy Department be furnished with a print for their official records

On Saturday evening, December 20, a special showing of the films was given at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. "U-35" is booked the entire week of January 5 at the Capitol Theatre, New York City; Keith's Theatre, Washington, D. C., and the California Theatre, San Francisco.

Ned Finley Company Goes South to Do Two Reelers

NED FINLEY and a company of fifteen players left last week for South, where they will produce a series of twenty-four two-reel mountain bandit stories for the Ned Finley Productions. They will make Esmeralda, N. C., their headquarters, but will work all through the Blue Ridge district.

Mr. Finley will be remembered as the one who made the famous O'Garry series for Vitagraph. Also he was featured in many of the company's productions. He will direct and will be assisted by John C. O'Loughlin, who will also act the "heavy" roles in the pictures and attend to the business affairs of the organization. Adele Kelly, who has supported Harry Morey, will have the female lead, while Dick Camp, a legitimate player, will enact the hero's role.

Hapsburg Leibe is writing the stories, while George Plimpton, formerly with Vitagraph, will put the scripts into scenario form. The company expects to have their first completed picture back within ten days if the weather conditions are favorable. As yet no plan has been devised for their release.

"Love Without Question," Is First Jans Feature Starring Olive Tell

JANS PICTURES, INC., announce as their first super-feature, "Love Without Question," in which Olive Tell will be starred under the direction of B. A. Rolfe. This is a filmization of C. Wadsworth Camp's popular novel, "The Abandoned Room."

Jans Pictures, Inc., have taken over the Peerless Studios at Fort Lee, New Jersey. The supporting cast has been engaged and the filming of the scenes is going ahead rapidly.

It is said that "Love Without Question" will provide Miss Tell with a particularly fine role, one that is well suited to her talents and which will be sure to please her admirers. The story is a romance containing thrills and suspense. The locale is Long Island and New York City, with many cabaret and handsome estate scenes.

Olive Tell, New Jans Star.
Starring in Jans Pictures' "Love Without Question," a picturization of Camp's novel, "The Abandoned Room."

The leading role presents Miss Tell as a type of innocent young American womanhood whose love is deep and without question. This young girl's love is so strong and all-consuming that it persists against all odds.

Jans Pictures, Inc., plan to give "Love Without Question" an elaborate production.

Dowling Will Cast in National Film.

Joseph J. Dowling, who appeared successfully as the patriarch in "The Miracle Man," is said to have further demonstrated his abilities as a character actor in the National Film Corporation's newest production, "The Kentucky Colonel," in which Mr. Dowling is cast in the title role.

"The Kentucky Colonel" is a screen version of Opie P. Read's book of the same name. It was adapted for motion picture purposes by L. V. Jefferson. William A. Seiter is directing the piece, assisted by "Scotty" Beall. The cast includes Francis McDonald, Elinor Field and Lloyd Bacon.

Beban to Appear in Person with His Next Production

SOL LESSER, who has formed a producing company to star George Beban, the noted delineator of Italian characters in a series of six pictures, announces that Mr. Beban will make a personal tour with his first picture, "One Man In A Million," now in the process of completion in Los Angeles.

In this production Mr. Beban again appears in his popular characterization of the sympathetic Italian.

It is undoubtedly the last mentioned play which has endeared Mr. Beban to the hearts of the public. Noted for his splendid characterization in "The Sign of the Rose," a stage play, also for his work in features, he has attained wide popularity, and there is hardly a big theatre anywhere in the country in which he has not appeared. Taking advantage of this opportunity, Mr. Lesser has decided in favor of a personal tour for Mr. Beban.

He will in all probability be accompanied by his son, George Beban, Jr., (Bob White) who has appeared with Mr. Beban in many of his productions.

Jeffries, Des Moines; for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, to Harry F. Grelle, of Pittsburgh. "Beware of Strangers," for Washington and Oregon, to Greater Features, Inc., 2020 Third avenue, Seattle; "The City of Purple Dreams," "Who Shall Take My Life" and "Beware of Strangers," for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey, to Frank Hatch, 1337 Vine street, Philadelphia.

Well-known serial star in Allgood's 15-episode chapter play, "The Whirlwind."

Zierler Buys "Sacred Flame" for New York and Northern New Jersey

SAM ZIERLER, manager of Commonwealth Pictures, Inc., who owns the rights for "Eyes of Youth" for the State of New York, has purchased the New York State and northern New Jersey rights for the latest Schomer-Ross production, "The Sacred Flame." Mr. Zierler says: "This picture tells one of the most human stories I have ever seen on the screen. It's the kind of a story that the public wants because it rings true. Miss Stevens' acting is superb throughout. She gives just the right shades of emotion and expression in those scenes that are tense and gripping. Her work on the screen has always been an inspiration to me, for she is an actress of consummate skill.

"I purchased the rights to 'The Sacred Flame' for New York State and northern New Jersey for I recognized in this production those elements that make for successful exhibition. The supporting cast is brilliant, including as it does Muriel Ostriche and other well known players."

The story was conceived, written and produced under the personal direction of Abraham S. Schomer, among whose former succeses include such pictures as "Ruling Passions," "Today," "The Yellow Passport," "The Inner Man" and others.

"'The Sacred Flame,'" says Mr. Schomer, "brings to the screen one of the most human stories I have yet produced. Touch the hearts of your people and you have a winner. Its underlying theme is ingratitude and shows how cowardly and how debasing this trait really is.

"It shows up the frailties and weaknesses of human nature when subjected to the severe tests of character. My idea," says Mr. Schomer, "was not to make a preachment, but to point out the beauties of life as arrayed against the lower instincts. 'The Sacred Flame' really portrays how one young man couldn't stand prosperity."

Brilliant Outlook in Serial Field for 1920 Says Official of Allgood

THAT the serial business for 1920 promises to be bigger than ever is the opinion of Allgood Pictures Corporation, judging by the flood of inquiries for their new serial, "The Whirlwind," starring Charles Hutchison. According to Mr. Alperstein, the activity extends not alone throughout the United States, but in foreign territories, inquiries having been received from South America, Australia and other faraway sections.

"Instead of tiring of instalment stories, people seem to be eager for them in an ever increasing scale, particularly that type of serial that carries a genuine story as well as dramatic situations and thrilling stunts, such as 'The Whirlwind.' Exhibitors who have seen the advance episodes are enthusiastic, for in the opening instalments are a series of hazardous stunts performed by the fearless Hutchison that have never been duplicated on the screen," says the Allgood statement.

State rights are being sold faster than any preceding production ever handled by Allgood, with inquiries from people never before known in the state rights market.

No doubt the brilliant success of "The Great Gamble," produced by Allgood, has its bearing on the popularity of the new serial, but "The Whirlwind" outclasses "The Great Gamble" in a dozen different ways, says Mr. Alperstein, enabling us to offer to the world's market a serial of genuine merit.

Popular Short Stories to Be Filmed by National

SCREEN plays adapted from eight of the most popular magazine stories of 1919 will be produced by the National Film Corporation of America during the coming year. "This policy will place the writer of short magazine stories and serial novels in a different position than he has occupied heretofore," stated Mr. Bernstein, production manager, "as the National will produce film adaptations prior to the appearance of the story in book form, if a book is to be published."

Every picture to be made at the National studios on the West Coast during the coming year will be an "America First" product, written by American authors, with American settings, continued Mr. Bernstein, who has pledged the Department of the Interior practical support in its scheme for Americanization through motion pictures.

The first production of the National's "America First" series will be "Mary Minds Her Business," adapted from the serial now running in the Ladies' Home Journal, written by George Weston.

Fine Cast Supports Star in Latest Burston Serial

LOUIS BURSTON, president of Burston Films, Inc., claims that "The Hawk's Trail," his latest serial, starring King Baggot with Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell, is "the first serial de luxe," pointing not only to the lavishness of the production, the high type of the story, the absence of interpolated stunts, the unusual ability and standing of the featured players and star, but also to the notable cast of principals. Nearly every one of the latter has played leads or starred in noteworthy productions. The group includes such well-known and popular people as King Baggot, Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell; Harry Lorraine; George Seigman, seen recently in Griffiths "Heart of the World"; Stanton Heck, well-known heavy; Fred Windemere; Carl Stockdale; Carmen Phillips, former Universal player; Leo White; Art Belasco; Edna Robinson, famous for her interpretation of East Indian roles and dances; and Sylvia Joselyn. While "The Hawk's Trail" is a serial, President Burston is of the opinion that this cast entitled him to announce it as a "feature" of the highest class.

"Sky-Eye" Not a Serial But a Six-Reel Feature

THE Sol Lesser organization wishes to correct the impression that "Sky-Eye" is a serial. It is a feature in six reels that is being offered on the state-right market, and due to its unusual title, coupled with its sensationalism has led many to believe it is a serial. It is said to have enough thrills per foot to make a serial, and combined with a beautiful love story skilfully interwoven, to be the first picture of its kind.

Lieut. Russel J. Hunt as "Sky-Eye," eclipses the stunt of jumping from one plane to another in jumping from a speeding plane to a rushing train. To prove this stunt is not a freak, he rehearsed it several times, before finally getting it perfect.

Splendid advertising accessories have been prepared on this picture, including an elaborate press book of sixteen pages. An artistic assortment of photographs have been used, two pages are devoted to the exploitation of the picture. The newspaper stories deal with the many celebrities of the aerial world in "Sky-Eye," of the many risks taken in the production of the picture, and other unique points. The remainder of the book takes up the reproduction of all the accessories, including lobby photographs, posters, window card, herald, miniature photographs, slides, etc.

Sweden, Too, Has a Mary Who Is a "Movie" Queen

MARY JOHNSON, one of the brightest in the constellation of Swedish Biograph stars, gained her fame in ingenue roles just like "Our Mary."

Like the other Swedish film actresses, she belongs to the legitimate stage where she earned a reputation as a star all over her native land.

Miss Johnson began her cinema career three years ago when she played a few minor roles at Gothenburg. Her first hit was registered in "Puss in Boots," one of the earliest pictures produced by the Scandia Film Company. In "Sir Arne's Treasure," she comes to the fore proving herself the premier feminine star of the Swedish Biograph Company.

Excellent Exhibitors' Aids Offered in Connection with "Hawk's Trail"

FROM Burston Films, Inc., comes the announcement of the completion of publicity and advertising plans for the third Burston serial, "The Hawk's Trail," starring King Baggot, and featuring Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell; directed by W. S. Van Dyke under the personal supervision of Louis Burston. The nature of the story gives King Baggot a protean opportunity, as he is required to play a different character in nearly every episode. This has been used to advantage in designing the twenty-four sheet stock poster, which shows King Baggot "straight" as a heroic figure on the left, while along the lower border are arranged the various characters he assumes.

Special paper based on still photographs have been prepared for the episodes, and these include one-sheets, three-sheets and six-sheets. The variety of costumes and some of the handsome Oriental sets have been made to lend variety.

The Exhibitors' Book is full of helpful suggestions, including a long list of commendatory phrases from trade press reviews. Ready-to-use newspaper electros, publicity stories, and illustrations, player cuts, slides, lobby photos, banners and a page of "stunts" combine to give first aid in "getting them in" to the theatre. For novelty a recurring incident in the picture has been utilized cleverly. As "The Hawk," King Baggot has a way of leaving notice of his many unexpected visits in various disguises by placing in a prominent and not easily overlooked spot a hawk's feather. The constant and unexpected reappearence of the Hawk's "card" strikes terror to the hearts of "Iron" Dugan and his gang, whom the Hawk is hounding. The hawk's feather is being reproduced in a novel cut-out in large quantities. In addition to this, genuine hawk's feathers some eight inches in length are being sent out to state rights buyers as an advertisement.

Several Chinese Actors Appear in "Hawk's Trail"

CONSIDERING the rage for things Oriental, Louis Burston anticipated the movement by several months. In his latest serial, "The Hawk's Trail," in which King Baggot is starred, some of the most notable sets and action take place in an early episode. King Baggot as "The Hawk," a scientific criminologist, learns that Jean Drake, (Grace Desmond), whose interests he is trying to protect, has been lured to the Chinaman's place, and disguising himself as a high-caste Chinese, gains ready admittance, where a battle ensues.

All the Chinese characters in this episode are real Chinese with the exceptions of King Baggot and George Seigman. The full group of Chinese sets include a merchant's shop, a gambling room, the proprietor's living quarters, and a joss house. Oriental shops in both Los Angeles and San Francisco were ransacked for properties, and according to the Chinese members of the cast every detail was "allee light." "The Hawk's Trail" has been released and the state rights are in the hands of the W. H. Productions Company. A block of Southern, Middle Western and Coast states have already been sold, as well as Eastern, Central and Western Canada. This is the third serial from the Burston studios in a little over a year, and Producer Burston is reported working on a fourth.

Ivo Dawson Engaged for "Love Without Question"

IVO DAWSON has been engaged to play an important role in support of Olive Tell in "Love Without Question," which is to be the first of the Jans Pictures, Inc., super-features.

Mr. Dawson recently played a prominent part in the Paramount release, "The Miracle of Love," and is an experienced young player. His engagement of this young man is in line with the Jans idea of selecting carefully the proper sort of types to play various roles in their features. However it is announced that not types alone are considered, for acting ability must be combined so that a well balanced production may be presented.

"Love Without Question" is a picturization of C. Wadsworth Camp's novel, "The Abandoned Room." The scenario is by Violet Taggart Clark.

Filming of Osborne Story Is Completed by MacManus

EDWARD A. MacMANUS has completed "The Gray Brother," a dramatic drama by Thomas Mott Osborne. Sixty-two interior sets were found necessary to portray the romance of the underworld, besides street scenes, east side tenement interiors, unknown corners where crime is hatched, and frequented by-ways along the waterfronts of Manhattan, besides many scenes taken in and out of prisons.

Thirty-five hundred people appear in the scenes besides sixty odd screen players all of whom have prominent "bits" in the seven reels. Sidney Olcott directed the production, which is booked for release this week. It is expected that Mr. MacManus will start on another production right away. "The Gray Brother" is his second production of the year, "The Lost Battalion" being the first.

Many Road Shows to Offer "House Without Children"

PLANS are under way to launch a number of road shows of "The House Without Children" throughout the United States and Canada.

A syndicate is being formed to take over the exhibition rights in a group of states and exploit it with singers, musical director, advance agents and managers. Remarkable success has been achieved by "The House Without Children" in the theatres where it has been presented as a regular percentage attraction that it was decided to take advantage of the opportunity to book on percentage with theatre owners.

Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc., through which "The House Without Children" is being sold on the state right plan, is said to have formulated the plan for the wide exploitation.

Who has just finished "A Modern Salome," written and directed by Leonce Perret.

Ralph Ince.

Ralph Ince Will Direct Myron Selznick Features

A SERIES of Ralph Ince special productions is announced from the office of the Selznick Enterprises by Myron Selznick, who at the same time stated that it was intended to place these specials among the feature productions of the year. Mr. Ince, pioneer motion picture director, has long been recognized as one of the creative geniuses of the screen.

He has just finished two Selznick productions, Eugene O'Brien in "His Wife's Money" and Olive Thomas in "Out Yonder." Myron Selznick, after seeing them, decided that Ince should be given special casts and producing facilities, and the best stories that could be purchased for his use.

For a long time a prominent figure on the coast, Mr. Ince was one of the first directors to join the Selznick eastern studios. The story for his next picture is now being selected.

Pictograph Uses Colors.

Colored photography will be introduced for the first time in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph in issue No. 7021, to be distributed through the Goldwyn exchanges on January 18. A considerable part of the leading subject, "Behind the Signs on Broadway," is done in colors, the remainder being in black and white and introducing Bray's celebrated animated drawings to explain the technical points of the subject. Other numbers in this issue are "Pup Portraits" and one of the Bray-International Krazy Kat cartoons, entitled "Krazy Kat in the Great Cheese Robbery."

Another Wodehouse Story for Moore.

Owen Moore is to be featured in another story by Pelham Grenville Wodehouse. This announcement is made by Myron Selznick.

"Love Among the Chickens" is the title. The first Owen Moore production under the Selznick banner, "Piccadilly Jim," was from the pen of Mr. Wodehouse. Production will soon start on "Love Among the Chickens."

Robertson-Cole's First New Year Release Is "The Third Generation"

AS its initial release for 1920, the second year of its existence, Robertson-Cole announces "The Third Generation," a "Superior" production from the Brentwood studios. This picture has been selected from among many to start off the new year. It is said that the film is one of the best ever released under the Robertson-Cole banner.

"The Third Generation" was written and directed by Henry Kolker, a man whose broad knowledge of pictures includes not only a general studio experience but a foundation of twenty years on the stage, incluing fifteen years when he supported great stars and was himself starred on Broadway. Mr. Kolker built his latest success around the rise, fall and regeneration of one of the famous "Knickerbocker Families."

Blythe and Hamilton in Leads.

The leading feminine role is taken by Betty Blythe, who was seen on Broadway before she began her screen career in such pictures as "Over the Top," "The Business of Life" and "The Green God." The male lead is taken by Mahlon Hamilton, who had a Broadway stage career before he went into pictures for Pathe, Artcraft and others. The second feminine part in the picture is played by Betty Brice, who is remembered for her good work with Lubin.

Another player is Jack Pratt, who is not only an actor but a director, having done excellent work in the filming of Richard Harding Davis's "Soldiers of Fortune." He has the part of the "heavy," a New York banker of more ingenuity than principle. The other players are Joseph Swickard, Edward Cecil, Herbert Jones, Fred Kelsey, Arthur Redden and Peggy Cartright, who has a child's part.

Harry Carey's "Marked Men" Possesses Many New Thrills

THEATREGOERS who have seen Harry Carey on the screen for the past few years, always expect a few new thrills in every Universal production in which he appears. They will get more than full measure of thrilling incidents in his latest picture, "Marked Men."

This picture was written around the Saturday Evening Post Story, "The Three Godfathers," from the pen of Peter B. Kyne. In it, Harry Carey appears as an outlaw who achieves freedom and happiness through a 3-day-old baby. He is supported by an excellent cast including Winifred Westover, J. Farrell McDonald, Joe Harris, Ted Brook and Charles LeMoyne. Some beautiful night photography adds to the effectiveness of the big picture. The streets of the mining town, the exterior of the danec hall, the outer walls of the grim prison and the moonlit desert offer excellent samples of the cameraman's art.

Despite the fact that this masterpiece has developed into one of Universal's best pictures of the year, it will not be taken off the regular program, but will remain one of the Universal "Big Money Twelve." Steps are being taken to give this picture exceptional exploitation. Universal will back the exhibitor to the limit in putting over what will probably be one of the biggest moneymakers of the season.

Director Lloyd Arraigns Exhibitors Who Cut Films

UNDER the direction of Frank Lloyd, Pauline Frederick will begin work this week on her next Goldwyn picture, "Roads of Destiny," based on the stage success written by Channing Pollock from the famous story by O. Henry. On the stage A. H. Woods presented Marjorie Rambeau in "Roads of Destiny." For the screen drama, Goldwyn has surrounded Miss Frederick with an exceptional cast which includes John Bowers, Richard Tucker, Grace Darmond, Hardee Kirkland, Maude George and Willard Louis.

Frank Lloyd has just completed the direction of "The Woman in Room 13," in which Miss Frederick also is the star. During the past week Mr. Lloyd has been supervising the cutting of the picture.

While on the subject of cutting, Frank Lloyd made some remarks about exhibitors who cut down film plays to meet time requirements. After the producer, director and film editor have labored over a photoplay with great care, it is no joy to hear that theatre managers in the smaller towns are using the shears to ruin their best effects, he says.

Earle Williams Begins Work.

Earle Williams has begun work on "Capt. Swift," Vitagraph's screen version of the play of English society life by C. Hadden Chambers, which was a dramatic success more than a score of years ago. The cast, with one or two exceptions, has been completed and includes Alice Calhoun, Florence Dixon, Adelaide Prince, Barney Baxter, Arthur Barry and James O'Neill. Tom Terriss is directing. Lucien Hubbard wrote the scenario.

"The Fortune Hunter," a screen version of Winchell Smith's succesful stage play, in which Mr. Williams also played the title role, will be released before "Capt. Swift." It was completed two weeks ago, and will be shown in February.

Morey Recovers from Illness.

Harry T. Morey is back at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio after a ten days' struggle with conjunctivitis, and is busy on his newest feature, "Detective Jim." Working under the direction of Edwin Hollywood, Mr. Morey is making rapid progress and has caught up to his schedule. Before beginning "Detective Jim," Mr. Morey lost some two weeks waiting in the Adirondack mountains for the weather to clear so that he might begin on "The Mightier Strength," which was finally abandoned until next summer.

Mr. Morey has a feature awaiting release, "The Birth of a Soul," which will be shown late in January. Jean Paige played opposite Mr. Morey.

Mix and Farnum Pictures Are Among Six Scheduled by Fox for January

FOR the first month of the new year, William Fox has scheduled for released six selected productions which are claimed by Fox Film Corporation to be the greatest six pictures ever released by one producing firm in one month since the birth of the industry. Among these are the first Fox production starring the winsome Shirley Mason, the swiftest Western story ever filmed with Tom Mix as its star, and a wonderfully appealing story with William Farnum as its central figure.

The name of Miss Mason's first vehicle for Mr. Fox is "Her Elephant Man." It is a screen adaptation of the fascinating story by Pearl Doles Bell. It will be exploited along brand new lines by the producer with a large quantity of the most attractive paper ever furnished to the exhibitor. The press sheet on this picture, it is promised, will set a new mark for this branch of service and will be found the most complete of its kind ever offered. The picture was directed by Scott Dunlap from Isabelle Johnson's scenario, and in it Miss Mason is supported by an excellent cast, including Albert Roscoe, Henry J. Hebert, Ardito Mellonino and Harry Todd.

Another of the January releases which has made a powerful impression upon those who have seen it at the Fox offices is the first of the Tom Mix 1920 series. "The Daredevil" is its title. A notable feature of "The Daredevil" is that the authorship and directorship are credited to Mix, who thus holds down the three important posts of author, star and director.

Miss Brockwell In Drama.

Then comes a dramatic offering entitled "Flames of the Flesh," with the inimitable Gladys Brockwell in the stellar role. This is a typical Brockwell picture which gives the talented star opportunity to display the many startling gowns in a character that puts to the severest tests her ability and charm as an actress. Miss Brockwell is directed by Edward J. LeSaint and supported by William Scott, Ben Deely, Louis Fitzroy, Harry Spingler, Mme. Rosita Marstini, Josephine Crowell and Nigel DeBrullier.

The Madelaine Traverse picture for January is the most exacting vehicle the "empress of stormy emotion" has had. "What Would You Do?" is the title, and in it the producer confronts the picture-going world with one of the most trying situations imaginable. The star is supported by George McDaniel, Frank Elliott, Charles K. French, Lenore Lynard, Bud Geary, Edwin B. Tilton and Cornelia Callahan. Denison Clift wrote the original story and the scenario especially for Miss Traverse.

New Type Farnum Film.

"Heart Strings" is the title of the William Farnum production for January. Although very different in theme from previous successes of his, this story is equally well suited to his virile personality. This Farnum vehicle also is being widely exploited by the Fox organization as the most appealingly sympathetic role ever handled by this magnetic actor. J. Gordon Edwards again is director. In the cast are Gladys Coburn, Betty Hilburn, Paul Cazeneuve, Robert Cain, Rowland G. Edwards and Kate Blancke.

The sixth of the films listed for January is "The Shark," a story of the sea and seaports with the athletic George Walsh in the title role, supported by a brilliant cast and directed by Dell Henderson, a graduate of the Griffith school. Supporting Mr. Walsh are Mary Hall, Robert Broderick, William G. Nelly, Henry Pemberton and James Mack.

Clemenceau's Drama.

With the six productions listed for January there is also on schedule from the Fox studios a super-drama based on the only novel ever written by Georges Clemenceau, Premier of France. This production will be released early in the year, and will be carried over the top on one of the broadest campaigns ever inaugurated by a film producer.

The Fox Sunshine Comedy contributions to the January schedule consists of two good laughing shows, "Chicken a La Cabaret" and "Hungry Lions and Tender Hearts." Bud Fisher's Animated Cartoons, co-starring "Mutt and Jeff," bring up the rear of the list four abreast.

First Herbert Kaufman Weekly Is Now Finished

THE first picture in the Herbert Kaufman Weekly, which will be released by Select, is finished and will be ready for exhibitors soon. It is entitled "Little Red Riding Hood" and is the story of a young girl who is lost through ignorance. It is one of the Herbert Kaufman editorials being released by Selznick Pictures. Present plans call for the release of about twelve of these subjects.

The featured player is Betty Hilburn, the sixteen year girl who appeared in "A Girl of the Sea," the Williamsons' sub-sea picture. Burton George is directing.

Supporting Miss Hilburn is a competent cast which includes Albert Mackett, Margaret Seddon, who succeeded Emma Dunn in "Mother"; Philip Van Loan, Marvin Kann, and Emil La Croix. Mr. Van Loan appears for an instant at the end of the story as Christ.

The scenarios for the Kaufman Weekly are being written by Leighton Osmun, who is responsible for "The Fortune Teller," in which Marjorie Rambeau starred.

"Bucking the Tiger" to Be Filmed Immediately

ACTION is the slogan of the Lewis J. Selznick enterprises and it was never better exemplified than in the fact that while "Bucking the Tiger," Lewis J. Selznick's first offering to the speaking stage, was in rehearsal, Myron Selznick was making preparations to have the story filmed for the screen. This is unusual as screen producers ordinarily wait to see whether a play is a success before considering it for their stars.

It is expected that members of the present stage cast will appear in the screen version, and Owen Moore will probably be seen in the leading role. The play is from the novel by Achmud Abdullah, and was adapted by May Tully.

Realart Minter Film Opens Monster Cincinnati Palace

THE Palace Theatre, Cincinnati's new million-dollar amusement house, opened its doors to the public last week with the presentation of Realart's "Anne of Green Gables."

Following the showing of the Mary Miles Minter picture, Manager Al. Walle announced that all available Realart star productions will be shown at the Palace, as conforming to the high standard advertised by the new theatre.

Combining vaudeville and motion pictures, the Palace Theatre is aiming to fulfill its slogan: "A one hundred per cent. perfect institution."

Realart pictures are being extensively advertised upon the ocacsion of their introduction to Cincinnati, six-sheet chrome posters being scattered throughout the city and in Kentucky towns across the river from which considerable theatre patronage is drawn.

The Palace Theatre, which has a capacity of 2,800, is one of the most beautiful and distinctive photoplay houses in the Middle West. The foyer is decorated for artistic effect, rather than for ornateness, and is a thoroughly modern institution in architecture and quality of entertainment offered.

The opening of the new Cincinnati amusement palace was the occasion of a gala celebration by friends of General Manager L. Lisbon. In addition to the Palace, Mr. Lisbon owns four large downtown theatres in Cincinnati, and a series of theatres in leading cities of Ohio Valley States. Scores of beautiful floral offerings sent by friends in Cleveland, New York, Chicago and neighboring towns of the Ohio Valley States were displayed in the foyer and rest rooms.

Morris Kohn Succeeds Arthur Kane As President of Realart Pictures

AN important announcement has just been made by the appointment of Morris Kohn to be president of Realart Pictures Corporation, succeeding Arthur S. Kane, who resigned about two weeks ago. Mr. Kohn has been treasurer of Realart since the organization of that lively young company last June. In the interim since Mr. Kane's resignation, Mr. Kohn has devoted all his time and attention to Realart, in co-operation with General Manager John S. Woody, and the company's affairs have moved along without a hitch.

"There will be no change in the general policies of Realart," said Mr. Kohn. "As I have stated several times lately, our determination is to make pictures of unusual excellence from successful book or play titles. The releases already made offer a fair indication of the sort of pictures I have in mind. No effort or expense will be spared in giving our young stars adequate mediums for their varied talents.

"The Mayflower specials already released by our organization are also indicative of the high standard we have set and there are announcements of others to follow.

Long in the Business.

"It is well known that I have had an intimate connection with Realart's policies since the company was started. Along with every other member of its lively, working staff, I have the good of the organization very much at heart. To this end there is bound to be the closest sort of co-operation from the highest official to the humblest office boy."

Morris Kohn is no novice in the motion picture business. Among those who know—who have not been misled by his almost excessive modesty—he is credited as being one of the most experienced and best posted men in the industry. His entry into motion pictures dates from 1904, when he organized the Automatic Vaudeville Company and built the first motion picture theatre of consequence in New York City. This was the Unique Theatre, opposite Tammany Hall on Fourteenth street. The Automatic Vaudeville Company is still doing a big business and Mr. Kohn is still its president. He later developed a chain of motion picture theatres which included three houses in Boston and extended as far west as Kansas City. Still later, Mr. Kohn joined forces with Marcus Loew.

Fought With Independents.

Along in 1907, in the strenuous period when every producing company had to line up for official classification, Mr. Kohn was found fighting in the lists of the independents. His efforts, as much as any other single factor, invoked the fear of the Sherman anti-trust law and brought the old General Film Company to a sharp accounting.

Mr. Kohn was the firm friend and adviser of Arthur Searles Kane, who was later to head Realart in the post now occupied by Mr. Kohn. In 1917 Mr. Kohn went to Select as financial representative and Mr. Kane went along as general manager. The transformation of Select into one of the strong, efficient organizations of the industry is contemporaneous history and Mr. Kane was perhaps most generous of all in testifying to the clear vision, the sanity and the wise counsel of Morris Kohn.

All these qualities Mr. Kohn has brought to Realart. Officials of the company declare that they have played a great part in the rapid development of this youngest of all giants in the field today.

Holmes Finds Lofty Perch.

To "shoot" one of the most charming scenes in "Nothing but the Truth," Taylor Holmes's initial independent production with his own company, the producer-star led his director and cameraman up a rickety ladder and located them on the steep roof of a pergola. The scene showed a lawn party in progress and was taken on the magnificent Delmar estate at Glen Cove, Long Island.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Ralph Rufner Adopts a Parrot to Get Them Looking for His Ads

RALPH RUFFNER has adopted a parrot as an assistant press agent at the Rialto, San Francisco. He does not use it to repeat the press book stuff, but he runs in the bird when he gets a chance. You can see it perched on Fairbanks' shoulder in the right hand reproduction. Just in passing, Ruff remarks that if brevity is the soul of wit these two examples must knock them off their seats.

Two Ruffner Displays in Which He Trusts to the Lack of Talk to Sell.

In a more serious vein he explains that he tries now and then to get a display over without a lot of selling talk, trusting to the novelty. Ruff was raised on pages and half pages and it is something new to be handicapped by high priced space, but he is fighting all the harder to make this space work and tries all sorts of schemes to dominate the page. His spaces are about as large as any house takes, and it is a matter of prominence and not merely of space, so he tries to make unique use of the space and either win with their oddity, or through pictorial value. The cut shows good examples of both and we think that the Fairbanks announcement is worth studying. All you have to do with Fairbanks is to tell that he is there and what his offering is. This accomplishes that, and does not try for any more.

Two Displays Which Are the Same Save for the Parrot's Talk.

The next cut shows the same display but with different phrases for the parrot. They were run election week and the "Hey! Vote for me" was run on Monday. Election day proved to be rainy and the "Tho' the day was wet, We'll getcha yet" was run to get a laugh. The timeliness of the phrase is its excuse.

Sometimes just a line like this will bring a reader to the space daily, and if he reads what the parrot says, he cannot well help seeing more of the stuff. Ruff made a clean-up for "Wives of Men" with a playup of a single situation. The idea was run daily in the newspaper space, was worked the week before in the screen advertising in a series of 20 slides, and played up in the lobby. The paragraph ran:

> Her husband had gone to catch the midnight train. She rushed to the telephone and called up another man. * * * The lights were low. He entered and she ran to him and threw her arms about him, kissing him passionately. They clinched! Smothered smacks echoed up and down the upholstered walls, but they were not kisses, they were smacks of purple embarrassment, for the man in the dark in the arms of this beautiful woman was———
> AH! BUT THAT WOULD BE TELLING,
> SO YOU'LL JUST HAVE TO COME AND SEE

It held the picture over for a second week, which is a proper test. There were many ways in which this production could have been advertised, but Ruff studied the play from all angles and decided that this situation was the best to play up—and then he went the limit. Ruff says that in the small spaces the San Francisco prices permit, he feels like a sheep herder trying to handle his sheep in a telephone booth, but he is getting away with the stunt as cleverly as he ever did with the larger spaces. After all size is relative and you can sell as well with a ten inch space as with a page, if no one else is using a page regularly. And you have to work more intensively to make the small space count.

Five-Column Strip Used for Chaplin Overshadows the Five-Reel Features

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN took a five column strip for his Sunday display for Chaplin in his latest comedy, dropping three inches. This gives a sightly display, much larger than a double seven and a half, yet costing no more. It could not be done with block letters, but Mr.

A Five Three's from Harold B. Franklin.

Franklin long since discovered that it cost less to use a neat light line than heavy black letters, and that he got the same effect. It is remarkable that so few other managers have followed this valuable lead, for Mr. Franklin can "fade" everything else on the dramatic page and does not even have to fight the heavy type, while his saving on space more than pays the cost of the drawing. It will be noted that Mr. Franklin, like Dr. Clemmer, uses a jazz band for the comedy in addition to his symphony orchestra. The idea seems to be spreading.

"My Chum" Tickets Newest Form of Two on One Admission Certificate

SOME years ago there was quite a run on the tickets which admitted two persons for the price of one. Apparently the idea was dropped until revived in a slightly new form by H. A. Chenoweth, now of the Owl Theatre,

These worked for others, why not for you?

Lowell, Mass., but better known to the readers of this department through his activities in Boston and Westfield. Mr. Chenoweth calls his ticket the "My chum's ticket" because of a coupon which admits a second child on the payment of the one cent war tax, the main ticket being good for one admission for a dime and the one cent war tax. The tickets are good any day except Sunday or holidays within the limit of the dating, but only at the matinees, and a special bid is made for the kiddies on Saturdays.

Another good idea was the sending of passes to all person named Regan on the occasion of the showing of "Mary Regan." We show one of Mr. Chenoweth's advertisements, a four sixes. He is too experienced an exhibitor to waste good lines on drawn designs. He knows that type will be more easily read, and while he generally employs a drawing to get attention, the essential lines are all in type, mortised in. It will be noted that he even notched this cut to get in an additional line. Mr. Chenoweth has been out of the department for a long time. We hope that he has mended his ways. He used to be a regular caller.

Grauman Advertisements Work for Legibility and Neat Effects

they use type for announcement and the brush for attraction. These are not Sunday showings, but Monday advertisements, which fill four full columns, one above the other, the new house rising to the top. The line in the Rialto display, "the biggest message to all men and women since 'The Miracle Man'" is scarcely happy, since that latter picture was so recently released, but apart from this the copy is as well written as displayed.

work, but this lobby picture will benefit a greater number of exhibitors, who depend largely upon their lobby displays. It is striking and effective and if properly cared for can be used more than once. This does not decry the poster, which is useful for all pictures and essential to some, but it does mark the need for good lobby work as well, something a little different from the usual 11x22.

How One Theatre Advertised "Six Feet Four."

The Liberty Theatre, Seattle, in advertising American's "Six Feet, Four," employed 38 24-sheets, 1,000 special window cards, 25 6-sheets, 18 3-sheets and 80 ones. This is a pretty heavy list, but not much more than they usually employ, for the Liberty was one of the first houses to use plenty of posted matter and about the first regularly to print up their own window cards.

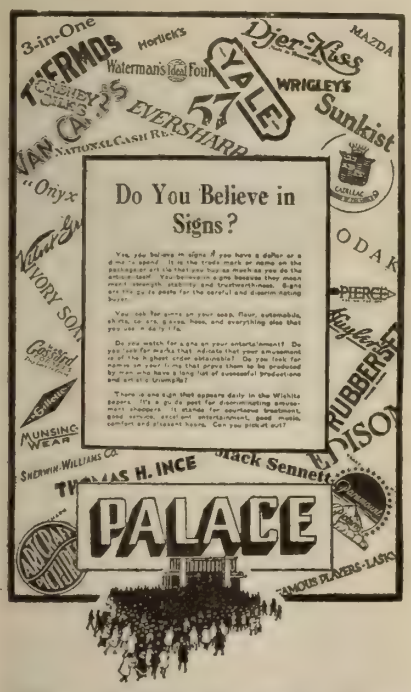
Here's Something New from Stanley Chambers

Stanley Chambers, of the Palace, Wichita, Kans., sends in something really new, though we think that it may have been suggested by Ruffner's "Better Times" display. It is a three tens with the text set in six point.



A Novel Three Tens by Stanley Chambers, of the Palace, Wichita.

The argument runs:

Yes, you believe in signs if you have a dollar or a dime to spend. It is the trade mark or the name on the package or article that you buy as much as you do the article itself. You believe in signs because they mean merit, strength, stability and trustworthiness. Signs are the guide posts for the careful and discriminating buyer.

You look for signs on your soap, flour, automobile, shirts, collars, gloves, hose and everything else that you use in daily life.

Do you watch for signs on your entertainment? Do you look for marks that indicate that your amusement is of the highest order obtainable? Do you look for names on your films that prove them to be produced by men who have a long list of successful productions and artistic triumphs?

There is one sign that appears daily in the Wichita papers. It is a guide post for discriminating amusement shoppers. It stands for courteous treatment, excellent entertainment, good music, comfort and pleasant hours. Can you pick it out?

Mr. Chambers knows that it pays him to advertise the Palace just as much as it pays Paramount to advertise its trademarks. He is doing in a local way what Paramount and others are doing in a national campaign. And note that he does not hook his house up to Paramount. He hooks Paramount up with his house, which is something different and better. In its planning and argument we think this an unusual display. We think it can be copied everywhere. If you cannot afford a special cut you can at least afford to advertise with type along these lines, and probably you can borrow some trademark cuts from the publisher. The combination is the most effective form, but the essence of the entire idea is advertising your house, and giving to your signature some prestige apart from the films. Too many exhibitors spend practically all of their money in advertising current attractions, which change from day to day or from week to week. Mr. Chambers knows that it pays to establish the Palace tradition, and he has gone about it with singular skill.

It Does Not Pay to Try to Fool Your Patrons

Here is an excellent example of how not to do a thing, taken from the Baltimore Sun. It does not actually announce "Male and Female," but it creates the suggestion that the Paramount picture is to be shown and the text below could apply to that picture, perhaps better than the picture it announces, though it is foolish to announce that any picture cost two million dollars.

An Advertisement Which Will Hurt a Theatre.

The entire advertisement is in poor taste and the effort to ride on the advertising for "Male and Female," which was playing at another house at the same time, is worse than that. It is not calculated to make business and it is very apt to hurt the house in the mind of the average patron. It is not a clever stunt. It is quite the reverse and we do not believe that advertising of this sort is countenanced by the Nixon general management.

Comedies Are Coming Into Their Own Rights

For years this department has been urging that short lengths and comedies be played up as part of the show and not merely something to be ashamed of. Now it would seem that the comedies are coming into their own at last and lately the Portola, San Francisco, played up a Mack Sennett comedy above the Castle feature, and made good with it. And note that it is advertised as a "two feature" program, which is a more sensible combination than using two five-part stories.

There never has been a time when some of the two-part comedies would not have cleaned up better than the feature, no matter what the feature was, and we are glad to see that at last the exhibitors are beginning to practise what we have preached for so long. There never has been preserved a more absurd tradition than that which ordained that a feature could not consist of less than five reels. It is satisfaction and not length which determines merit, and for years the public has wanted comedy.

Editorial Appeal Kept Farrar's Theatre Open

During the recent coal shortage Steve Farrar was threatened with a shutdown, but he had been through the same thing beore and as soon as it became evident that drastic action might be taken, he began to work the wires. Almost daily he persuaded the editor to run some article on the value of the motion picture in conserving coal, and as a result he kept open when towns all around him were shutting down all places of congregation. Steve's argument was very simple. He merely pointed out that when the family went to the theatre, they banked the fire and did not find it worth while to start it up again on their return home, and that the early banking on account of this theatre going saved infinitely more coal than the house consumed. The point

Don't play a lone hand, sit in with the rest was well taken and the houses he controls in Harrisburg and Eldorado, Ill., were continued when others nearby were closed up. Make a note of the scheme now and when the next coal shortage comes, and it is probable that they will come, be ready with your missionary work. Carry the argument into your advertising, and get the editor to back you up.

"The World Aflame" Is Still a Vital Film

In "The World Aflame" Pathe has a picture which should run long after the usual period, for it deals with a vital question which will remain the most important question of the hour for some time to come. Most of the cities have played it to a standstill, but the smaller towns are still using it and probably will continue to do so until the labor question is settled.

Much of the success of the presentation depends upon its manner of handling. The two spaces shown, which are from the Orpheus, Eureka, California. Neither quite gets the right appeal, but the lower of the two spaces is better than above, because it shows more distinctly that it offers a solution of the problem instead of merely exhibiting the situation.

We think that the line "Indorsed by all the Labor Unions" is sufficiently valuable to be made an essential in every display. "Indorsed by Labor, approved by intelligent Capital" would be even better, for the essence of the appeal is that this play offers both the viewpoint of the laborer and of the more intelligent among the employers. For this reason the "Solves the profit-sharing problem" of this lower space is worth much more than the "Get together in harmony and brotherhood" of the smaller announcement.

Publicity Gave Two-Week Run

Using unusual publicity brought the H. C. Moir Amusement Co., of Chicago, a fourteen-day run for "Should a Husband Forgive." The company got the picture first run and ran from 30 to 50 lines in all of the Chicago papers, including some of the locality papers.

As a result the crowded week at the Boston Theatre was followed by a second big week at the Alcazar, just around the corner, and the second week was better than the first because now the word-of-mouth advertising was supplementing the paid displays. With an attraction that will make good the long run pays best in the personal recommendation, but there must be newspaper work to back it up.

—P. T. A.—

Largest Spaces Do Not Always Mean Best Ads

The best advertisement does not always take the largest space. Sometimes a full page display will be eighty per cent waste and a modest display will work like a willing horse. Here is a three six and a halfs from the Strand, Cincinnati which comes under the latter class.

A Well Planned Small Space.

Not much is said, but it gets over. The line "A tale that opens the closed portals of married life" is depended upon to back up the attraction of the cut and title. This is carried out in the line above, "and there they met, the husband who saw too late and the man who won what was not his," and in the lower, "Eric Stroheim, genius of the drama, portrays the man who feasts upon the sweets that busy husbands fail to appreciate. Bring your husband to see."

That last sentence is good enough to get a display line to itself, but otherwise the advertisement is about as well laid out as could be asked. It is simple, but it sells, and that largely because of its simplicity. At that we think we would have notched the lower left hand corner of the cut to let in the other features.

How Crandall's Theatre Changed Display Styles

Harry M. Crandall, who owns eight theatres in the national capital, has been using a three full columns for the displays for his three leading houses, arguing that no make-up man could bury a three fulls. The scheme worked, but Washington was one of the first to feel the white paper pinch and it was hinted that they had better plan to cut down space before Congressional action made this necessary.

Nelson Bell, the advertising manager, got busy. He did not want the usual characteristic border and he did want something to make a distinctive and striking display for the Metropolitan in about three nines. The cut shows the first two displays. That on the right, for "Sealed Hearts," is the first experiment, and the heart outline was looked to to hold the space up. Hand lettering holds down some of the effect, for hand lattering is seldom as effective as type worked into the line cut, but the lettering is plain and not too small. The second effort is a decided improvement.

The landscape forms its own border and the drawn figure was provided with a face from one of the interior stills, for none of the stills supplied gave the star in an outdoor dress. Both of these experiments are good, but we think that a smashing house signature, plus a cut attractor and some big type would solve the problem even better. Hand lettering is "different," but it is different the wrong side of "right." It is seldom that hand lettering will work as hard as a good, strong type display.

Bright Lights Used by Florida Man Puts Theatre on the Map and Brings Prosperity to District

DOING on a small scale what some cities have done for dead territory gave a fresh impetus to S. A. Lynch's Prince Theatre, Tampa. Mr. Lynch added this house to his string in September, and J. F. McLaughlin was installed as resident manager. In relating his experiences in the Enterprise Square Dealer, the Lynch house organ, conducted by Lem Stewart, formerly publicity manager for the Triangle, Mr. McLoughlin tells how he ran a bright lights' campaign.

His first move to see what was wrong with the house which he could correct. He found, to begin with, a poor location, between the Spanish and white settlements. The house was situated at a bend in the street, where it had the advantage of prominence, but its front consisted of the colored lights which so often are regarded as decorative. The first thing Mr. McLoughlin did was to wash the color from the globes. He knew that white light, and plenty of it, was the best possible adveritsement. Colored lights might be pretty, but they were not assertive. He got all the color off the globes and then proceeded to install more lights.

Call on the Stores to Help.

That was good for a starter, but the district itself was dark. It looked dead and deserted. When the neighborhood storekeepers went home they turned off the lights in their shops. They argued that there was no use in wasting current when the store was not open. The theatre now stood out well, but it looked like a lighthouse in a deserted wholesale district.

Probably Mr. McLoughlin never heard of the campaign in Newark to get the people across Market street, but he had the same idea. He got after the tradesmen and pointed out that they were not getting the advertising they could obtain from the crowds. He urged them to clean their windows, dress them attractively and then leave the lights on until ten o'clock. He was bringing people down to where they could see the display windows. All the stores had to do was to supply the lights.

It was simple logic and all but two of the twenty concerns saw the point. They noticed that the street was more crowded. They noticed that after the first house was in many persons stood around waiting for the second show. They had to do something—so they looked into the store windows.

Brought the Crowds.

The street lost its dead appearance, and the lights brought more patrons. The crowds grew as the lights went on. A lighted section will draw people after dark as surely as will a candle attract moths. It looked lively down at that hitherto dead end of the street, so people went down to see and made it lively.

But that was not enough. Mr. McLoughlin circulated a petition asking that all parades be routed past the block. Previously the parades were turned two blocks the wrong side of the theatre. Now they come past the house, and the results show, not alone in business for the theatre, but for the merchants, and the merchants, realizing this, are, every one of them, staunch press agents for the house.

Started a Soft Stuff Bar.

Then Mr. McLoughlin found that there was no place where waiting patrons could get a soda. The druggist next door was not interested and could not be interested. Two doors away there was another man in a more receptive frame of mind. Now this other man draws down a tidy profit from the sale of soft stuff, and the theatre profits in that the women patrons have a place where they can sit and wait.

Mr. McLoughlin was merely working to build business for the house. If he had to reconstruct the entire neighborhood to make that business better, he was willing to do so. He found it necessary, and so he sailed in. Everyone on his block was profited, but the theatre has gained the most. Now it is in the centre of a live section and not in a dead end. It draws the town to his end of the street, and the merchants all swear by the house.

There are hundreds of other houses similarly located. If yours is one of these, get busy. Be a one-man business association and jazz things up.

Black Cats Bring Fortune to Those Who Play "Jinx"

BLACK cats are supposed to typify good fortune and they certainly brought luck to those who used them to advertise Mabel Normand in "Jinx." The stunt started in Omaha, where the Moon Theatre got the News to offer a free ticket to every youngster who brought a black cat to the newspaper office. It was no time at all before the entire town—and especially the owners of black cats—knew that "Jinx" was coming.

W. B. Taylor, of the Princess, Hopkinsville, Ky., gave the stunt an extra twist. There the cats were brought direct to the theatre and the offer was limited to the first hundred cats, and each cat was tagged with the name of the entrant. They were then caged and exhibited in the lobby where votes were given the tabbies and a prize awarded the owner of the best behaved feline, the cat itself getting the blue ribbon.

Here's a Chance to Book Parody on "Lombardi"

MACK SENNETT'S "A Lady's Tailor" is a parody on "Lombardi, Ltd." and where it is possible to book these together they will work better than any other combination. Where they cannot be booked in together the comedy should follow rather than precede the drama, but with the two booked up it would be difficult to beat the combination.

The comedy includes a fashion show with the Bathing Beauties in dresses, for once, and by advertising a "double fashion show," you can get more than twice the effect that you could from either one. Try and make your bookings correspond.

Here's a Real Campaign to Get Over "The Birth of a Race" in St. Louis

LOUIS K. SIDNEY, who manages the Pershing and Kings theatres, St. Louis, as well as handling the advertising for the six other theatres of the Koplar Circuit in the same town, does not believe in taking the opinion of others. "Everyone" said that it would not be possible to make a clean-up with "The Birth of a Race." Mr. Sidney figured that it was a big production and, handled in a big way, should get over. Right then and there he started in to show "Everybody" that he (or they), did not know.

He mapped out his entire plan of campaign well in advance. He did not wait until the film came to get inspiration. He schemed his entire fight well in advance of the first advertising move, and before he did a single thing to attract attention, he had every detail clearly laid out.

Plugged for Three Weeks.

He knew that he would have to start well in advance. He had the picture for four days at two houses with simultaneous runs, so he could split the cost of advertising. Three full weeks before the first title came down through the machine, he started to get them talking. So well did he succeed that he cleaned up with a picture other exhibitors were afraid to tackle. He did not go in for large newspaper spaces. Space cost too much in the St. Louis papers. His Sunday space was only a hundred lines doubled. The daily spaces were seventy fives, with a daily change of copy. Two of these are shown.

35,000 heralds of six different styles were used for distribution. The opening campaign was started when these heralds were placed in every automobile in the central and downtown sections of the town. The heralds were different every day. Not a car was overlooked.

A card was attached to the steering wheel of every automobile on the streets; a descriptive herald with many scenes of the production was distributed from house to house; a special herald for the school children, calling their attention to the historic value of the picture, was handed out at every school in town.

Every minister and rabbi received a personal invitation to attend the opening performance. City officials were invited; school teachers and principals were also included, with the result that the co-operation of these prominent men and women was used to excellent advantage.

Used Special Trailer.

He arranged one of the finest trailers he ever used. Taking the entire matter from the production itself, depicting a short glimpse from the Adam and Eve period throughout the ages up to the present day, the trailer aroused intense interest and proved to be one of the greatest assets of the campaign. The trailer was changed from time to time.

Two billposters were then ordered to cover every board in town announcing "The Birth of a Race" and where it was playing. Every window possible to secure was conspicuously decorated with a half sheet, one sheet or window card. Twenty-four sheets were used extensively.

Special Wrapping Paper Supplied.

A splendid array of frames was displayed at the 5 & 10 cent stores two weeks ahead. These stores were supplied with wrapping paper which carried an announcement of "The Birth of a Race." This paper was used for each article purchased.

Clever cut-outs were used liberally around the theatre, and a great big hand-lettered canvass sign was stretched from one end of the theatre to the other.

A teaser ad, which was a reverse circle of fifteen (15) lines with just the name "The Birth of a Race," was used in all the papers a week in advance.

Every newspaper in town gave the production the lead in their news' columns. A splendid ad was drawn for the picture by Mr. Sidney, which, tied up with advertising campaign carried, was used on Saturday and Sunday. The effectiveness of the ad stood out in contrast with the white space used.

A Daily Change of Copy.

On Monday, Tuesday, and every day of the engagement of the picture, the adds were changed, thereby commanding the interest and attention of the people. The picture opened on Sunday and broke all records of the Kings and Royal Theatres. The record-breaking business continued throughout the engagement.

Mr. Sidney edited the picture himself eliminating much of the war episode. thereby supplying the picture with plenty of speed and action, and improving the continuity of the play. The musical effects were especially arranged by Sidney and scored one of the biggest hits of the season for his symphony orchestra.

And he did all this the four days before Christmas when no one expects a theatre to make money.

Has Original Negro Band for "Old Kentucky" Stunt

EVERYONE who dates back twenty years remembers the Whandgoodle Band of small darkies who enlivened the tour of "In Old Kentucky" in stage form. The band was a fine street feature and also took part in the performance.

The press book for the film production issued by the First National suggests a brass band for the same purpose, and Floyd Brown, manager of the film division of the H. Liebler Co., which holds the franchise for the Indiana territory, recalled that the original band was recruited in Indianapolis. He thought it would be a good stunt to try and dig up the original band.

Enter "Detective" Jacobs.

One of his film salesmen, J. M. Jacobs, is something of a detective, and he was called in off the road and told to go get them. For several days Jacobs scoured the negro districts of the city, making a complete census of the wood alcohol dumps and the crap games, but in the end he reported to his chief that he had located the old leader, who felt certain that he could round up a majority of his players. They were picanninnies no longer, but they were the originals.

Has the Old Instruments.

He even had many of the old instruments used by the band on tour, and he lost no time in forming up his band, which played its first date at Muncie, Ind., January 4. They will be booked with the film wherever wanted, and should prove a powerful advertising add.

They were recruited too late for the first run in Indianapolis, where S. Barrett McCormick tried no especial stunt outside of his newspaper work and yet cleaned up with the attraction.

He opened his run December 7, just about the time the early Christmas shoppers began to get busy in real earnest, yet he reports that he played to crowded houses throughout the week, drawing the best business recorded in the past six months.

In the smaller towns, however, the band should be a powerful attractor, for they are known all over the country, and the label of "the original" will help materially, though any band, particularly a negro band, can be used to advantage in getting over this pitcure. It helps to connect the film with the memory of the stage success of this big money maker.

Three Charlies in One Ad.

Charles C. Perry, of the Strand, Minneapolis, sends in an odd display for Ray in "Crooked Straight" and Chaplin in "A Day's Pleasure." Taking advantage of the fact that both stars have the same first name as himself, he offers the endorsement of the "Three Charlies" Ray, Chaplin and himself, each in a signed statement. The idea is a novel utilization of a coincidence, and drew better than would a straight "double feature" plea.

Intensive Exploitation in Buffalo Gives Three W[illegible]'s' Run to Features

INTENSIVE exploitation, like intensive farming, makes three blades of grass grow where but one grew before. Also it upsets all the moss-draped traditions of the exhibition business and broadens the scope of the really good films.

Ever since the business outgrew the swaddling clothes of the one-reel, daily-change schedule on which the first success was built, the effort of the distributors has been directed toward longer runs and a more thorough distribution. They realized that a good picture was worth a longer run than a week in a big town. They knew that not all the picture-loving inhabitants of a city could see the picture during a six or seven day run, no matter how large the house might be. They knew, but always they ran up against the stone wall of the "first-run" tradition, and most always the tradition won.

Here and there were found managers who were really showmen; who did not care how much the other fellow made from a picture so that they got their own profit. Only lately these columns have told how one middle west exhibitor deliberately rode upon the success of the "downtown" house and actually drew business from the centre to his neighborhood theatre. There are such showmen, but they are few and far apart.

Buffalo Was Stubborn.

Buffalo has been one of the strongholds of the week limit. Now and then one of the larger houses might bring back a particularly strong film for a couple of days, following a week's run at another house, but after that one day to a house was considered to be the limit of booking.

Among the most persistent opponents of this theory has been the First National. Presenting only the largest attractions, and seeking the fullest development of the booking possibilities, they realized that much additional profit was lost through the inability to keep a picture in town until its drawing powers had been exhausted.

When "Daddy Long Legs" was put out they decided to see what could be done. It was absurd to argue that a Mary Pickford story was good only for one week in a city the size of Buffalo, yet a week seemed to be the limit, with later bookings of a day or two at the other houses.

Wanted to Try It Out.

It was booked in first at the Hippodrome. Here Harold Franklin played up the element of novelty. He was showing it first run. It was the very first picture from Miss Pickford's own studio. It was the first of the productions made by the star without the hampering restrictions of a production [illegible]npany. The public was interested in [illegible]e star. They wanted to see what she [illegible]uld be able to do "on her own." They [illegible]owded the house for a week.

The Hippodrome has a thirty-day clause in all its bookings. No picture can be shown in town within a four week period from its showing at the Shea house. But there was no reason why people should not still desire to see the production at the end of thirty days. To those who had never seen it the picture was still a novelty. Many of those who had seen it might desire to see it again. It was brought back to the Strand.

E. O. Weinberg took a new angle for his advertising. It was no longer a novelty. It had been shown before. He could not sell novelty. He felt that he could sell the picture, and he started in to do so.

Worked a New Angle.

He picked up a new approach. He used incidents from the play with which to appeal. There was the great prune strike. That was worth something. The cider jag sold many tickets. The waif of the ash can was a strong appeal. He sold Miss Pickford plus the story, and he made his clean up. He made just as much money as he would have done had he ran it pre-release, for there are certain limits to brick and mortar and a theatre will contain only so many people.

Then came the Starr. Two other houses had had big weeks with the same feature. Old Man Tradition had been kicked squarely in the face and they were willing to take another fling at him. They booked it in for a week, and they advertised it just as hard as though no one had ever heard of "Daddy Long Legs" before. They were out to get the money, too. And they got it. They did not advertise it "direct from the Strand." They advertised the star and the play. They made people want to see it. They made enough people want to see it to fracture their box office records.

That's the Answer.

Then Buffalo sat up and took notice. Here was the same picture cleaning up for three big houses—and still good for the one and two and even three day runs. An infuriated public had not risen up to wreck the Strand for daring to present a picture already shown. No one smashed the windows of the Starr for offering second-hand junk. The only mobs in sight were headed for the box office and they had money in their hands.

It seemed too good to be true, but it was true, none the less, and three bank accounts profited instead of one.

Some day the lesson will sink in. Managers will come to realize that a picture that is good at one house will still be good at another.

Buffalo has something more than half a milion population. Granting that only one person in five is interested in pictures, it still gives a hundred thousand persons who might be coaxed to go and see one of the favorite stars. Granting that each house played to 25,000 persons on its week, there still remain another 25,000 possible patrons for this picture in the neighborhood houses, not counting those who wish to see the picture a second time.

They Do Come Back.

Here is an agle that few consider. Many persons go a second time. If Bill Smith happens to drop in and see the show, perhaps when it comes back he tells Mary Jones what a fine performance it was. Mary wants to see, too. Bill takes her. Perhaps that possible 100,000 is boosted another two or three thousand by the returns. It is all good money for the box office.

It is not a very far cry back to the days when profits were determined by the number of copies sold. If a producer could sell twenty or twenty-two prints he was ahead of the game. If he sold thirty he was making money, and he had the foreign rights for "velvet." Today it is bookings and not prints which count. The better the picture the better the bookings and the better the business for the exhibition houses. All profit by longer runs, for these make possible more sumptuous productions.

Buffalo, at least, now knows that a good picture is not merely a matter of one week for a run. When the whole country becomes educated we shall really have fewer and better pictures. And the last house gets the best ot it in that it has all the advantage of the free but valuable word of mouth advertising.

Chicago Theatre Issues Huge Christmas Program

THE Woodlawn Theatre, Chicago, marked the season by issuing a Christmas program of 64 pages and colored cover, distributing 5,000 of these Saturday and Sunday before Christmas. It carried 51 pages of outside advertising, mostly locality stores, which in the ordinary course of events could have done no special advertising except through circular. The program space probably cost less than the printing and mailing of as many circulars ensured distribution and made it reasonably certain that the message would reach those who were able to buy, for they were all put into the hands of patrons and the programs carried sufficient cut matter to make the preservation of a majority of them reasonably certain. This is a good stunt to work at a time when all lines of trade are appealing for holiday patronage and would be a good idea to file away to try for yourself next Christmas.

Got Record Business With Locally Produced Picture in New Orleans

TWENTY-THREE years ago the Lumiere machines were thrown out of American theatres because they could supply only a limited number of local subjects while the Edison and Biograph companies offered nothing else. At no time in the interval has the charm of seeing your own neighborhood failed to draw, and the local angle is still the most powerful selling stunt. Because of the centralization of production not many cities can use the locally produced picture, but such an opportunity came to the Saenger Amusement Company, of New Orleans, which played William S. Hart in "John Petticoats" at the Trianon Theatre, one of the four Saenger houses in the Crescent City. This Paramount-Artcraft picture, it will be recalled, was filmed largely in New Orleans, where was located the modiste shop to which the lumberjack-hero had fallen heir and which he essayed to manage.

Used the House Organ.

Here, indeed, was an opportunity to play to the Trianon's capacity for the four days of the engagement which started December 13, and this is the way the Saenger people went about it. The Saenger house organ, "The Saengerette," for the week of December 6 was embellished with a unique cover design. On a map of the city as a background was superimposed a picture of Hart in the character of John Petticoats. The five local locations used in the picture were conspicuously indicated by circles on the map, these along with the announcement of the production being printed in red ink.

On an inside page of "The Saengerette," which was distributed in all the four houses throughout the week preceding the engagement, was the following announcement: "The cover this week shows 'Bill' in New Orleans. The circles show where the big scenes in 'John Petticoats' are laid. They are: The Modiste Shop—Sschiro's shoe store, Canal and Rampart, used for the purpose. Window trims and garments by D. H. Holmes Co. Home of Judge Meredith—Residence of Aristide Hopkins, 730 Esplanade Ave. Attempted Suicide—Mississippi River at foot of Toulouse. Canal Street—Maison Blanche corner and other intersections. The French Quarter—Various shots but no major scenes."

Contact at Thin Points.

On another page, under the general heading, "Events of Next Week at Saenger Theatres," the section devoted to the Trianon told how "Big Bill" blew into town one morning last June and set about making a picture.

These announcements were supplemented by liberal newspaper space, posters and window cards, the entire appeal of the advertising being local. In short, the Saenger people recognized a good thing and played it to the limit.

The result was that "John Petticoats" did the biggest business ever recorded by a Hart picture in New Orleans

Cleaned Up on Special New Year's Eve Offering

REALIZING that with prohibition checking the gayety of the restaurant celebrations, and with the high prices making the reservation of a table a luxury for the rich the average man would have to look elsewhere for his entertainment, Charles H. Ryan, of the Garfield, Chicago, gave a party.

There were no reserved seats, but the sale was limited to the seat capacity of the house and admission was held at 75 cents, including the war tax. As the Garfield is a ten and fifteen cent house, this was a decided jump, but Mr. Ryan, booked in a vaudeville show of seven standard acts, starting the performance after the regular entertainment. Tickets were good after half past ten, the vaudeville starting an hour later.

Many houses offered a special performance of the regular show, and some raised their prices, but Mr. Ryan offers a new twist in the addition of vaudeville of the better sort.

Real vaudeville can be had only in the larger towns, but any house can hold a "sing" and with a good song leader we think that more can be made from this than with a vaudeville show. Ralph Ruffner used the midnight matinee years ago and we believe that the first midnight shows were given in Washington at Harrison's inauguration to take care of the crowds who might otherwise have to walk the streets, but the midnight show has never lost its charm and is always capable of making money for those who handle it right. New Year's eve is particularly appropriate, but it will work now and then at almost any season.

Used Below-Zero Weather to Clinch His Attraction

JUST because a cold snap came along when he was going to play "Back to God's Country," W. C. Clavier, of the Liberty, Fargo, N. D., did not argue that he could not get the people to come. He looked at the thermometer then he hustled for the newspaper offices and he advertised:

If you think you are cold
Go to the Liberty and See Nell Shipman
Bathing in the Open Air at 40 degrees below Zero.

Misery loves company, and they bundled up and went over to the Liberty to see Miss Shipman as December Morn. Then Mr. Clavier wrote the First National: "'Auction of Souls' established a record which was not broken until we played 'A Virtuous Vamp.' Now 'Back to God's Country' has made a new record with the weather getting as hot as 16 below one sunny day."

It was just a case of suiting the appeal to the season and getting them to come out.

More Ideas for Showmen Who Plan Their Advertising

Space Stealing Stunt Has Advantage of Not Involving Large Expenditure

"Would you sleep all night alone in a graveyard?"

"Do you believe in ghosts?"

PROMPTING these two interrogations is an exhibitor exploitation plan for the small city or town with particularly novel and inexpensive features, and with which it is proposed to make the simplest of psychic tests with colored men, colored women, white men or white women, as pre-showing publicity for D. W. Griffith's personally directed production of "The Greatest Question" for First National, to determine whether or not there are such things as ghosts.

In his story Mr. Griffith has touched on spiritism, which is now sweeping the world with a wave of curisity-invoking interest. And it is to capitalize the latent superstitions in the average person, that C. L. Yeardsley, director of publicity and advertising for the Circuit, has planned the exploitation idea which is offered to exhibitors, in complete detail, in a special two-page section of the press sheet.

Tried As a Teaser.

The stunt was first announced in a trade journal teaser ad two weeks ago. That it is to be a remarkably popular form of mystery advertising is shown in the results from the announcement, which made no mention of "The Greatest Question." Scores of inquiries have been received, and from many unexpected sources. While exhibitors have asked for further information, a great number of theatre employees and girls and men who hold positions with other film concerns have written, telephoned or called to apply for the opportunity to sleep all night alone in a graveyard, for a cash consideration, to prove, or to disprove, that ghosts exist.

Here's the Idea.

As the exploitation is set forth in the special edition of the press sheet for "The Greatest Question," it will be an unusually inexpensive form of advertising for any exhibitor. It requires a first announcement ad in one or more local newspapers in any town, wherein the exhibitor offers a series of cash awards —which in amount are left to the decision of the theatre owner—to any colored woman, any colored man, any white girl or woman, or any white man, who will sleep all night alone in a local cemetery, under conditions which provide all necessary physical comforts. The only requirement is that whoever accepts the offer must remain alone, securely fastened to the sleeping cot so that there can be no doubt in the public's mind that the test was actually made, for the full period of time stated, from ten or eleven o'clock in the evening until six o'clock in the morning.

The stunt is of a nature that will elicit a great amount of newspaper comment in any locality, and this, in turn, reduces the necessity for a costly ad campaign.

Make It An Event.

The press sheet contains specimens of the ads, in addition to a complete compliment of publicity stories. The stories cover the text of the ad announcement, the receipt of applications, a statement by the exhibitor that whichever applicant is selected will be accompanied to the scene of the test by torch bearers, in automobiles, and by a committee of newspapermen, who will supervise the arrangements for the vigil, and securely fasten the applicant for the night.

Front page newspaper publicity is certain to result from the experiment, according to the descriptive matter in the press sheet. The explanation of the stunt also recommends to exhibitors that they arrange to give one newspaper the exclusive right to publish, on the day after the test, the story of the applicant's experiences during the seven or eight hours alone with the dead.

Try Personal Appearances.

It is further suggested, as a means of capitalizing to the utmost the publicity value in the stunt, that the exhibitor arrange with the applicant who undertakes the test to make personal appearances at the theatre during the presentation of "The Greatest Question" and make a short talk to each audience, describing what he or she saw, the sensations and thoughts.

The only individuals who are barred from applying are returned soldiers and professional mediums.

The teaser ads used in the trade papers two weeks ago were intended by Mr. Yearsley to test the efficacy of the stunt within the industry as a gauge to the interest it could be counted upon to arouse with the public.

One of the first inquisitors was a stenographer employed by another film concern, who offered to sleep all night alone in a graveyard for the amount advertised, providing that she could do it before Christmas. She said that she would not need the money that badly after the holidays.

Wanted Room Rent.

Another applicant, a young chap, called personally at First National headquarters, also anxious to earn money in this unique way. But he, too, had a time limit in which he wanted to camp in a cemetery for a night. He wanted to do it before Wednesday of this week, because his room rent was due on that day, he had no regular position, and his landlady had given notice that he would be ejected if he did not settle in full on the due date.

Most surprising of the applications was one made in person by a young, extremely well-dressed girl, who admitted that was prominent socially.

"My folks are in Europe just now," she explained. "I always have had a great ambition to become a motion picture actress. I know one of the boys in your publicity department who told me about this graveyard stunt. I want to do it for the chance it will give me to get into motion pictures. But it must be before my parents return. My mother would put me in a convent if she suspected."

Say "Down on the Farm" Is One of Sennett's Best

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that the big special feature that has been in course of production at the Mack Sennett studios for the past six months is to be called "Down on the Farm." The film will be five reels in length and predictions based on previews of the film are that the feature will prove of the most laughable Sennett comedies.

More than 50,000 feet of film were shot in making the picture, and it is now being cut and edited down to five reels by Mack Sennett personally. The picture, while primarily a comedy, is different from all other laughmaking pictures in so much as there is a deep human interest theme running through the action along with much mirthmaking burlesque. The story has a moral as well as being filled to the brim with thrills and heart throbs. An all star Sennett cast interprets the action and in addition Teddy, the dog; Pepper, the cat comedian; the Sennett cows, geese, pigs, chickens and other animals take prominent parts.

E. M. Asher, Mack Sennett's personal representative, will arrange for a Broadway premier of "Down on the Farm" in about a week.

Universal Men Meet.

A meeting was held in Kansas City on Sunday, December 21, attended by H. M. Berman, general manager of Universal exchanges and all the branch managers of the western district. The branch offices represented at the meeting were Milwaukee, Omaha, Minneapolis, Oklahoma City, Butte, Mont., Denver and St. Louis. The purpose of the meeting was to stimulate sales and inaugurate new advertising schemes.

The Kansas City Universal office was moved on January 1 to the second floor of the new Exchange Building at Seventeenth and Main streets, as the lease on the present office space expired at that time.

Theatre Records Go By the Board When "Soldiers of Fortune" Shows

OPENING at the Bijou Theatre, Fall River, Mass., to "the biggest receipts the house has ever known," according to the telegram of Manager L. M. Boas, "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production, continued to pile up gratifying reports of its box-office activities all week.

The Realart feature has also just set up a new house record at the Cabrillo Theatre, San Diego, Cal., where, according to the letter of R. E. Hicks, proprietor, the week's receipts put "Soldiers of Fortune" in the first place, save for one other motion picture, which was shown when Camp Kearny and the Naval Training Station were filled and there was an increased population of 50 per cent. to draw upon.

Was Well Advertised.

Messrs. Lipp and Cross, other exhibitors of "Soldiers of Fortune," reported to Realart that the showing of the picture at their Post Theatre, Battle Creek, Mich., was "causing a great deal of favorable comment" and that "Realart seems to have found a way of putting the heart into pictures."

In Fall River, Mr. Boas availed himself of every possible exploitation angle which the American adventure story provided, and the result was the biggest box office revenue in the history of the theatre. Full-page advertisements were run in all papers, including the French daily, "L'Independant," which circulates widely in the extensive French colony of the manufacturing city.

Mr. Boas obtained a copy of "Soldiers of Fortune March," composed by Arthur Pryor, the bandmaster, which was dedicated to Hope Harding Davis during the successful run of the film at the big Capitol Theatre, New York. According to the energetic Fall River manager, this tuneful march made a signal hit with Bijou audiences. In addition, he placed attractive stills from the photoplay in store windows and negotiated a news-stimulating tie-up with the local Boy Scouts and the American Legion. The suggested linking up of Richard Harding Davis' photoplay with civic and patriotic organizations was also done.

'Twas a Merry Holiday, Declares Ernie Shipman

ERNEST SHIPMAN is in receipt of a wire from Stuart Paton, at Santa Monica, Cal., reading as follows: "Am sending a roll of your kiddie and his schoolmates as a New Year's gift with a Scotchman's Compliments." The kiddie referred to is Ernest and Mell Shipman's son Barry.

"Ernie" shipman is the recipient of many gifts this Yuletide season. His "Back to God's Country," after covering over $200,000 of its prescribed $600,000 journey under First National auspices, opened its New York engagement at the Capitol Theatre New Year's week, and has besides one hundred prints working to capacity audiences in all parts of the country.

The Dominion Film Company, Inc., has elected him on its board of directors, and he will act in an advisory capacity in connection with new productions to be undertaken by that company.

The Curwood-Carver Productions are busy on the second Curwood production, entitled "The Yellowback," and a new Canadian company is being formed to film the Ralph Connor stories in a big way upon their natural locations with Mr. Shipman in charge of production and sales.

Pathe's Weekly Review to Celebrate First Birthday

PATHE celebrates the first birthday of its screen magazine with Pathe Review No. 34, to be released January 18, presenting a series of the most carefully selected subjects. It is interesting to note the rapid improvement in this short subject, which in a year has developed into a leading feature. Beginning as a bi-weekly issue, the Pathe Review is now being released every week and is an established feature in thousands of theatres.

An innovation is introduced into the anniversary number with the new feature, "The Spirit of the Dance," showing a series of dances interpreted by the foremost terpsichorean artists of the world and arranged by Julian Ollendorff. The first presentation is Madame Desiree Lubovska in the "Dance of Eve." The present day jazz is interpreted by Pat Rooney and Lillian Fermoyle.

A fitting feature will be the Pathecolor presentation of "Where Liberty Was Cradled," showing, with exquisite coloring, the Lake of Lucerne in Switzerland. Dr. Ditmars presents an amusing animal study of his series in "A Crook or Two from Frogland," which was photographed at the New York Zoological Park. Charming Pathecolor views are seen in the passing of flowers with the coming of winter in "Ghosts of Summer Days." The startling photography, which shows the actual dropping of the flowers is secured by taking single exposures at regular intervals until the flower fades.

Three New Metros Started.

Photographing of three new Screen Classics, Inc., productions was started at the Metro studios in Hollywood on one day. "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "Judah" and "Shore Acres" all were launched on Friday, December 26, under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger. The Metro director general saw the Drury Lane melodrama, "The Hope," under way the day before.

Five companies are now working at the studio. Bert Lytell and May Allison have started their new starring vehicles. Alice Lake has started "Shore Acres" and Emma Dunn is nearly half-way through "Old Lady 31," by Rachel Crothers. An all-star cast is making the Drury Lane melodrama.

Plan Community Theatre.

Plans for a community moving picture theatre for Roland Park, one of the most beautiful suburbs of Baltimore, are now under way by the Roland Park Community Service Committee, of which Mrs. H. R. M. Thom is president.

Tom Moore Books Second Louise Glaum Picture for Two Weeks in Washington

JUST as he booked "Sahara" on sight in the summer for immediate presentation, Tom Moore, the big Washington, D. C., exhibitor and First National franchise-holder, has booked immediately for a two-weeks' showing at his Washington Strand Theatre, J. Parker Read, Jr.'s second big Louise Glaum production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," by Louis Joseph Vance. Mr. Moore in closing his contract with the Hodkinson organization, the distributors, also announced his intention of holding open a third week at his Garden Theatre to give this big production twenty-one consecutive days' presentation in the national capital.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter" opens its Washington engagement on January 4 and Mr. Moore cleared out other bookings to be the first eastern exhibitor to offer what Chicago newspaper critics the week previous declared to be "one of the biggest and most lavish motion pictures of the past year." The Chicago Herald-Examiner laid even stronger emphasis upon the power and beauty of this production by saying "Griffith or De Mille never did anything better than 'The Lone Wolf's Daughter.'"

Illinois Books Fast.

The heaviest bookings ever given a picture in the first three weeks of its sale in the Chicago territory has been given to this second of a notable group of productions starring Louise Glaum, Hodkinson reports. Every key city was booked in Illinois within ten days after the receipt of the prints by the Chicago office and only one other picture in the past year has rivalled it for prices paid by exhibitors or for the number of days per contract.

The enthusiasm with which "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" was received by the Chicago public is indicated by glowing telegrams to the Hodkinson corporation following the presentation of the picture for a simultaneous showing in two Harry Moir theatres, the Boston and the Rose, less than two blocks apart.

Immediate time was made for this production at Stillwell's Casino, Spokane, where a week's engagement began to splendid patronage. Similar displacement of another big picture was made by C. E. Kreidel, proprietor of the Goldwyn Theatre, Newark, to give "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" a two weeks' run.

The New York first-run engagement on Broadway together with playing dates it to be announced next week, thereby launching the production in full swing in the metropolitan district.

Norma Talmadge Picture Has a "Hop Joint" Scene

IN "The Woman Gives," the Owen Johnson story which will be the second of Norma Talmadge's First National releases, Miss Talmadge will play the role of Inga Sonderson, a beautiful model. One of the strongest scenes in this picture will be a miserable hop joint in the Chinatown slums of New York. Twenty real Chinamen have been engaged for these scenes, besides two or three white dope fiends, and interesting glimpses of "hitting the pipe" and other bits of the seamy side of life in the underworld will be shown.

"The Woman Gives" is being directed by Roy William Neil, who is now associated with Miss Talmadge for the first time. The part of Norma's sweetheart, Terry Costello, an artist, is played by Edmond Lowe, now appearing on Broadway as leading man for Lenore Ulric in "The Son-Daughter," while the equally important role of Garford, also an artist, falls to John Holliday. "The Woman Gives" will follow "A Daughter of Two Worlds," the first of Miss Talmadge's First Nationals, which will have its New York showing some time in February.

Film Men Have Reunion.

A First National reunion was held in Louisville, Ky., Sunday, December 14. The occasion was the presence of General Pershing. Colonel Fred Levy, president of the First National Exhibitors exchange for Kentucky and Tennessee, and Lee L. Goldberg, secretary, were hosts to several of the exhibitors who came to see General Pershing. They attended the banquet in his honor given by the Louisville Board of Trade.

Those attending included J. Real Neth, of the Ada Meade Theatre, Lexington. Godfrey Kotzin, Lyric Theatre, Covington; J. P. Masters, Crescent Amusement Company, which operates theatres in Nashville, Murfreesboro, Hopkinsville and Bowling Green; C. O. Brown, Manring Theatre, Middlesboro; Leo F. Keiler, Arcade Theatre, Paducah; Frank Dowler, Signal Amusement Company, Knoxville, Chattanooga and Marysville, Tenn.

Theatre Owner Gets Ducking.

There is nothing like picking out a college town in buying a theatre, if you are looking for excitement.

Recently in Ada, Ohio, the college won a football game and a part of their celebration was a visit to the Odena Theatre, where they were met by the owner, Scott Faulkner, who refused them admittance. This peeved the boys, so they rushed Scott, took him to the town watering trough, ducked him and then rushed back to the theatre and wrecked it.

Now Scott has presented the college authorities with a bill for $500 damages.

Miss Groom Makes Her Bow.

Miss Victoria Groom, who won the contest which was recently held in Baltimore by the News and the Parway Theatre for a Baltimore girl who closely resembled Olive Thomas, is now in Hollywood, Cal. Word has been received in Baltimore that a role has been given her for a picture that will soon be made and several test pictures have been made of her at the studios in Universal City.

Theatrical Folk Make Merry.

Theatrical folks of Salt Lake City made merry at Odeon Hall recently, when the annual dance of the Theatrical Mutual Association was held. Players from the various theatres of the city presented acts, several novel and unique features being arranged. The committee on arrangements was composed of Walter Brown and Ralph Wardrop, of the Orpheum; Bob Worthen, of the Gem; Carl Reynolds, of the Salt Lake, and Gordon Thornberg, of the Casino.

The officers of the association are James Woodward, of Garfield, president; Carl Reynolds, vice-president; Robert Worthen, secretary; Robert Splan, treasurer; Teddy Whittaker, financial secretary.

Chicago Theatre Plays "The Hellion" for a Week

THE HELLION" proved "hot stuff" for a solid week at Chicago's Band Box during the bitter cold weather in the early part of December. In spite of the inclement weather," writes John Keane, manager of this popular downtown theatre, "'The Hellion' did a fine business. It's the best picture in which Margarita Fisher ever starred."

"There is a lot in the power of suggestion," adds Mr. Keane, "and 'The Hellion' is just full of suggestion—the kind of suggestion that draws the crowds. I never had a picture that I could play up so well before the public. Why, those Madison street pedestrians blocked the sidewalk looking at the lobby display, when it went up, and when we opened the show they were standing in line."

Manager Keane instituted an extensive advertising campaign prior to and during the run of the picture. The circus exploitation and sensation posters he displayed were well adapted to this drama of intrigue, hypnotism and romance. Catch-lines from the campaign book, set up in bold type, which talked from the walls of the lobby, caught and held the attention of curious crowds.

Metro's "Fewer and Better" Films Designed to Meet Exhibitors' Needs

By MAXWELL KARGER

WITHIN the past two years there has probably been no greater progress in any sphere of industrial or artistic activity than that of the motion picture public. The progress shown has been educational—a steady upward trend toward a higher standard of artistic appreciation. This fact in itself is of vital importance to the business of motion pictures, inasmuch as no industry, no profession and certainly no art can rise higher than the mental caliber of those who support it.

This progress, so evident to the men in touch with the economic phase of the industry, means just one significant thing, and that is that a new clientele has been attracted to the theatres. The audiences that formerly were contented to sit through endless reels of trash, are now vastly augmented by a more exacting body of spectators, who demand that the pictures which they view shall be faithful, and not false, pictures of life as it actually exists.

The Cause, Not the Effect.

But the pictures, however, are the cause rather than the effect of this condition. In other words, the audiences commenced getting better when pictures got better, for the latter proved to be the guide leading the way to an improved condition of things. Toward this end a decided improvement in stories was registered, stories that were presented more humanly, and to achieve this it was finally recognized that only through co-operation of producers, stars, writers and directors could any real and lasting success be obtained.

Metro has proceeded upon the basis that this analysis of the present condition of things is correct. To attain results that would meet with the changed standards of screen requirements as they exist today, Metro has pursued but one course of action. That course is its policy of fewer and better pictures.

From the Exhibitor's Angle.

Metro knows that it is utterly impossible for any firm to produce annually 100 pictures of real box-office value, or 100 pictures a year of even average merit. It goes without saying that in any 100 productions probably not fewer than forty will be below par—be it story par, direction par, acting par, or, worst of all, entertainment par. Therefore, Metro has committed itself to making fewer pictures and making them the best.

Solving a Mutual Problem.

This is Metro's solution of how to retain for the exhibitor his old clientele, and, incidentally, to attract new patronage to the motion picture theatre. The problem of the exhibitor has always been the problem of Metro, and it is in solving this mutual problem that Metro has gone to such great lengths in studying the picture business from the exhibitor's angle.

Metro believes that the exhibitor can hold old and bring new patrons to his house only when, and if, he has stories of good advertising value to talk about; also, when those stories are humanly and entertainingly produced. To help the exhibitor do this is Metro's exclusive aim, and toward this end the policy of fewer and better pictures is directed.

Tom Heffron Believes in Giving Actor Long Leash

ONE of the most interesting of recent announcements is that Thomas Heffron, noted screen director, has joined Famous Players-Lasky and will direct at the Lasky studio in Hollywood a film version of F. E. Mills Young's widely read story of illicit diamond traffic in South Africa, "Myles Calthrope, I. D. B." The picture is to bear the title, "Thou Art the Man!" and Robert Warwick is the star.

During his twenty-year term of experience as an actor and director on the spoken stage, Mr. Heffron was associated with many figures conspicuous in the history of the stage. Beginning his screen career with Thanhouser six years ago, Mr. Heffron produced one of the first three-reel pictures to be made. Going to Biograph, he directed many well-known stars at that studio. He then joined the original Famous Players Flim Company, which was later combined with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, forming the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and directed such notable stars as House Peters, John Barrymore, Marguerite Clark, May Irwin, Tyrone Power and Hazel Dawn.

"In my work," remarks Mr. Heffron, "I strive to bring out the personality of the star and actors—to develop their individual talents. Nearly every actor has a different and generally distinctive way of expressing or registering a thought. The director should not go through the action for him and bind him down to a stock set of ideas or expressions. I try to convey merely the germ idea that I wish interpreted and then give the performer a free rein and let him work it out for himself. Thus, we get individuality and variety and profit by the knowledge that many heads are better than one."

Washington Showman Books Many Hodkinson Releases

WHEN Benjamin B. Hampton's big Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold," completed its two-weeks' engagement at Tom Moore's Strand Theatre, Washington, D. C., it was followed in the playhouse by Leah Baird in "The Capitol," from the famous old play by Augustus Thomas. The following week, J. Parker Read, Jr.'s second big Louise Glaum production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," will open at the Strand for two weeks with a third week held open for a continuation of the run.

These notable bookings for Mr. Moore's circuit of big first-run houses in the nation's capital give to three producers releasing exclusively through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, five and perhaps six consecutive weeks' time over all other product in the market. In connection with the presentation of "The Capitol," Leah Baird, the star, broke her journey to Florida on New Year's day and appeared in the evening at the Strand Theatre, being welcomed by capacity audiences and received at a party arranged by Mr. Moore and his organization. The beautiful star is on her way South to complete her next Artco production, "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," from the story by Louis Joseph Vance.

Some One Took the "Welcome" Off the Mat.

But that doesn't disturb Mildred Harris Chaplin's beautiful disposition in "Polly of the Storm Country," her newest Louis B. Mayer production for First National.

Powers Film Products Company Sued by Brokers On Rights to Sell Stock

THE opening gun of a litigation involving large amounts, and which may incidentally bring out much of the so-called "inside dope" concerning the manufacture of raw film, has been fired in Rochester. Thomas E. Donovan and Richard H. Donovan have filed suit against the Powers Film Products Company and Patrick A. Powers to compel specific performance of a contract which the Donovans claim to have with the company and Powers individually. This contract, they allege, gives them the right to market the stock of the Powers company, including all stock which may be issued or which may be issued at any future date.

The initial argument was heard in the supreme court by Justice Adolph J. Rodenbeck on the defendant's demurrer to the suit of the Donovans. The plaintiffs are brokers, with offices in Rochester and New York, and they allege that they have already disposed of stock in the Powers company to the extent of more than $55,000. According to their complaint, when they applied to the Powers company for further securities to place on the market they were refused, in what they claim was a direct violation of the contract.

Defense Quotes State Law.

The papers of the plaintiffs in the action contain copies of advertisements said to have been published by the Powers company in newspapers, addressed to the general public, and dated subsequent to the refusal which the plaintiff's request is said to have met with, which warned the public from purchasing stock from agents and stating that the Powers company had no authorized agents. The notices also said it is claimed, that stock would be issued at a later date to the present stockholders of the corporation at a lower figure than it could be obtained from brokers, and advised prospective purchasers to wait for such issues.

The Powers company, it appears, has not issued stock lately, and the plaintiffs claim that the failure to issue stock and deliver it to them is a violation of the contract. The Powers company claims that the state law on the subject of stock issues makes their position unassailable, that they cannot be forced by a court to issue stock, and they ask the dismissal of the suit on the grounds that the plaintiff's complaint does not constitute a sufficient cause of action.

Powers Stock Climbed Fast.

The present suit has been foreshadowed for some time. The Donovans have been selling Powers stock for many months. The stock of the Powers company attracted much attention in Rochester, where many people were prone to believe that it held just as profitable a future as stock of the Eastman Kodak Company. The stock was originally placed on the market at $8 per share and by successive steps climbed to $25 per share, on a par value of $10 per share.

These sensational advances naturally brought it into the limelight and made it much in demand. After it reached the high mark, it was announced that no more stock would be issued. In fact, at one time it was announced that the final issue would be offered at a certain price a share and that no more stock would be forthcoming. It was understood that the issue was sold at the desired figures and that no more was available.

It is said to be the claim of the Powers company that all their dealings with the Donovans ended at this time and that they were in no way obliged to issue any more stock through them. On the other hand the Donovans claim that when the stock had become valuable and in great demand the company decided to dispense with a selling agent and dispose of future issues.

Goldwyn Promotes Bandy.

H. A. Bandy, for years Cleveland manager for the Goldwyn branch, has been appointed district manager for this company, having been put in charge of Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Detroit territory. Gilbert Penn, his assistant, has been advanced to the managership of the Cleveland branch.

Porto Rican Admirer Sees Pearl White Enact Drama

MANUEL BARBOSA, whose father is the owner of the San Juan Times, a Porto Rican newspaper, visited the Fox studio during the taking of "The White Moll" to interview Pearl White. The newspaper is conducting a popularity contest in which Miss White is so far in the lead that Porto Ricans feel a great deal of curiosity concerning the American girl.

The first surprise Mr. Barbosa experienced was in seeing the star enact a tense dramatic scene rather than perform hazardous stunts he was accustomed to see in the serials in which she has always appeared. His second surprise was that moving picture stars really had to work, and work hard, to gain a desired effect for the screen. He confessed that he had always thought acting for the screen meant nothing more than a glorious game of make-believe.

Moving pictures are gradually coming into their own in Porto Rico, says Mr. Barbosa, but from the enthusiastic reception they are receiving it is evident that they have come to stay.

Frank J. Zanone Dies.

Frank J. Zanone, one of the pioneer exhibitors of Ohio, died at his home in Lima, December 14. For the past six years he was a progressive exhibitor in Lima, having opened the Majestic at that time. Just recently he built and operated the new Regent and at the time of his death he was building a theatre in Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Crandall Sells Theatre.

Harry M. Crandall has just disposed of his interests in Meader's Theatre, at Eighth and G streets, southeast, Washington, D. C., to Thomas O'Donnell. The latter now operates the Navy Theatre, a block away, and he plans to turn it into a garage.

There is hardly enough business in the section to warrant the number of houses that are in operation. The Crandall-Morgan Amusement Company operates the Avenue Grand, a large house, so that the change made will not materially influence the business in the neighborhood.

Paramount Theatres, Ltd., Takes Over United Houses

MOVING picture theatre developments have come rapidly in British Columbia as a result of the taking over of a number of theatres formerly controlled by the United Theatres, Ltd., by Paramount Theatres, Ltd., Toronto. Announcement is made by J. R. Muir, of Vancouver, B. C., local head of the Paramount interests, that a new company, known as the B. C. Paramount Theatres, Ltd., with headquarters at Vancouver, has been organized to take over all of the British Columbia assets concerned. These include the following theatres which are already in operation: Dominion and Broadway, Vancouver; Dominion, Victoria; Dominion, Nanaimo and Rex, Revelstoke.

Mr. Muir has stated that Paramount Theatres will build brand new houses in Vancouver, Calgary, Moose Jaw, Edmonton, Regina and Winnipeg—all in western Canada. The Vancouver house is to seat 2,800, have a very large pipe organ and an orchestra of twenty-eight pieces, according to this statement.

All of these theatres, actual and proposed, are linked up with the Famous Players-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., and Regal Films, Ltd., both of which have their head offices in Toronto.

First National Officers Discuss Theatre Chain With Salt Lake Man

IN connection with arrangements now being made by the First National Exhibitors Circuit to organize a chain of 5,000 or more theatres reaching from coast to coast, J. D. Williams, of New York, general manager of the circuit; H. O. Swalbe, of Philadelphia, secretary and treasurer; David P. Howells, foreign representative, and N. H. Gordon, of Boston, a heavy stockholder, have been visitors in Salt Lake. They held several meetings with W. H. Swanson, president of the Swanson Theatre Circuit, which owns a chain of theatres in Salt Lake City, Colorado and Idaho and the First National franchise for several western states.

The gigantic merger now being undertaken by First National was made possible by the recent organization in Delaware of two large holding companies having a combined capital stock of $16,000,000. The Swanson interests in Salt Lake and elsewhere will be associated with the great organization, which it is said will prove the most mammoth undertaking in the history of the film industry.

Mahan Is Another Visitor.

Establishment in Salt Lake of a large branch distributing office also is contemplated by First National, according to Mr. Williams, who regards this city as a logical western center.

The visitors were the guests at a special organ recital at the Mormon Tabernacle given in their honor. Mr. Howells is a Salt Lake man, and during his visit there was a guest of his wife's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George M. Cannon.

Another prominent moving picture man who was there at the same time was John W. Mahan, of New York, the first man to erect studios for rental purposes. Mr. Mahan has just made arrangements for the erection of the Unity studios at Culver City. They will cover eighty-five acres of land. There will be fourteen studios in all, seven with artificial and seven with daylight lighting. He erected studios for Norma and Constance Talmadge in New York.

Metro Reorganizes Its Play-Reading Department

THE Metro scenario reading department has been reorganized at the New York offices of the company in the Longacre Building. About a month ago, Col. Jasper Ewing Brady, the editor, was called from Hollywood to New York City to conduct the department in the East in view of the fact that most of the available screen material Metro decided was to be had in the metropolis.

To gain space for the department, new quarters were acquired for the Metro shipping department on Forty-eighth street and the space so preempted in the Longacre Building was refitted for Col. Brady. Since his arrival col. Brady has been busy selecting his staff of readers, which now consists of Miss Edna Garden, Miss Carrington North and Miss Florence Wilstach.

Regal Now Distributing Realart Films in Canada

REGAL FILMS, Ltd., Toronto, which claims to be the largest film distributing corporation in Canada on its own footing, has acquired the Canadian rights for releases of the Realart Pictures Corporation, of New York. Several big features are promised for early booking at the six offices of the Regal company.

Regal is also handling First National pictures in eastern Canada and also is distributing throughout Canada the following: Metro Screen Classics, Nazimova productions, World and Triangle features, United Picture Theatres productions, Kinograms, Ford Educational Monthlies, several serials, etc., while it is also associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Film Service, Ltd. The Regal Films has a subsidiary company, Paramount Theatres, Ltd., which owns or controls many theatres in the Dominion.

Hayden Is Re-elected.

Officers with whom district exhibitors will have to deal during the coming year were named by the musicians' protective union at its annual election last week. A. C. Hayden was re-elected president without opposition, this being the thirteenth consecutive time that the organization has chosen him as is executive head. He is a prominent band and orchestra leader, and at the present time is musical director at Moore's Garden.

Other officers elected are: Antonio Celfo, vice president; W. M. Lynch, secretary; Harry C. Manvell, treasurer; R. L. Crawford, sergeant-at-arms; John E. Birdsell, Ray Hart, S. G. McAllister, C. V. Schofield, Ray D. Schroeder and Paul Schwartz, directors, and Frank Fauth, W. W. Greenwell and W. I. Jacoby, trustees.

Morris Kohn Arranges for Realart To Release R. A. Walsh Productions

REALART will release R. A. Walsh productions. The deal was concluded with Mayflower Photoplay Corporation by Morris Kohn, Realart treasurer.

Mr. Walsh is now finishing his last picture for William Fox and will enter upon his contract with Mayflower early in 1920. Realart, within a short time, will announce the name of its first R. A. Walsh production and the probable date of release. The plan, as outlined, will provide the director with successful stories or stage plays and leave him unhampered in working them out.

Mayflower's contract with Mr. Walsh is said to have been signed several weeks ago and to make provision for production along lines which insure the director complete freedom in his work. It was on this basis, it is pointed out, that "The Miracle Man" was made, and Mayflower believes the plan will result in the production of other exceptional pictures.

Credit Due Kohn.

Credit for securing the release of Walsh productions is given to Mr. Kohn, who began conducting negotiations with Mayflower almost before the ink was dry on the Walsh signature to the new contract. Mr. Kohn regards Mr. Walsh as one of the foremost American directors and believes he will be especially successful under the unrestricted plan of production which Mayflower has adopted.

"Realart feels," says Mr. Kohn, "that a study of Mr. Walsh's work justifies implicit confidence in him. He is a young man, thoroughly abreast of the times, and yet a veteran in the motion picture business. He combines enthusiasm, imagination and a keen sense of dramatic values with an experience as broad as that of any director in the industry."

One among the many well-known pictures which Mr. Walsh has made is "The Honor System," released three or four years ago, but still reported to be in demand both here and abroad. "Regeneration" is cited as another of Mr. Walsh's pictures which has been a consistent box-office producer, and in a statement issued by Releart, mentioning a few of the Walsh productions are also included, "Carmen," Blue Blood and Red," Evangeline" and several comedy-dramas starring the director's brother, George Walsh.

The signing of the Walsh contract is "the biggest coup yet achieved by Realart," according to J. S. Woody, general manager of the new concern. "It is a triumph for the business acumen of Mr. Kohn, and materially strengthens Realart's position in the film world, bearing out the advertised policy that every appeal to the exhibitor would be on a strict basis of cashable value."

Knoles to Direct Dorothy Dalton.

Closely following the announcement that Dorothy Dalton had severed her association with Thomas H. Ince and had become a Paramount-Artcraft star under contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it was made known that Miss Dalton's first Paramount-Artcraft picture, "Half An Hour," by Sir James M. Barrie, would be directed by Harley Knoles. Mr. Knoles is one of the best known directors in the motion picture profession. He recently completed "The Cost," Violet Heming's first picture as a Paramount-Artcraft star.

Keenan Film Gets Four Weeks' Run in Detroit

PACKED by a big advertising and exploitation campaign, Frank Keenan's picture, "The World Aflame," distributed by Pathe, will open a four weeks' run at the Grand Circus Theatre, Detroit, on January 11. This booking is one of the longest ever made on any motion picture feature in Detroit. The contract was signed by F. Emde, manager of the Central Theatre Company, proprietors of the Grand Circus Theatre, who has laid out an exploitation campaign, which should result in the Keenan picture figuratively setting Detroit aflame.

Manager Emde will make a strong play for the patronage of labor men. His publicity campaign will be directed pointedly to the hosts of labor, in the Michigan Metropolis, which is rated a stronghold of organized labor.

May Allison Scores Hit With Sing Sing Convicts

MAY ALLISON, in her current Screen Classics, Inc., production, "Fair and Warmer," an adaptation by June Mathis and A. P. Younger of Avery Hopwood's stage farce, made a great hit with the convicts at Sing Sing when the picture was shown there recently under the auspices of the entertainment committee of the Mutual Welfare League. "Fair and Warmer" was shown through the courtesy of Metro Pictures Corporation, distributors.

The cocktail scene in the play appealed particualrly to the audience. Roars of laughter showed that the Sing Sing dwellers were not unappreciative of the aridity which had enveloped the outside world and some of the prohibition arguents that had brought it to pass.

The exhibition of productions at Sing Sing has been regarded by producers for the regular stage for some time as a particularly exacting test of the strength in human appeal of a play.

"Fair and Warmer," with May Allison in the stellar role, has again by this test demonstrated its inherent human appeal that kept it on Broadway for so many months. At the prison showing, the photographic effects achieved by Henry Otto, the director, and Arthur Martinelli, the cameraman, received outbursts of applause in the scenes where the room began spinning and the green elevator started working after "Blanny" and "Billy" had concluded their experiments with the Woolworth cocktail.

High Hopes for January.

It is natural that the motion picture exhibitor should experience some shrinkage in business during the week preceding Christmas, the patronage at theatres being then affected by the necessity of holiday shopping and the unusual expenditures in this direction.

However, according to many exhibitors handling Fox films, especially in the metropolitan district, theatres are now counting on an extraordinarily heavy business immediately following January 1. Bookings on the bigger special productions have taken the lead by leaps and bounds. The business on all Fox specials, including "Evangeline," "Should a Husband Forgive?," "Kathleen Mavuourneen" and "Checkers," has run up into high figures. Many exhibitors in the New York territory are booked for return engagements on these productions, while others will introduce these successes to their steady patrons.

Here's 660 Pounds of Efficiency In Film Exchange Salesmanship

A. J. Ferte.

J. S. Moss.

G. Kornheiser.

MANAGER F. E. FLYNN, of Goldwyn's Detroit exchange, insists that Detroit has the biggest sales force in the entire Goldwyn organization. Later, he declares, they are going to prove it by the volume of business turned in. At present you can judge of their bigness by the accompanying pictures of A. J. Ferte, G. Kornheiser and J. S. Moss. They weigh a total of 660 pounds. They use weighty arguments and are thoroughly saturated with pep and enthusiasm. And they have made more friends than they total pounds, which is one of the secrets of their success.

Lloyd's Latest Comedy to Play Strand and Rivoli

CO-INCIDENT with the announcement that "From Hand to Mouth," third of Harold Lloyd's series of $100,000 two-reel comedies, will play the Strand and Rivoli theatres in New York, the week of January 4, comes a statement from Pathe that first run bookings on the comedies are still piling up.

Jensen and VonHerberg's Liberty Theatre in Portland, one of the finest in the territory, has been added to the Lloyd first run list.

"From Hand to Mouth" follows "Bumping Into Broadway" and "Captain Kidd's Kids" in the schedule of Lloyd series, and will be marked by the fact that it introduced a new leading woman in Mildred Davis.

Miss Davis is not more than eighteen years old, but has had a wide experience in motion picture comedies, and her work in the third Lloyd production is evidence enough of her ability.

Ina Claire Plans Gowns for "Polly With a Past"

INA CLAIRE, the beautiful and talented Belasco stage star, has already started planning her costumes and other arrangements for the Screen Classics, Inc., production of "Polly With a Past," by George Middleton and Guy Bolton, which she is to make for Metro Pictures Corporation. The vehicle acquired for Miss Claire's appearance in motion pictures is the first Belasco stage production to be translated to the screen.

In the theatre production of "Polly With a Past," by David Belasco, the costumes worn by Miss Claire were the most accentuated feature. The part she assumes in the play is that of a girl who masquerades as a French adventuress, and calls for gowns of the most daring fashionable design and of the most vivid colors. The manner in which Miss Claire achieved this result and carried off the part without the slightest suggestion of burlesque constituted personal triumph for her on the stage.

Metro's plans for the production of "Polly With a Past" are not complete, but it is certain that it will be produced in the East after Metro has re-occupied its studios in Sixty-first street, New York. Just at present Miss Claire is scoring success in "The Gold Diggers," by Avery Hopwood, under David Belasco's management at the Lyceum Theatre.

Metro General Manager Starts on Business Trip

WILLIAM E. ATKINSON, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, has started on another trip to the Pacific Coast. As in the flying jaunt he made several weeks ago, Mr. Atkinson will cover considerable territory, in connection with the business of Metro exchanges between New York and San Francisco, and will spend perhaps a fortnight at the million-dollar Metro studios in Hollywood.

Mr. Atkinson is the Metro official in closest personal touch with Metro's branch offices and their managers. Just now all the Metro exchanges are deluged with work because of the success of the new "fewer and better" productions made by Screen Classics, Inc., and distributed by the Metro organization.

Bookings for these pictures, as evidenced in the cases of the first three—"Lombardi, Ltd.," with Bert Lytell; "Fair and Warmer," with May Allison, and "Please Get Married," with Viola Dana—and the advance orders for the succeeding productions of which six are about to be released, have kept the Metro exchange men hopping.

Mr. Atkinson plans to drop off at Chicago and possibly Salt Lake City, and in the Golden State will visit the San Francisco and Los Angeles exchanges, to give a word of advice and look over current activities.

At the studios in Hollywood, Mr. Atkinson will see the third round of Screen Classics, Inc., productions in the making and now well along, under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general.

Raze Montreal Buildings.

A block of three-story buildings in Montreal, Quebec, has been razed to provide the site for a large new Allen theatre, which will have a seating capacity of 2,500. The entrance to the house will be on St. Catherine street, the main uptown thoroughfare, and the lobby will extend over a lane by means of a bridge to the theatre proper in the rear. Coincident with the announcement, comes the statement that Jay J. Allen, who recently returned from the British Isles, plans to make the screens in the fifty-five theatres of Canada controlled by the Allens more Anglicized than before.

Pathe Review to Celebrate With Interesting Subjects

PATHE celebrates the first birthday of its screen magazine with Pathe Review No. 34, to be released January 18th, presenting a series of the most carefully selected subjects. It is interesting to note the rapid improvement in this short subject, which in a year's time, has developed into one of the foremost features of its kind. Beginning as a bi-weekly issue, the Pathe Review is now being released every week and is an established feature in thousands of theatres.

An innovation is introduced into the anniversary number with the new feature, "The Spirit of the Dance," showing a series of dances interpreted by noted terpsichorean artists and arranged by Julian Ollendorf. The first presentation is Madame Desiree Lubovska in the "Dance of Eve." This shows that dancing is a natural instinct which began when Eve danced the "temptation tango" with a snake in the Garden of Eden. And since that day when mankind was barred from Paradise the world has been dancing to many tunes, out of which evolves the present day jazz. This latest outburst is interpreted by Pat Rooney and Lillian Fermoyle.

With the ushering in of the New Year and the close of the Great War, there could not be a more fitting feature than the Pathe-color presentation of "Where Liberty Was Cradled," showing, with exquisite coloring, the Lake of Lucerne in Switzerland. Centuries ago in these quaint spots, where the Alps come close to the heavens, a hardy mountain race first breathed the idea of liberty.

An amusing Ditmars animal study, "A Crook or Two from Frogland," is included along with "Ghosts of Summer Days," a Pathecolor showing the passing of flowers with the coming of the winter. This latter exhibits startling tricks of photography which show the actual dropping of the flowers.

Chester Cameraman Meets Disaster.

In anticipation of peevish elephants and irritated tigers, the man who goes hunting big game with a camera feels that he has sufficient to contend with in his day's work without having a lot of unnecessary thrills thrust upon him.

Mr. Cottar sailed from Durban a few weeks ago in the interests of the C. L. Chester Productions, with British East Africa as his destination. A letter just received, mailed from Nairobi, tells a story of a wild voyage up the east coast of Africa. When a few days out the ship caught fire and a week of fighting the flames ensued. The boat put in at Zanzibar, but hustled away as soon as discovery was made that no facilities for putting out the fire was available. Mombasa was finally reached, but just as the ship was well in the harbor it blew up. Mr. Cottar lost four motor cars, his tents and ammunition, but saved his cameras, films and part of his baggage.

In spite of his loss the intrepid hunter started away for the bush to get pictures of animal life in the heart of British East Africa. He will cover the country completely and finish up with a whirl through Abyssinia, which up to the present has been more or less of a No Man's Land for the photographer.

"No Coma in Acoma."

One of the latest Chester Outings, "No Coma in Acoma," takes the spectator to enchanted mesa in New Mexico, the scene of a disaster handed down in the Indian traditions of that neighborhood, near which spot no man ventures, especially if he is of Indian blood. The tradition tells of the destruction of the village of Acoma, which was built at the summit of the mesa centures ago, through the machinations of the devil. Near the spot, however, another village has been built, to reach which rocky trails must be traversed; and after one gets to the village proper where primitive apartment houses have been built in the rocks, there is still another ascent to be made by ladder to reach the doors of the houses. All of this is graphically told in the film, and also scenes in the village of Acomita, a mile or so away, where the younger generation have made their homes, and where the children are sent to school like other children are shown. A look-in at the pottery industry is also given in the film, as well as close-ups of interesting native types.

Told in Paramount Magazine.

No. 3866 of the Paramount Magazine for Dec. 28 contains some interesting scenes taken along the Massachusetts coast. They appear under the title of "Camera Surf Studies" and cover many historic and traditional points. The film is attractively tinted in green.

No. 3868 for Jan. 4 shows the Provincetown players at work in their little theatre in Greenwich Village. Other subjects in this issue are "Flapjack Royalty," showing restaurant experts at work, and "Swimming Above the Clouds," taken at the famous hot and cold water natural baths in the mountains of Alberta, Canada.

Land of Montezuma Filmed By Prizma.

The current Prizma release is "Guatemala," modern land of an ancient people, descendants of the great Montezuma.

Guatemala City is the capital and is located not far inland from San Jose, the Pacific coast port. Each morning sees the descendants of the Aztec, Toltec and Maya Indians hurrying along at a dog-trot with heavy loads of food and other wares which they carry to the public markets. Their dress is quaint and inclines to the spectacular at times. Artistic way-side fountains grace this busy thoroughfare on which many an interesting type is found.

The rural section is beautiful in its primitive surroundings, while the modern city has some excellent examples of architecture. Ancient cathedrals partially destroyed by earthquakes remind us that the Spaniard at one time ruled this land and by his hand erected these great monuments. In the old part of the city we still find massive walls of stone with iron-barred windows.

Goldwyn Has Interesting Subjects.

The Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph No. 7020, scheduled for release by Goldwyn on January 11, reveals the secrets of fashionable hairdressing. It is entitled "Woman's Crowning Glory." Other subjects in this issue are "People You'd Like to Know—Rex Beach," and a cartoon from the Bray-International studios, "Jerry on the Job in the Chinese Question."

The Pictograph cameraman visited one of the most noted hairdressing establishments in the country, where all of the intricacies of producing a permanent wave were revealed.

There is also an intimate study of Rex Beach in the "People You'd Like to Know" series. Mr. Beach shows best at his home, Topside, at Ardsley-on-the-Hudson.

Spanish Sermonette for Famous Players-Lasky

THE first Spanuth Sermonette, "The Christmas Message," will become a part of the program furnished by the non-theatrical department of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, according to the terms of an agreement made between that company and H. A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Company.

Mr. Spanuth has just returned from New York, where he went to show the first of these novelty films to Nathan H. Friend, general manager of the Educational Department of Famous Players-Lasky, which furnishes programs for churches, schools and clubs.

Spanuth's Sermonettes are stories of the Bible adapted for the screen. "The Christmas Message," which has just been added to the Famous Players-Lasky non-educational program, is the story of the birth of the Christ Child.

Goldwyn Industrial Shows Soap Making.

The Ford Educational Weekly continues to tell the public the inside story of America's great industries. In the latest release, which is distributed by Goldwyn, the details of soap manufacturing are told pictorially. The title of the picture, Bubbles—I'm Forever Using Soap," suggests the nature of the subject.

The picture shows the collecting of fats, their cleansing in huge vats; then the process of adding sodium hydroxide, the boiling of the mixture.

Some Things Worth Knowing.

On January 10 a "Safety First for Children" meeting will be held at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, at which the Universal safety first film "Careless America," which has to do with the prevention of street accidents, will be exhibited.

We are indebted to the December Bulletin of the Affiliated Committees for Better Films for the news that Buffalo is making ready to fully acquaint the coming generation with the greatness of the home city before sending it forth into the larger wonder world. With this in view Oran L. Pease, of the Buffalo Society of Natural Science, is making pictures of the Buffalo harbor, grain elevators, coal trestles, stock and lumber yards to illustrate lectures on local geography in the public schools of Buffalo.

Appearing in No. 7019 of the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph is a study of the action of the moon in causing waters to rise and fall. Tides and the Moon" is its title, and explanations of the subject is made by means of a series of drawings and photographs. A. W. L. Finley number, "Hunting Wild Duck," is also a part of this issue.

The glove manufacturers of Gloversville, N. Y., are about to use the screen as a medium for advertising their works and their products in a film which will be circulated through the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, D. C.

The Liberty Theatre at Victoria, Mich., has been turned over to the Social Service Department of the Victoria Copper Mining Company and will hereafter be run as a community enterprise, under the management of Dr. F. B. Van Nuys.

Universal Comedies at the Capitol.

Universal comedies continue to hold the stage steadily at the Capitol Theatre. Except for one or two interruptions these films have been a regular feature of the program. "Weak Hearts and Wild Lions," another Century Comedy, was booked to show at this theatre during the week of December 21. "The Eternal Triangle" had the honor of being on the opening bill. The captivating Mrs. Joe Martin has already exhibited her graces on this exclusive screen. Lyons and Moran and the Century Group have been there.

New York Film Building May Soon Become Reality

THE dream of every film exchange man in New York—to bring all the exchanges of the city under a single roof—may soon be realized if plans now under consideration by the film exchange building committee of the National Association of The Motion Picture Industry materialize. It is reported that several of the largest of the distributing companies have approved the general idea of the erection of one big, modern structure to house the exchanges and accessory companies.

An impetus to the plan is given by the success of the national association's committee in formulating and carrying out negotiations for the erection of exchange buildings in several large exchange centers throughout the country. In Kansas City, a $500,000 building has just been completed and plans are practically consummated for the erection of similar specially constructed, fireproof buildings in Cleveland and Chicago, the total investment represented being in the neighborhood of $3,000,000.

The idea of the New York building is still in its first stages, but it is said that its location will probably be somewhere outside of the theatrical district and off Broadway, owing to the increasingly high rentals prevalent along that thoroughfare and vicinity.

Famous Figures Appear in Pathe News.

Many world famous figures and events are brought into the limelight in the Pathe News No. 104. George Carpentier, the smiling, youthful French war hero and heavyweight boxing champion of Europe, is shown returning to France after his defeat of Beckett, the British title holder.

That the heart of the United States has not been closed to "Black Jack" Pershing is clearly indicated by the reception accorded him on a trip through Dayton, and Chicago and recorded in this issue.

Jersey City comes into the spotlight once more through the deportation of 249 radicals who are pictured boarding the "Soviet Ark" preparatory to their departure for Russia, the land of their ideals.

Bell Succeeds Siegel.

M. Siegel, formerly associated with Universal and Jewel, handling special features out of the office of the Baltimore Film Exchange, 412 East Baltimore street, has been succeeded by Louis H. Bell, formerly with Select. Mr. Siegel is now associated with Screenart Pictures and his office is in the Palmore and Homand building.

Just Out of High School, This Girl Successfully Runs Oregon Theatre

WE got the tip from Joe Reddy, of Pathe's publicity staff—and a letter to Dorothy D. Jaquish, Ontario, Ore., did the rest. Our interest in the girl centered in the fact that she had gone on with a business her father had established, made good and added another stone to the monument that every passing day is adding to woman's accomplishments in the battle for existence.

In April, 1918, the owner of Dreamland, Ontario, Ore., died. His prosperous theatre business had to be continued despite the calamity that had befallen the Jaquish fortunes, and Dorothy, only one year out of high school, undertook the task. We asked Miss Jaquish to send along her picture and tell us something about herself.

Look at the pretty picture and read what she says: "I have been managing Dreamland alone since father died—nearly two years now. I am not yet twenty-one and was graduated from high school in 1917. My house has a seating capacity of 415 and I play pictures, vaudeville and road shows.

Modesty Adds to Beauty.

"The photograph shows that my business does not worry me, but I have my share of ups and downs that are so characteristic of the film business. I am very much in love with the film game and want to be in it always, as I feel that there my success lies."

Joe Reddy, with the greater art of wordsmithing at his command, has this to say of Miss Jaquish: "She has no opposition just now, but will have shortly, for another theatre is in the course of construction. Miss Jaquish is prepared for any invasion of her field. In fact, she welcomes it, for it will only give her greater latitude for her natural ability for exploitation. She could boom a soap, or a perfume, as readily as she could motion pictures, but she sees greater opportunities for her in the cinema field."

We can readily believe what Reddy says—for we have looked at the photograph of Miss Jaquish. And if we did not couple her likeness with this story not one of our readers would doubt but what the discovery of another film star had been made in far-off Oregon.

The show business is a great game, and running a picture theatre is an opportunity that has come to many women. Moving Picture World would be especially grateful if other women who are running photoplay theatres would send along their pictures and say a word about themselves. We should like to print as many of these as we can assemble during 1920.

That's a New Year resolution. Will the women in the game please help us fulfil it? There's a lot of Dorothy Jaquishes managing theatres throughout the country.

London Transplanted Here.

New York not possessing any streets resembling London in 1860, Famous Players-Lasky has had to build street after street in the New York studios for the exteriors of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," John Barrymore's forthcoming Paramount-Artcraft. The entire Fifty-sixth street studio at present is delegated to a reproduction of the exterior of Dr. Jekyll's house and laboratory and the adjacent narrow street of the poor section of London, complete even to the cobblestones, "Blue Goose Inn" sign and the sidewalk display of the shopkeepers.

"Topics of the Day" for Blind.

Arrangements have been made whereby the weekly programs of the Literary Digest "Topics of the Day" will be printed in raised type in the Matilda Zeigler Magazine for the Blind, which is sent free to thousands of blind readers in all parts of the world.

This circulation of the popular screen paragraphs appearing in "Topics of the Day" follows the discovery that the witticisms had become a regular feature of the daily educational program at the Red Cross Institute for the Blind at Baltimore.

Callahan Recovers from Operation.

Friends of Diaz Callahan, Realart manager at Dallas, Tex., will be glad to learn that the energetic Western exchange man is recovering from his recent throat operation.

Mr. Callahan had been under doctor's treatment for several days previous to his operation and it was thought that the ordeal could be postponed for a week in order that Mr. Callahan might conclude a special holiday drive in the interests of Realart films.

"Why Go Home?" New Rolin Comedy.

"Why Go Home?" is the title of the new Rolin Comedy, released January 11 by Pathe, in which "Snub," Pollard is featured. Mildred Davis, Eddie Boland and "Sunshine Sammy," the colored kid, assist him with their droll comedy methods. A beauty chorus of cabaret artists add their pulchritude to the comedy.

Gillstrom Mixes Sublime, Ridiculous and Ring Lardner in Scenic Cocktail

By William J. Reilly

JUST put yourself in Arvid Gillstrom's shoes—or rather behind the wheel of his car. Suppose you hadn't seen a real asphalt boulevard in 18,000 miles. Imagine that you had driven at the head of a caravan of six cars for twenty-six weeks, from Colorado to Oregon, over mountain roads that made the Slough of Despond look like Fifth avenue dressed up for the police parade.

And just suppose that after those long racking months of broken axles, torn fenders, smashed wind shields and near somersaults down canyons you had struck the shining, smooth boulevard leading into Denver. Wouldn't you have stepped on the gas, too?

And the Story "Went Over."

That's just what Arvid E. Gillstrom, returning from directing the series of comedy travel pictures for Paramount, did. The gas pedal went right down to the floor and the Gillstrom brain was ransacked of every trick that would get an ounce more of speed out of the motor.

The five cars behind "obeyed the impulse" also. And six speedometer needles were trying to push past the limit when—whiz-whiz-whiz—three motor cops shot by. And would you believe it—Gillstrom's story of boulevard-longing went over like a sob sister's account of the old mortgaged homestead that stood near the well.

The World man and Charles McCarthy, publicity manager for Famous Players-Lasky, entertained by Mr. Gillstrom at luncheon in the Astor grill, could not but compare the atmosphere of the latter rendezvous of "magnates" with the atmosphere of the great West which Mr. Gillstrom supplied in tales of his party's wild adventures.

His story was one of wrecks and mountain goats, geysers and skunks, bear cubs and seven-day horseback trips, waterfalls, giant trees, giant rocks, and giant almost everything.

The Gillstrom party, just returned, included Jack Gardner, Ethel Burton, and Buddie Ross. Nathan Friend, head of Famous Players' non-theatrical department, together with Mrs. Friend, visited the party at Gardner, Mont., and received the "welcome" with the band which closed the store for the afternoon to turn out.

Arvid E. Gillstrom
Returns after responsible task of directing "So This Is America!" Series for Paramount.

7,214 Feet Down to the Floor of Yosemite Valley—and No Elevator!
A typical shot from Paramount's "So This Is America!" series. Comedy in the foreground and scenic beauty in the background.

A Novel Assignation.

It seemed that Mr. Gillstrom's assignation had been to take a little of the Sublime, mix it with a bit of the Ridiculous, add a dash of Ring Lardner, and put out the result as the "So This Is America!" series of comedy travel pictures for Famous Players-Lasky.

Just another way of putting it, but that was his job. It was 'way back last spring that Paramount was inspired with the idea of making this series of comedy scenics with titles to be written by Ring W. Lardner, the mighty wielder of the comic pen.

Travel pictures there have been and will be—things of beauty and pure joys forever. And comedies there have been and will be—things of bathing beauties and therefore joys forever. But there never had been a combination of the two.

Foreground Comedy.

For instance, you have been taken via the travel film through Yellowstone Park. But you haven't seen its beauties in the background with the touch of fun in the foreground. That is what the "So This Is America!" series does.

Just by way of example.. It is not giving away any of Mr. Gillstrom's secrets to tell that he filmed Old Faithful geyser in Yellowstone while it was "blowing" with his company of players putting over a comedy incident not ten feet from the geyser itself, which is just one of the many surprises.

To give a more adequate idea of the series as a whole, there will be an even dozen two-reelers. There is a plot running through the whole twelve, but unlike the well-known serial, each picture is complete in itself.

The plot centers about a returned war hero, played by Jack Gardner. Friend hero, all bemedaled, is on his return made the matrimonial target of a half dozen girls in his home town. His father advises him to "see America first," and the boy acts on the advise. Three of the girls find ways of following him, so his "seeing America" tour is accompanied by a series of attempts to avoid these persistent devotees of Cupid.

Although Mr. Gillstrom had the story well in mind before he left Denver, nevertheless a great deal depended on the actual locations and what was framed around them. There is where entered the Gillstrom ingenuity, cultivated by four years as director on the Sennett lot, a year with the Fox comedy forces, and a combination directorial term at both comedy and drama.

Good Stuff Is There.

It would be giving away a lot of good stuff to tell of the many original stunts framed about well-known spots in Rocky Mountain National Park, the Garden of the Gods, Yosemite Valley, and on the Columbia Highway. But it is certain the Mr. Gillstrom has taken his ingredients, the Sublime in the beauties of the West, the Ridiculous in his comedy action and the Lardner titles and mixed them into an altogether new scenic cocktail of which exhibitors may quaff deep with great legality and profit. The first of the series will be released in February.

It made Broadway giggle, it made Europe wiggle
With joy at it's sparkle and mirth;
It's won every play where a smile fits a face,
Which is mostly all over the earth.

Douglas Fairbanks Piles Up Laughs in "When the Clouds Roll By"

By Edward Weitzel

WHEN the moment came to shoot one particular scene in "When the Clouds Roll By," Douglas Fairbanks must have heaved a sigh of absolute satisfaction. He has leaped, dived and run; rode horizontally, vertically, sidewise and upside down. He has vaulted fences, shot through windows and danced along telegraph wires. He has scaled, ladderless, ten story buildings; but never before in his catapultic and astonishingly agile screen career has he walked upon the ceiling. This surprising stunt is one of the best features of Fairbanks' latest United Artists' picture; and "When the Clouds Roll By" offers an unlimited field for his acrobatic tricks, and also supplies him with situations in which he is at the top of his ability to entertain as an actor.

A Sure Enough Flood.

Although the action of the picture is whimsical, at times fantastic, the human note is sounded throughout. For continuous and unalloyed good fun, it is in the front rank of Fairbanks' releases. Before the clouds which threaten the happiness of Daniel Boone Brown and his sweetheart have all rolled by the hero goes through a series of adventures quite unlike anything seen before—and survives a flood. This flood is the real thing. The way it comes crashing down on human beings and their domestic animals and sends their houses and homes adrift in the darkness and then spreads itself and the wrecked buildings over the landscape will make folks along the Ohio river take to their rafts and rowboats if the picture is ever shown in their towns.

A Forty Horse Power Nightmare.

The scene the next morning with Brown and a dozen neighbors perched in a tree and the roofs of the half-submerged houses covered with other flood victims is the novel and realistic setting for a lot more Fairbank comedy. Before this happens Brown has defied—after being absolutely controlled by them—every superstition invented by man, and gone through a nightmare that is vastly amusing and particularly well done. The use of the ultra-rapid camera to produce the effect of his floating along a foot above ground was no less than inspiration.

The supporting company and every detail of production are first class. Kathleen Clifford plays Lucette Bancroft in a spirit of demure comedy that matches the character perfectly, and Frank Campeau makes a real type of Mark Drake, the mayor of a small town in Texas.

Doug's Delicate Lunch.

Daniel Boone Brown, the hero of "When the Clouds Roll By," is a likable chap who is chosen by a Doctor Metz as the subject or rather the victim of a psychological experiment. This Metz wishes to prove to the scientific world new powers of hypnotism and auto suggestion. His first move is to install a trusted assistant as Daniel's valet, and the young fellow is shown being served a midnight lunch of onions, lobster, Welsh rarebit and mince pie. After this he goes to bed and has a nightmare of forty horse power. The articles he has eaten become endowed with life and chase him madly every place he goes. He walks on the ceiling, leaps through brick walls and down long chimneys, and does everything else a person does in bad dreams, even to almost losing the lower half of his pajamas when he finds himself in the centre of a crowd of pretty girls.

The Bursting of the Dam.

Having cultivated a belief in every superstition and also aroused his uncle's ire by always being late at the office, Daniel further complicates matters by falling in love. His charmer is Lucette Bancroft, an art student who lives in Greenwich Village, New York headquarters for all tried and true Bohemians. She comes from a small town in Texas, where her father owns oil land. Mark Drake, the mayor of the place, is in love with Lucette, but that does not prevent him from coming to New York to get Brown's uncle to help him work a sharp deal for possession of the Bancroft property. The rivalry between Daniel and Drake for Lucette's love is strenuous, and Doctor Metz helps Drake make the girl believe that young Brown is unworthy of her. She leaves New York the night she is to marry Daniel and starts back to Texas with the mayor. Daniel catches the same train by leaping to the roof of a coach while the train is in motion, has Drake locked up in a stateroom as an escaped lunatic, and stands guard over the apartment occupied by Lucette, who will not listen to his side of the story. The bursting of a dam and the washing away of the track forces everyone to leave the train. Daniel and Lucette are separated in the darkness and storm and do not meet until the next morning.

A Novel Wedding.

From the limb of a tree, in the midst of the flood, Daniel spies Lucette, high and unexpectedly dry on the roof of a floating house. He jumps into the water, swims to where his once promised bride is balancing herself on the shingles and bids her a cheery "Good Morning." He then treats her to an exhibition of fancy diving and swimming while he hunts a breakfast for her in the flooded kitchen of the house. The best he can do is a watermelon, but the girl is very hungry and very grateful, and Daniel has little trouble in setting matters right between them. The flood, which first wrenched them apart and then brought them together again, obligingly sends a minister and his church drifting down stream at this opportune moment. Like ships that pass in the night, the two buildings meet for a moment on the breast of the waters. But that moment is long enough for the energetic Daniel Boone Brown to invite the minister aboard his building, and the wedding knot is tied with all hands clinging to the peak of the roof. Thus does "When the Clouds Roll By" come to both a familiar and a novel end.

An ultra-rapid camera is used in this Fairbanks picture to get a "nightmare" effect. "This is no less than inspiration" and worth a big boost.

The End of a Perfect Nightmare.

Doug Fairbanks wakes up after a banquet of lobster, onions, Welsh rarebit and mince pie in his United Artists' bang-over, "When the Clouds Roll By."

Mooney Finds Exhibitors Welcome Bookings on the Percentage Basis

PAUL C. MOONEY, general sales manager for the Louis B. Mayer Productions, starring Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin, has arrived in New York after a tour of the principal cities from New York to the West Coast, arranging the special percentage presentations of "In Old Kentucky" and establishing the Mildred Harris Chaplin series, which will soon be initiated as the new Meyer release through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Asked regarding trade conditions, Mr. Mooney said:

"In addition to arranging the extended run presentations of Anita Stewart's big melodrama 'In Old Kentucky' and the initial showing of Mildred Harris Chaplin in Mayer-made First National releases, my object was to feel the pulse of the public regarding motion pictures in general and the making of big specials in particular.

"Mr. Mayer has expressed himself as believing in the policy of making bigger pictures that warrant putting behind them real showmanship and capable of being played on a percentage basis in the larger cities. I had expected considerable opposition to the percentage idea, but was agreeably surprised by the opinion of a majority of leading first-run exhibitors, to the effect that they would welcome a percentage policy backed up with pictures big enough to warrant it.

Percentage Fair to Both Sides.

"They feel that pictures sufficiently big can be handled much more advantageously on percentage, even from the theatre standpoint, because of the additional help put behind a local presentation by the presence of a good publicity man, and, secondarily, through the effect of other picture productions of the producer knowing that he is going to get paid what he is entitled to on a particularly fine picture. The percentage proposition is fair to both sides and theatre owners are quickly realizing that 'playing percentage' means more profit to them than a straight rental basis."

Mr. Mooney spent several days with Mr. Mayer at the Mayer Studios in Los Angeles, and saw the filming of scenes of Anita Stewart's newest picture, "The Fighting Shepherdess," and Mildred Harris Chaplin's initial release, "Polly of the Storm Country," by Grace Miller White, who wrote "Tess of the Storm Country" for Mary Pickford and "The Secret of the Storm Country" for Norma Talmadge.

Selznick's January Films Have Four Favorite Stars

FOUR productions of more than ordinary quality are listed on the Selznick schedule for release during January. They star four popular screen actresses and each production was made to be released as examples of the quality pictures the Selznick organization has on its 1920 program.

The titles and stars are: "Greater Than Fame," starring Elaine Hammerstein; "She Loves and Lies," a Norma Talmadge special; "The Imp," featuring Elsie Janis, and "Footlights and Shadows," starring Olive Thomas.

"Greater Than Fame" was written by S. Jay Kaufman, the New York Globe's Round-the-Towner. The screen version abounds with heart thrills, bits of melodrama and deft touches of humor. Although largely an adventure story a love theme runs throughout and adds to the finesse. "Greater Than Fame" was directed by Alan Crosland, and the supporting cast includes Walter McGrail, W. H. Tooke, Julia Swayne Gordon, Albert Roccardi, Cora Williams, John Walker, Arthur Donaldson, Flora Kingsley, Eugene Woodward, and J. Furey.

Norma Talmadge in a Special.

Admirers of Norma Talmadge are due for a surprise in her new special. "She Loves and Lies" is a screen version of the novel by Wilkie Collins. Conway Tearle plays opposite Miss Talmadge. "She Loves and Lies" is full of interesting moments and should do much to further the excellent reputation of Norma Talmadge.

Elsie Janis is co-author of "The Imp." Joe King heads the supporting cast, which is composed of Ethel Stewart, E. J. Ratcliffe, Duncan Penwarden, John Southerland, William Fredericks, Arthur Marton, Jack Ridgeway and Joseph Granby. Edmund Goulding who wrote the scenario for the production was the co-author with Miss Janis. Robert Ellis directed the production.

Olive Thomas has the leading role in "Footlights and Shadows," written by Bradley King. The story is such that Miss Thomas has a chance to display personality and versatility. She has the role of a Follies chorus girl, and naturally this allows for many unusual scenes. The supporting cast includes Alexander Cuslow, Ivo Dawson, Van Bauser and May Hicks.

United Cigar Stores Head Now Allied with Goldwyn

EDWARD WISE, president of the United Cigar Stores, was elected a member of the board of directors of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation on Tuesday, December 23. It is significant that another of America's leading business men has joined forces with the Goldwyn company.

In the fifteen years during which Mr. Wise has been associated with the United Cigar Stores, he has seen the company grow from one small store in Nassau street, New York City, to an organization owning more than 1,000 stores from coast to coast and from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico.

Much of the development of this enormous enterprise is due to Mr. Wise's activity and versatility.

Has Alcock's Last Flight Views.

The last flight pictures of Sir John Alcock, pioneer non-stop flyer over the Atlantic, who was killed recently in an accident in France, appear in Pathe News No. 98. It was Alcock who piloted the machine in which a Pathe cameraman obtained the first views of London from the air, ever released in the United States. This subject is one of the most interesting ever appearing in the Pathe News, and is now historic in view of the untimely end of the great British aviator, whose nerve and daring was unsurpassable.

Asher Visits San Francisco.

E. M. Asher, formerly manager of the Tivoli Opera House, San Francisco, but now personal representative of Mack Sennett, arrived at that city just before the holidays, to confer with Fred Dahnken, Jr., president of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, relative to the premiere presentation of the latest Sennett film achievement, "Down on the Farm."

Quimby of Pathé Tells in Detail Purpose of Associated Exhibitors

THE Associated Exhibitors, Inc., is now more than a mere name or an idea; it is an established fact." Thus Director of Exchanges, Fred C. Quimby, of Pathe, sums up the results of his extended trip throughout the United States, from which he has returned. For the first time, this paper is in a position to give definite information on the big Pathe proposition which is now successfully launched.

Of the thirty-two franchises, seventeen have been definitely awarded. The seventeen which have come into the new organization represent some of the biggest and best known exhibitors in the country.

The calibre of the membership is shown by the mention of names: Lubliner & Trinz, of Chicago; Harry Crandall, of Washington; Mike Shea, of Buffalo; Paul Gustanovic, of Cleveland; Merrill Theatre Company, of Milwaukee; Ruben & Finkelstein, of Minneapolis; Harding & Coen, of Omaha; America Theatre, of Denver; Harris & Ackerman, of Salt Lake, San Francisco and Los Angeles; Clemmer & Lambach, of Spokane and Portland; Clemmer Theatre, of Seattle; Sam Harding, of Kansas City; Olsen & Sourbier, of Indianapolis, and J. H. Cooper, of Oklahoma City.

Announces Purpose.

"There are several others who are as good as signed," says Mr. Quimby, "but pending the receipt of the signed contracts we prefer not to mention their names.

"The association is being formed for the purpose of buying big independent productions, contracting with stars and producers for their productions, etc., in order to fortify franchise holders' theatres with the best class of product and as a protection against possible pernicious combines," added Mr. Quimby in discussing the new organization. The association will have its general manager and the home office will be in New York. At this office will be conducted the business affairs of the organization. The first meeting will be held in January, when a president, a board of directors and a purchasing committee will be elected. The purchasing committee will negotiate and contract with producers, stars and independent productions.

Eliminating the Middleman.

"The Associated Exhibitors is a 100 per cent. exhibitors' organization, controlled, owned, operated and with a policy fully outlined by its exhibitors. In each territory the franchise holder for that territory will sell franchises for that territory. These franchises will give to their holders exclusive right to show all productions released by the Associated Exhibitors, Inc. This means that eventually there will be 8,000 or 10,000 franchise holders in the Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

"The sole purpose of the association is to eliminate the middleman by bringing the producer, star, director and independent seller of big state rights features into direct contact with the exhibitor. Its object also is to prevent, fight and overthrow any attempt at monopoly. Domination in this field would mean that eventually the exhibitor would be compelled to turn over his theatre to the dominating element.

"The Associated Exhibitors plan is to give the exhibitor, the star, the director or the producer financial returns commensurate with the drawing power of their productions. Therefore the launching of the new organization cannot but mean a new day for those responsible for quality productions. The Associated Exhibitors are materially interested in securing high-class productions for their theatres, in seeing that they receive the proper exploitation and in seeing that such successful productions shall be available to exhibitors in the respective territories who are not franchise holders at equitable rentals.

"Under the plan, producer, star and director will receive the reward to which they are justly entitled. Better understanding between exhibitor and producer is certain to come as a result of this broad and liberal policy. Individual selfishness will not prevail, since the association will formulate its own policy, will outline its own exploitation plans.

"Furthermore, under the Associated Exhibitors plan, exhibitors will have real money-making attractions at fair prices, these prices being based on a sane valuation of the negative. It is obvious that as a franchise in the Associated Exhibitors renders the holder independent of pernicious competition, ruinous bidding for big attractions will be eliminated to the benefit of the franchise holder. As rentals will be based upon a fixed and fair percentage basis, the big theatre and the little theatre will each have justice.

"There can be no question as to the benefits of combination. The banding together of many theatres vastly increases their power of acquisition. A dozen individuals, clubbing together to purchase at wholesale, might reduce the cost of living for each member a little; but let thousands combine and it is evident that their purchasing power must exceed that of the largest wholesaler. So here, the small exhibitor as well as the large is enabled to get the best productions because his organization is able to pick and choose, to demand and receive, and to pay the price that the best must always bring.

"Where does Pathe come in on the organization? The Associated Exhibitors have selected us to handle the distribution of their product throughout the world, and this selection was made after a careful analysis of the methods of distribution of other concerns. Pathe has more branch offices throughout the United States than any other distributing concern in the business operating on sound business principles such as obtained in the most successful businesses in other lines and financially powerful. Furthermore, Pathe's broad-minded policies and fair dealing with exhibitors have come in for due recognition."

The World's Classified advertising is a quick and low-priced means to business end. Buy, sell or exchange something? That's an effective method, as hundreds can testify.

Republic Will Distribute Product Of Denver's Photoplay Corporation

AMONG the important contracts entered into by Lewis J. Selznick, advisory director, and Briton N. Busch, president of the Republic Distributing Corporation, is one with the Enwood Feature Picture Company through O. D. Woodward, president and general manager, whereby this organization will produce and distribute through the Republic a minimum of six super features each year. The Enwood Feature Picture Company has its studios located in Denver. President Woodward is scouring the motion picture field to secure the directors who have made pictures of such character as were money makers for exhibitors. He proposes to impose no limit on the price that he will pay for plays and novels for picturization purposes.

Woodward Is Coming East.

Stories and plays will be secured whose locales particularly lend themselves to production in and around Denver. The scenic opportunities offered by Colorado will be utilized in lending a background to pictures with dramatic power.

Mr. Woodward will soon arrive in New York. He will then be ready to make announcements as to the personnel of his producing organization.

Universal Serial Shows Lincoln's Great Strength

IN the fifth episode of "Elmo the Fearless," the engrossing Universal serial, Elmo Lincoln is shown to peculiar advantage. Lincoln will be remembered for his super-strength, courage and bravery in "Tarzan of the Apes," "The Romance of Tarzan" and "Elmo the Mighty," three of his previous films.

In "Elmo the Fearless" there is a sequence in the fifth episode in which Lincoln is shown, by means of his extraordinary brute strength, swaying the trunk of a huge tree until it touches the ground, while he reaches for Edith Stilwell over whom two of her father's treacherous employes are fighting. While under orders from Edith's half brother to kill her, the two men decide she is too beautiful and begin fighting for possession of her. Elmo decides the question by lifting her beyond their reach at the opportune moment.

Plucky little Louise Lorain portrays the character of Edith Stilwell in this nerve-trying ordeal. There are eighteen episodes in this gripping Universal serial, which is being produced under the direction of J. P. McGowan.

Buffalo Men Plan Banquet.

Buffalo exhibitors and exchangemen are planning a big "get-to-gether" banquet for the middle of January. C. A. Taylor, Pathe manager, is chairman of the committee on arrangements and is being assisted by a large number of film men. This will be the first event of this nature ever held in Buffalo, but so good have been the results of similar "love feasts" in other cities that the Queen City of the Lakes is going to try it out. Several men prominent in the industry are expected to attend as speakers and a number of "surprises" are sure to be "sprung" on the occasion.

Universal Buys Rights to Screen Three Stories

IN keeping with Carl Laemmle's aim for bigger and better productions, Universal has purchased the screen rights for three stories by well known authors which have recently appeared in prominent periodicals. The first of these will be used as a vehicle for the starring of Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. This story, "Everything but the Truth," was written by Edgar Franklyn and will be the basis of the first five-reel Lyons-Moran comedy drama to be produced.

Frank Mayo, whose latest picture, "Lasca," is meeting with success, will be featured as the hero in "Luck," a red-blooded story of the far North. This story is from the pen of John Frederick and ran as a serial in the Argosy magazine.

Through Julia R. Tutwiler, Universal has purchased the screen rights for "False Colors" by Edwina Levin. Priscilla Dean has been selected to grace the stellar role of this production. Universal is also considering the purchase of several new stories as a basis for the starring of Edith Roberts, who has signed a long contract with Laemmle.

"The Return of Zahzi" Is Bought for Madge Kennedy

LAWRENCE McCLOSKEY, a veteran writer for the screen, who has created material for many of the leading motion picture stars, is the latest contributor to the list of coming productions to be made and distributed by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. It was announced this week that Mr. McCloskey's "The Return of Zahzi," an original story, has been purchased by Goldwyn, and will be used as a starring vehicle for Madge Kennedy, who has just completed "The Blooming Angel" at the Culver City studios. Within the next week the script will be turned over to a continuity writer.

In the search for material peculiarly suited to the talents of Miss Kennedy, who is specializing in light, human comedies that reflect modern life in its more pleasing phases, the Goldwyn scenario readers, under the direction of Eugene Mullin, have passed upon hundreds of stories during the past few months, including the works of a number of the foremost novelists.

To Wish Fox Godspeed.

Richard C. Fox, of Buffalo, who has just been appointed sales manager, representing the Fox Film Corporation in the United Kingdom, with headquarters in London, will be the guest at a farewell banquet to be given January 15 by the Buffalo Theatrical Managers Association. Mr. Fox, who for several years has been manager of the Buffalo branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is one of the most popular men in local film circles and regrets are heard on all sides at his leaving.

At Christmas, Mr. Fox was the host at a banquet for his office force. He distributed nearly $1,000 in the form of a holiday bonus to members of his staff, who in turn gave him a handsome traveling bag. His successor has not been named.

A Correction.

"The Cinema Murder," Marion Davies' latest Cosmopolitan production distributed through Famous Players-Lasky Company, is a December release and not a January release as recently announced.

"The Sacred Flame" to Be Sold On State Rights, Decides Schomer-Ross

NEWS comes from the offices of Schomer-Ross, 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, through E. S. Manheimer, general manager, that the latest Schomer-Ross six-reel feature production, "The Sacred Flame," starring Emily Stevens, will be sold on state rights basis instead of outright as formerly intended.

"There have been so many inquiries from men in the state rights field for productions of the type of 'The Sacred Flame' that we have decided to put this picture out on the state rights basis," says Mr. Manheimer. "We don't pose to be philanthropists, yet we know that 'The Sacred Flame,' being a high grade type of big production, will bring more and better results to men handling independent productions than than any other way. Incidentally it will bring Schomer-Ross a larger net return. That is the reason of the plan of state rights.

"We believe in 'live and let live,' and the marketing of this feature in territorial allotments will give the production a larger circulation among big theatres with better percentages of profit for handlers of independent pictures. With the first run houses showing 'The Sacred Flame,' the remaining houses will fall into line when the results of the more important theatres are shown.

"Besides, we have prepared a unique advertising and publicity campaign book containing elaborate exploitation helps, ready prepared newspaper ads, stunts, and press stuff for theatres that are a practical guarantee of success to any house following the suggestions worked out by experts. No picture ever had finer accessories prepared for it than 'The Sacred Flame,' and state rights men will be interested in knowing how far we have gone to enable them to handle this production in their territories. A. Egan Cobb, assistant to Mr. Manheimer, is handling the state rights sales.

Triangle Recreated Films Fill Big Need of Theatres

THE success of Triangle's recreated plays, starring some of the greatest artists of the present day in the pictures in which they achieved their fame, is due, according to Triangle, to the ever increasing demand for better pictures to serve the steadily growing number of first theatres.

In practically every important city there are at least four or five first run houses that must be supplied with a picture at least once each week. At the present time the production of features up to the necessary high standard has not kept pace with the growth o first run theatres. It is these conditions, the Triangle statement says, that is responsible for the large number of first run bookings in the recreated plays. In practically every instance the theatres that played "The Flame of the Yukon," Triangle's first release under the new plan, have signed up for the entire series.

Every picture on the next Triangle program was supervised either by D. W. Griffith or Thomas H. Ince. A Constance Talmadge production along lines of her latest plays is in course of preparation and will probably be released in the near future. Work is also under way on the best of the pictures made for Triangle by William S. Hart, Norma Talmadge, Douglas Fairbanks and Frank Keenan. These pictures will be released one every third week, beginning early next spring.

A Drama of Thrills and Humor.

Sensationalism that takes its audience into its confidence has an immeasurable, unmistakeable appeal for all. "The Superman" is daily proving its entertainment value and appeal in box-office receipts in every section of the country where it is being shown.

This six-reel photoplay, released on the state rights market by Tower Film Corporation, is a melodrama of thrills and humor. The melodramatic climaxes, hairbreadth adventures and breathless suspenses furnish rare entertainment.

Universal Signs Contract With Little Edith Roberts

EDITH ROBERTS, the fascinating little screen favorite, has just signed a long term contract with Carl Laemmle to star in Universal productions. She has been under Laemmle's wing since babyhood and has appeared in many of his best features.

Miss Roberts, who is just 18 years old, was born in New York and attended one of the exclusive seminaries "up the Hudson" in her very recent girlhood. She made her first theatrical appearance in vaudeville five years ago, when she had a small dancing and singing part in a musical comedy. After a year in vaudeville she was engaged for "cute girl" parts in Christie Comedies. A little over two years ago she came to Universal City to play in the Lyons and Moran comedies, and she soon won important roles in more serious photoplays.

Featured roles soon followed in such Universal successes as "The Love Swindler," "Beans," "A Taste of Life" and "The Deciding Kiss." In "Lasca" she was co-starred with Frank Mayo. In her newest feature, "The Triflers," she has the stellar role, supported by David Butler.

Miss Roberts is an ardent sportswoman. She is the step-daughter of Dr. Armstrong of Smithsonian Institute, who was recently killed in a railroad wreck in Africa while filming the jungle for Universal.

Introducing Molly Malone.

Three more clever Supreme Comedies will shortly be released by Robertson-Cole. All three were written by Frank Roland Conklin and the first of these "Mollie's Millions" will introduce the new Robertson-Cole comedy queen, petite Mollie Malone, formerly Roscoe Arbuckle's leading lady. Miss Malone is supported by James Liddy, who has appeared in a number of Supreme Comedies.

"A Four Cylinder Frame-Up" is the title of the second fun film and Teddy Sampson and Harry Depp have the leading roles. "Mollie's Mumps," the third comedy, also stars Mollie Malone and James Liddy.

Gem Theatre Burned.

The Gem Theatre, Fredericton, N. B., one of a chain of theatres conducted by F. G. Spencer of St. John, N. B., was destroyed by fire recently. The loss is estimated at $25,000.

Two picture machines, a generator and between 12,000 and 15,000 feet of film are said to have been burned as well as $500 in bills in the box office.

"Clodhopper" and "Gamble in Souls," Recreations, to Recreate Bankrolls

TRIANGLE'S first release for 1920 will be "The Clodhopper," Monte M. Katterjohn's masterful story of rural life, featuring Charles Ray. This production, made under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, will be available on January 4. Triangle's second release for the new year will be "A Gamble in Souls," also an Ince production, featuring Dorothy Dalton and William Desmond. These productions are the first of a series of "great stars in their greatest plays" which Triangle will release during 1920.

"The Clodhopper" probably shows Charles Ray at his best, for it permits that popular star to take the role of a farm boy, a part which gained him his greatest fame. The picture combines rural and city atmosphere, showing this farm lad cast out of his small town environment and thrust by circumstances into the maws of a big city and more specifically into the arms of a bevy of Broadway chorus girls.

Story of "Barbary Coast."

"A Gamble in Souls" is a theme directly opposite to that of "The Clodhopper." It is a red-blooded story of the battle between a girl of the 'Frisco streets and a minister who preaches the gospel on the Barbary Coast, but with poor results. These two, one representing good, the other evil, are cast by fate upon the shores of a deserted island. The battle between good and evil rages, the pendulum of fate and destiny swinging from light to darkness and then back again, with powerful nature guiding its course.

Press books on "The Clodhopper" and "A Gamble in Souls," showing how the exhibitor can readily cash in on these two Triangle productions with practically no expense, have been issued by the company. It is the desire of Triangle to start the new year with the profit-making productions as a forerunner of what this organization will release the next twelve months.

Larry Trimble to Direct Zeena Keefe for Selznick

MYRON SELZNICK announces that Larry Trimble will direct Zeena Keefe in Sophie Irene Loeb's drama, "The Woman God Sent." Mr. Trimble also made the screen adaptation of the story.

Trimble is an enthusiast about the screen drama, and has pursued his theories all over Europe and America. For some years he radiated from New York out over the United States, directing and writing and adapting for the films.

He went to Europe and took headquarters in England. He was managing director of an English company for some while. He is really a writer of plays and short stories.

He is not the type of director known as spectacular. He does not use a megaphone, does not shout or dance while giving directions, and depends a great deal on the intelligence and cooperation of his players and assistant director. This last, by the way, is William Shilling, and Mr. Trimble is delighted at the partnership.

Francis Renews Goldwyn Contract.

Alec B. Francis, who for the past two years has appeared exclusively in Goldwyn pictures, has just renewed his Goldwyn contract with Vice-President Abraham Lehr at the Culver City studios. Under the new contract, which covers another year, Mr. Francis is ready to start on his first assignment, an important role in Basil King's "Earthbound," in which Flore Ravelles and Wyndham Standing are among the other prominent players.

Mr. Francis has come to be recognized as one of the most distinguished character actors on the screen and his continuance with Goldwyn assures that company of the services of a player who could not easily be replaced. During his association with Goldwyn, Mr. Francis has appeared in many productions, starting with "Polly of the Circus" and "The Cinderella Man," and more recently in "When Doctors Disagree" and "Lord and Lady Algy."

Sidelights and Reflections

THE beginning of the new year being the time when good resolutions are made the book review department of the New York Sun wishes its friends and itself a happy and a fortunate New Year. And it resolves: Never to be of the smart, smarty, but never to be of the bores; never to be prejudiced but never to be non-committal; not to put on airs, but not to be put upon by the airy; never to forget that its clientele is the reading public first and its friends the authors and publishers incidentally; above all else, to be fair, judging writers according to their own and other people's pretentions and dealing with books according to their kinds.

Change the word books to pictures and the phrase reading public to screen public and the entire creed would be an excellent one for moving picture reviewers. That last item of the resolutions: To deal with books (or pictures) according to their kinds, is anything but the least important. Personal preference is the thing that must be guarded against. It is always waiting to creep into a review and effect the impartiality of the writer's judgment.

Enterprise is a fine trait, but there might be such a thing as carrying it too far. Reviews if written solely from the press-book story of the picture, in order to "beat the other fellow to it," would not only mislead the exhibitor, but would be bound to catch the writer in his own trap, when the plot in the advance advertising is changed materially from that in the completed picture. This, of course, is the kind of enterprise which none of the moving picture trade publicaions would ever be dishonest enough to attemtp. Rivalry in securing the earliest possible reports on all releases naturally will be keen, now that projection room showings have been discontinued by several producers; but the trade journals are all good sports and play the game with their hands above the table.

Blood will tell—especially if it be of the sporting variety. "In Old Kentucky" with its horse race scene proves that the present generation is capable of getting excited and breaking into applause when watching the ponies run, even in a moving picture. When the regular jockey has been dosed with Kentucky Bourbon and put to sleep and the heroine declares that she will ride Queen Bess the audience at the New York Strand gave Anita Stewart a vigorous hand the afternoon the writer was present. The race itself was followed with the closest interest.

Speaking of thrillers, that leap on horseback across the opening in the broken bridge well deserves the name.

"The Tower of Jewels"

Corinne Griffith Wins Sympathy for Heroine of Vitagraph Crook Story of Good Quality.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE Tower of Jewels" is a diamond necklace which a gang of high-class crooks try to steal. This Vitagraph picture is excellent of its grade, and Corinne Griffith wins sympathy for the heroine, a young girl brought up as a thief who reforms when given a chance. There is very little of the mawkish sentiment which so often weakens stories of reformed crooks to be found in "The Tower of Jewels," and its plot is unfolded clearly and with almost entire absence of the usual overdrawn incidents which plant a smile in places where only serious and absorbed attention are supposed to grow.

The author has handled his band of thieves in a novel way and has carefully avoided showing the customary tough saloon or low den as its headquarters. Whether the reign of prohibition has brought about this change is not explained; but the enterprising persons of both sexes that comprise this up-to-date criminal organization pose as professors and students of art and plan their "jobs" in a room that has every indication of being devoted to the turning out of masterpieces of painting or sculpture while you wait. "Mother" Malone. the queen of the crooks, is also unconventional, and the unexpected happens often enough in the story to keep the interest entertainingly alive.

It is Corinne Griffith, however, who is the chief cause of the favorable impression made by the picture. As the Princess she acts with intelligent earnestness and indicates an inborn refinement and a lovable personality which make belief in her reformation an easy matter. Maurice Costello as the male leader of the gang, and Henry Stephenson as a liberal-minded millionaire, are prominent members of a competent cast. The production is of good quality throughout.

The Story.

A diamond necklace known as "The Tower of Jewels" tempts a gang of high class thieves to break into the home of a wealthy man and open the safe where the ornament is kept. One of the gang is employed as the millionaire's butler; another member is a young girl known as the Princess. The owner of the house is awakened and succeeds in capturing the girl, with the necklace in her grasp. The rest of the gang get away. In place of having his captive arrested the millionaire questions her, learns that she was adopted by "Mother" Malone when a child, taught to steal, realizes now that she is doing wrong and wants to reform; has already attempted to do so and has been driven back to her old life by the police.

Impressed by the girl's sincerity the owner of the house tells her she shall have another chance. The Princess took a course at a business college when she broke away from the gang, and is given a position in the house as private secretary. The next day her employer's son, and also his niece, return home. The young chap and the girl recognize each other. They met at the business college and fell in love. The niece also is in love with her cousin, and resents the presence of her rival in the house.

The Princess goes back to "Mother" Malone, gets her things and tells her old companions she is through with them forever. They try to prevent her from leaving; one of the gang takes her part and she return to her new home. The rest of the story tells of another attempt to steal the necklace and to involve the girl in the crime. Her lover fools the thieves on both counts, and his liberal-minded father accepts the Princess as his prospective daughter-in-law.

"The Lincoln Highwayman"

William Russell Featured in Five-Reel Production of Fast-Moving Mystery Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE question whether William Russell is particularly fortunate in the stories he appears in, or whether the stories are fortunate in having him as their chief performer need not be answered. But the combination of late has been usually a lucky one, and is so in the present mystery yarn, entitled "The Lincoln Highwayman," adapted from the stage play by Paul Dickey.

The production is a melodramatic one of the swiftly-moving type, abounding in dark deeds which reflect constantly upon the hero. He is apparently none other than an auto-bandit, known by the police along the Pacific Coast as "The Lincoln Highwayman." Countless robberies and even murders have been charged to him, and up to the last reel of the story his guilt seems certain.

The number opens with a brief and interesting prologue, picturing the evolution of this form of banditry, from the days of the road agent. Then comes the modern auto-bandit, whose deeds are frequently heralded in the daily press. The exploits of this particular highwayman are pictured in connection with an entertaining and baffling story. Scenes from high social life are frequent, and there is the usual love affair between the hero and the girl who thinks him guilty, but still loves him. Lois Lee appears in the latter role, the the supporting cast is a strong one.

The Story

Vincent Colby, a San Francisco banker, in "The Lincoln Highwayman," is driving with his family in an automobile to the week-end party. They are held up at a dark spot in the road by "The Lincoln Highwayman," an outlaw whose depredations are known far and wide along the Pacific coast. Even while the women are being relieved of their jewels, the daughter, Marian, forms an admiration for the courage of the bandit, who wears a black mask.

On arriving at the house party, they tell their story amid great excitement. A secret service man, named Steele, is among the guests, and he immediately goes to work upon the case. The police send a number of detectives to assist. A late arrival, Jimmy Clunder, also takes an interest.

While talking with Marian, Jimmy Clunder drops a locket which had been taken from them in the hold-up. Marian is instantly suspicious and demands to know how he obtained it. Jimmy explains that he found it on the road while driving over in his car.

Numerous other robberies occur, and Marian becomes more and more certain of Jimmy's guilt. So, also, does Steele, who is a rival with Jimmy for the girl's affections. But in the exciting denouement, Jimmy takes them all by surprise and wins the girl.

"Red Hot Dollars"

A Paramount-Artcraft Presentation of Charles Ray in a Comedy Supervised by Thomas H. Ince.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ON THE inimitable impersonation of Charles Ray and on the thorough workmanship in every department of production the unquestionable merit of "Red Hot Dollars" depends. The story offers opportunity for some strong and effective characterizations, and the whole cast responds with a vim and a zip that characterizes the products of Thomas H. Ince. Thus a highly satisfactory product is evolved from rather scant materials. The story is briefly that of a quarrel between the heads of two business houses, one a failure, the other a success. These heads are reconciled in the end through the love of their children, the adopted son of one, the only daughter of the other.

The Flavor Lasts

With kisses of this kind, says Charlie Ray in his Paramount, "Red-Hot Dollars."

Charles Ray impersonates the adopted son with manly spirit, injecting a lot of comedy material into his courtship, especially into a dancing scene, a comedy situation in itself. Miss Gladys George responds with vivacity and winning charm. William Conklin as the successful man is ideal, but honors in the support go to Charles Mailes for his forceful impersonation of a hard-headed old Scot, father of the girl. It is one of those rare impersonations that stick in the memory, a gem of its kind.

As presented to a packed house at the Railto, "Red Hot Dollars" gave very general satisfaction. It will do equally well when shown on any program, as its human appeal is universal.

"Red Hot Dollars" do not pour into the pocket of Tod Burke, as a foundryman, until he saves the factory owner, Peter Garton, from being crushed to death. Because Tod is seriously injured and has no family to care for him, he is taken to the house of Garton, where he becomes loved for his simple bravery and good humor. Garton adopts the boy as his son, in spite of his daughters protests that the young foundryman will never learn to respond to the conventions of good society. Tod had no such aspirations. He was in love with Jane, only daughter of Angus Muir, a hard-headed old Scotchman, formerly a business rival of Garton and ruined in fierce competition.

Tod is only too happy that wealth has enabled him to help Janet when she needs employment to support her father. The young fellow makes her his private secretary, and carries on a secret courtship in the office of the third assistant of the second vice president of the Garton Company. He makes a poor showing socially. Garton and his sister investigate the boy's attention to business and find him dancing with his stenog, Janet. She is discharged on the spot. Tod remonstrates in vain. He finally decides that he will not be dictated to in matters of the heart and leaves his home of luxury to begin life from the bottom.

Now is old Angus Muir aroused. The old Scot becomes a lion of rage and goes to the house of Garton to give that gentleman a caning. Tod and Janet follow in time to rescue the two seniors from results of a violent struggle, and persuade them to settle old differences in the interest of the little God of Love who rules the world.

"Tin-Pan Alley"

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair Appear in Pleasing Five-Reel Fox Production.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

ALTHOUGH apparently playing lightly upon the surface of life, this five-reel Fox production contains a good deal of fundamental truth and reaches the deeper emotion at times. It pictures in a light, breezy way the experiences of a young song writer, who at the height of his fame is dealt some rude awakening blows, which serve to take him away from the glamor of a Broadway success and land him back safely with the girl he loves and who loves him.

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair have the leading roles in this unique little story. They do not get any great dramatic effects out of the situations, but they typify pleasingly the characters they represent. George Hernandez really carries off the acting honors of the production, making the character of Simon Berg a human and appealing one, quite different from some of the avaricious song publishers we often read about.

The setting as a whole, or rather the atmosphere, of the production, is one that should have wide appeal. It takes the spectator "behind the scenes" of the song-writing game. It makes an entertaining story and is helped along by some bright subtitles.

The Story.

Tommy Breen, hero of "Tin-Pan Alley," a young violinist who is working at a ship-building plant, not being able to make a living at his music. He plays for the workmen during the noon hour and wins the enmity of the superintendent, who discharges him. Tommy returns to his boarding house, very down in the mouth.

His landlady, Mrs. O'Brian, and a girl boarder named June Norton, try to cheer him up. June invites him to a lunch in her room, and while there tells him to smile and go ahead with his music. Something the girl says suggests the title for a song and he at once composes it. The song, called "When You Smile," is played in a cabaret where June sells cigars and cigarettes. The manager likes it and employs Tommy by the week.

In time a publisher is found and Tommy begins making money rapidly. He meets another girl and soon drifts into a fast Broadway crowd, entirely forgetting June. But his new-found wealth slips away rapidly and it is not long before he is completely broke again. June and the landlady once more assist him at a crucial moment. June then visits the publisher and they plan a surprise for Tommy, which takes him into a newer, happier life. This June shares with him.

"The Sagebrusher"

Hampton Seven-Reel Adaptation of Emerson Hough Novel Meritorious Production of Wholesome Type.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Benjamin B. Hampton adaptation of Emerson Hough's novel, "The Sagebrusher," distributed by W. W. Hodkinson, is a good general purpose film. It is a picture that can be shown by the exhibitor with the assurance that his patrons will be pleased by the story of a rough diamond with a big clean heart. It contains an unusual situation replete with human interest and dramatic intensity, and has also enough of a spectacular or melodramatic element to please the majority.

Roy Stewart plays the manly role of Dr. Barnes, and Noah Beery does a mystifying piece of work in portraying the homely character of Sim Gage. The pathetic figure of the picture and also the most beautiful is Mary Warren, the blind wife of Sim Gage, played by Marguerite De La Motte. The cast is a well-balanced one.

The Story.

The story of "The Sagebrusher" treats of a peculiar situation in the lives of three people, brought about through an advertisement in a matrimonial newspaper.

Sim Gage, the "sagebrusher," who has not made his bed in a year, according to his rancher friend, Wid Gardner, is one of the most unkempt types that could be imagined. Wid, sensing Sim's condition, believing that he requires a wife to take care of him, and incidentally to clean up the place, advertises for a wife for him on his own responsibility. In a big city miles away Annie Squires finding life a difficult problem, answers the advertisement, and then out of pity for her friend, whose eyesight is defective, hands over the proposition to her, and sends her to become the wife of the ranchman.

On the way to Sim Gage's ranch she goes blind, and on arrival there is unable to see the man she is to marry. His kindness to her causes her to picture him as entirely different in appearance to what he really is. One day when she is left alone in the cabin, Big Aleck, the tool of Waldhorn of the Twin Forks Power Company, who has stolen Mary's legacy and is engaged in another crooked deal, tries to kidnap the blind girl, and is shot by her with a gun belonging to Sim. She then rushes out and wanders in the forest, which has been set afire by Waldhorn's men, and is discovered by Barnes. She embraces him, believing he is Sim. "The Sagebrusher," who has decided to marry the girl for her protection, takes advantage of the situation. The day of the wedding, realizing the disparity between him and his bride, when the moment arrives for him to kiss her, he begs Barnes to substitute for him. And so Mary's illusion is kept intact. Before an operation causes her to see, Providence has taken a hand. Sim has been drowned and Barnes is still her sweetheart.

"The Greatest Question"

Griffith's First National Attraction a Photographic Enchantment Dealing with Survival After Death.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE high value of "The Greatest Question" is found in a screen expression partly spiritual, party sensual, partly sensational, through what is wholly beautiful in the art of photography. This First National Product shows splendid craftsmanship in all the details of artistic presentation. The story is of an accepted Griffith pattern, an intense contrast of solitary human traits, rather than a portraiture of the complex human soul with its infinite capacities for good and evil. As in other Griffith pictures, a delicate girl is placed in a highly unfavorable environment, where she survives by the appeal of sheer helplessness, in this case driven frantic with terror by extreme human brutality. Her adventures form the main line of interest, but neither she nor her persecutors have anything to do with the announced main theme. They play no part whatever in solving "The Great Question."

The supposed problem of future existence and return of departed spirits is put up to characters of secondary importance. They find themselves impoverished, go to a graveyard and pray for material benefit. The spirit of a soldier boy killed in the European war appears and tells them all will be well. He is plainly visible to two of the petitioners. Next day they discover millions of dollars worth of oil on their farm. Just why they are so favored, while millions of prayers go unanswered, is not explained to the satisfaction of common sense and fair play. Where the return of the departed soul in the Griffith picture is felt by the fond and expectant heart of a mother, the idea is reasonable and effective. When the vision is reduced to the amusing old formula of a graveyard ghost and made strictly utilitarian it loses all spiritual significance.

To Lillian Gish go honors of impersonation emphasized by the brutality of characters interpreted by Josephine Crowell and George Nichols. Eugenie Besserer is pathetic in the role of the soldier boy's mother. In revealing her unspoken hopes and fears for the future, she makes this the truest characterization in the piece, one of genuine emotions recognizably human.

With "The Greatest Question" relegated to a side issue the appeal of this Griffith product is not a strong one. It may depend upon what proportion of the innumerable kinds of human taste favors his repeating himself in contrasts of ultra brutality and saintly sweetness. It will probably depend largely upon the imaginative stimulus of superb photography, exquisite backgrounds and generally fine craftsmanship in the details of production.

The Story.

"The Greatest Question" with Nellie Jarvis, a little orphan, is to keep body and soul together. She is left at the mercy of kind strangers, almost as poor as herself. The Hilton family take her in, and she becomes a sweet and attractive part of the household through her cheerful willingness to work. When the oldest boy, the mainstay of the family, goes away to the war, Nellie realizes that she might be a burden, and hires out to Mr. and Mrs. Scrubble in the neighborhood. She dimly remembers seeing them in some past experience, but she endures their exactions bravely ,even the sensual attentions to Scrubble. When their brutality becomes almost unendurable, she returns to the Hiltons, but she sees that the little money she is enabled to send them is necessary, so she returns to the miseries of her service as a maid of all work.

Scrubble's attentions become so marked as to excite the murderous envy of his wife. The couple hate each other because they participated in a brutal murder years before, a crime witnessed by Nellie when she was a little girl. Her torture at the hands of these fiends in human guise is nearing a tragic crisis when the Hiltons, now on the verge of selling their little farm, go to the graveyard and pray to their departed son for help. He appears in ghostly form and promises them relief.

Next day they discover oil in abundance on their land and are assured of great wealth. Their younger son, Jimmie, hastens to tell Nellie, his pal, of the good news. He is just in time. In a beastal pursuit of Nellie, Scrubble is almost on the point of accomplishing his purpose when the wife returns and threatens to kill both. Nellie at last recognizes them as the murderers of long years ago. At her supreme moment of terror, Jimmie Hilton appears and rescues her from the horrible situation forever, as the unexpected wealth of his family assures the happiness of all.

"Sky-Eye"

Thrilling Melodramatic Offering Produced by William Steiner Showing Spectacular Aeronautic Stunts.

Reviewed by Herbert J. Hoose.

LATELY there have been a number of productions that have possessed unusual thrills, but what appears to be a real thriller is William Steiner's production, "Sky-Eye." The action is centered about Ellington aviation field in Texas and the large oil wells. About one hundred airplanes were used in the production and many officers of the Ellington station participated in the picture, which is being distributed by Sol Lesser.

There is not very much plot to the story, but this easily is made up for by the intense action that is shown throughout the entire film. The story tells of the bidding of a wealthy oil magnate against Mangin, a man who is in love with his daughter, for a United States Government oil contract. Mangin loses the contract and the main action then hinges on his activities to prevent the delivery of the oil and thereby cancel the contract.

The airplane pilots furnish exciting incidents in their chases, tailspins, nose dives, and various other figures that they execute high in the air. One real daring feat is accomplished by Lieut. Russel C. Hunt when he slides down a rope that he has attached to the bottom of his plane, and lands safely on a troop train. Practically all of the "shots" in mid-air were photographed from planes, so as to add to the realism.

The cast is headed by Harry Meyers, who acts convincingly as the "heavy." Thelma Kenley is the female lead and is a good choice for the part. The supporting cast includes June Keith, Lieut. Russel C. Hunt, Lieut. C. C. Nutt and Peck Miller, all of whom do creditable work.

Length, about 6,000 feet.

The Story.

James Murdock, a wealthy oil magnate, who has two pretty daughters, Blanche and June, one of whom is in love with Harry Mangin, who is a competitor of the elder Murdock's for a United States Government oil contract. Mangin loses the award and immediately schemes to prevent Murdock from being able to deliver the oil. He arranges with an accomplice to break the main pump and thereby stop the works. This is carried out and when Murdock is informed he accuses one of his trusted employes, Blake, who is Mangin's rival for Blanche's hand in marriage. Lieutenant Fordyce, a friend of Blake's, gets permission from the commanding officer at the aviation field to take his plane to St. Louis to get the necessary parts for the pump, so that the work will not be delayed. Blake, after being discharged, joins the aviation service and because of his keen vision he receives the name of "Sky-Eye." Mangin, not wanting his rival to better himself in Blanche's eyes, also enlists. After joining the service he gets into trouble continually and is confined to quarters after executing a nose dive that wrecked his machine. He breaks his arrest, squadron of airplanes give chase, and finally he winds up in the guard-house, subject to court-martial. This time he shoots the guard, escapes, steals a plane and goes off to set fire to the oil wells belonging to Murdock. After several terrific air battles that are supplemented by the skirmishes between the troops and the oil workers, the culprits are subdued, and Mankin is brought down a prisoner by "Sky-Eye" Blake. The only thing now necessary is the wedding between Blanche and Blake, and this is successfully carried out in airplane that is speeding through the clouds.

Six-Part Pathe Release Features Dolores Cassinelli in Dual Melodramatic Role.

NOTHING stronger in a melodramatic way has been accomplished by Dolores Cassinelli than her work in this six-part Edwin Carewe production, released by Pathe, entitled "The Web of Deceit." In this story she plays the roles of two girls, Wanda and Lucille Hubbard, one a blonde and the other a brunette. The former is a sweet, even-tempered girl and the second a scheming, treacherous miss who brings about a tangled chain of events.

The settings and situations in this production have been designed for a strong appeal to the masses. The plot might not bear too close analysis in all its parts, but it is one that on the whole makes for good melodrama and should have wide appeal. It opens with a contrast of country and city scenes and the latter part is pictured entirely in New York. A strong climax is reached in the sensational closing scenes.

As a matter of fact Wanda is living by her wits, in company with a crook, known as "Red" Smith. The latter is in ill health and wants to make a big haul, which will take him to Arizona for a time.

Wanda and Red conspire to rob a safe in the residence of Major Andrew Clark, on Long Island. They are apprehended while on the job, but both escape. Wanda flees to her mother and sister and Red follows. Later he goes to Arizona, after pledging Wanda to marry him on his return.

Mrs. Hubbard dies, as a result of a fall down stairs, and before dying confesses to Wanda that Lucille is really the daughter of her brother-in-law, Major Clark. Wanda recognizes the name as that of the man she and Red had robbed. After the funeral of Mrs. Hubbard Wanda determines to substitute herself as the daughter of Major Clark. She goes to New York, where she is accepted by Major Clark and his protege, Roger Burney. The latter is an artist and Wanda falls in love with him.

But Lucille comes to New York later, meets Roger and wins his love. Wanda is insanely jealous and destroys the picture of Lucille's mother, so her deception will not be discovered. All goes well until Red Smith appears. His coming brings about tragic consequences for Wanda and clears up matters for Lucille and Roger.

"Heart Strings"

Six-Part Fox Production Features William Farnum in Story of Heart Interest.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A RADICAL and welcome departure from the more conventional type of stories located in the Canadian wilds is found in this six-reel Fox subject, entitled "Heart Strings." The author, Henry Albert Phillips, has cleverly evaded most of the obvious and familiar features with this locale, and in so doing has gotten a little closer to real characterizations. The story he has evolved is one of a sentimental sort, with a brother's love for his sister as the chief theme. The action is punctuated at intervals by developments of a melodramatic type. Some of these border on the theatrical, but the plot is one designed to please the average spectator and will no doubt prove successful.

William Farnum, who has lately been seen in roles calling for a display of great physical prowess, has in this a part calling for more tender and sympathetic emotions. He plays Pierre Fournel, a young violinist who seeks fame and fortune in New York. His career is interrupted by the sorrows which befall his sister, but in the end happiness is restored to Pierre and the betrayed girl.

The scenes from Canadian life are the best in the subject, the New York portion being well staged, but judicious cutting at certain points would no doubt strengthen the action, particularly toward the close.

Pierre Fournel, in "Heart Strings," lives with his sister, Gabrielle, in the Canadian village of quaint Quebec. He is a young violinist and has been saving his money with a view to going to New York to study. A pastry-maker named La Touche hopes to go along and act as his manager when Pierre becomes famous.

The attention of a society girl, Kathleen Noyes, is brought to Pierre, and she induces him to play at a musicale at a nearby summer resort. She also shows a desire to help him to get to New York. By this interest Pierre gains the enmity of her fiance, Rupert Blake.

Unknown to Pierre, Gabrielle has been lured into a false marriage with a local bully named Rouget. Just as he is about to leave the village he learns the truth of her situation and that she is about to give birth to a child. Pierre gives up his savings to clear Rouget's name from a change of theft brought by his uncle, and he remains to take care of Gabrielle.

The child is born and later the trip is made to New York. Here the principals meet again and Rouget and Blake plan a jewel theft to bring dishonor upon Pierre. This is successful for a time, but Gabrielle eventually tells what she knows. Pierre wins the love of Kathleen and Rouget has a change of heart which reunites him with Gabrielle. The closing scenes in quaint Quebec are happy ones.

"Rouge and Riches"

Six-Reel Universal Production Features Mary MacLaren in Chorus Girl Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

OF the innumerable stories and photoplays dealing with life behind the scenes, with a chorus girl as the principal character, this Universal production, entitled "Rouge and Riches," is entitled to unusual consideration. It not only establishes a real and intimate touch with chorus girl life, but maintains it throughout the entire six reels. The plot is one that in almost every detail reflects the popular conception of a chorus girl's heart affairs, the jealous intriguing, the glamour of the theatre, and the producer has not forgotten the keen interest of the man in the front row when he sees a new face among the girls who dance and sing.

Mary MacLaren finds a most congenial role in the part of Becky, the proud Southern girl, who determines to invade Broadway for the purpose of ensnaring the heart and fortunes of a millionaire. Her plan is a deliberate one and her good looks help beyond measure in carrying it through. There will be a surprise for the average spectator in the closing scenes of Becky's romance.

"Behind the Door"

Paramount-Artcraft Pictures Presents Hobart Bosworth in Powerful Tragic Role.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A REMARKABLE combination of thrills and shudders has been achieved in this Thomas H. Ince production, entitled "Behind the Door," released by Paramount-Artcraft. The story, written by Gouverneur Morris, picturized by Luther Reed and directed by Irvin Willat, is as profoundly moving as one of the sombre tales of Edgar Allan Poe and the climax carries a diabolical revenge on the part of a wronged man that will linger long in the memory of anyone seeing it.

The story as a whole is a lusty tale of the sea, with Hobart Bosworth, who also played in "The Sea Wolf," in the leading role. In the present character of Captain Oscar Krug he adds another realistic portrayal to the growing list of notable screen performances. Jane Novak in the part of the ill-fated wife, also plays up to her high standard of excellence.

The opening scenes depict the return of Krug to his native hamlet in Maine, white haired and broken, though still comparatively young in years. He comes like a Rip Van Winkle, with none to bid him welcome. The story then reverts to the year 1917, when he enlisted in the great war, and pictures the tragic moments through which he lived. There are some slight inconsistencies in the vigorous war scenes, but the effect of the whole is one of great realism.

The Story.

Captain Oscar Krug, in "Behind the Door," is a German-American of middle age, living in a small seacoast village in Maine. He is in love with Alice Morse, and has a rival in the person of a bank cashier. When the United States enters the war Krug is set upon by the citizens of the village because of his German parentage, although he has always been loyal to this country. He fights a hand-to-hand battle with his traducers and wins the respect of Bill Tavish, whom he whips in the combat.

Prior to enlisting as a captain in the navy, Krug marries Alice. She follows him after he leaves, owing to her father's displeasure over the marriage. Alice succeeds in boarding the same vessel with her husband. During the first voyage the vessel is sunk by a submarine and Krug and his wife are the sole survivors. They float for days upon the surface of the sea in a small boat, when a submarine is again sighted. They appeal to this for aid, but the captain of the U-boat takes the wife and leaves Krug to perish.

Krug regains the small boat and is afterwards rescued. He lives only with the thought of future revenge. Time brings this to him when the submarine is afterward sunk and he makes a prisoner of the commander. Krug carries out a terrific revenge, after wining and dining this individual and learning the sad fate of his wife.

"The Great Air Robbery"

Six-Part Universal Production Presents Marvelous Melodrama in Midair.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IT would be easy to exhaust the supply of superlatives in describing a melodrama such as this six-part Universal production, entitled "The Great Air Robbery." The highest praise possible for a subject of the kind would perhaps not be overstating things, for it is full of genuine thrills from start to finish. It really anticipates modern conditions somewhat, as it presupposes the establishment of a government transcontinental aerial mail service. This, of course, has not yet been accomplished, but it might be to all intents and purposes so far as this story is concerned, for the intrepid aerial performers go right along as though it were a fact.

In this pioneer film of its kind, instead of a stage coach robbery we have the actual holdup of a government airplane in midair. The accompanying story is full of interest. The performers, particularly the aviators, do some amazing stunts, both on the ground and above it.

The photographic effects are wonderfully sharp and clear. The spectator has almost the feeling of having participated in some of the splendid dashes over towns and cities and mountain tops. Much expert camera work is in evidence in getting the more startling effects.

Francelia Billington and Carmen Phillips play the feminine roles. The aviators are portrayed by Lieut. O. L. Locklear, Allan Forrest and Ray Ripley. In addition, a large cast of airmen appear. The government mail station and the night photographic effects are deserving of special mention.

The Story.

Wallie Mason, Larry Cassidy and Chester Van Arland in "The Great Air Robbery" are three aviators, with headquarters at a government aerial mail station. Larry and Wallie are pals. The latter is addicted to drink and Wallie proves his loyalty to him by going up and rescuing him in madair. Van Arland is the head of a secret order known as the Death Head Squardon. All three of these men are fascinated by a girl named Beryl, who lives on an adjoining estate.

Larry and Wallie are given a week's vacation, which they spend at a nearby club for aviators. While there Wallie drinks considerably and while intoxicated gets into an altercation with Van Arland over a medal he had given Beryl. Van Arland cuts cards and gets Wallie into his debt. He then proposes to return both the medal and the note if Wallie will assist the Death Head Squadron in robbing the aerial mail.

Wallie weakly allows himself to be drawn into this crime, which is carried out. Beryl and Larry learn of Wallie's participation and try to save him. But in the chase instituted by the government air police Wallie is killed. Larry brings Beryl safely to earth after she had been kidnapped in an airplane by Van Arland. He also makes the latter prisoner.

AFTER watching the spectators in two moving picture theatres grin with delight at the comic business in "The Garage," and hearing the hearty outbursts of laughter that greeted both showings of the latest Paramount-Arbuckle comedy the reviewer's task is the pleasant one of stating that for refreshing novelty of theme and all-around entertaining qualities the picture is among the best directed by the heavyweight comedian with the expansive smile and the quick sense of humor. Roscoe's chief helper in keeping the fun on the jump is the lightly bounding and seemingly unbreakable "Buster" Keaton. This pair of reckless but always resourceful knockabout comedians do a series of falls, spins and bounces on and from a lightning gaited turntable in the garage that literally jolts the laughs from the beholder.

Things get underway with a high-speed action when Roscoe is discovered shining the windows of an auto, and the entire comedy moves right along with never a let-up. Even the ancient and once well loved Ford joke is brought in from the scrap heap and made to perform new and enterprising service in the amusement line. The plot—or rather, what stands for one—hints at a love affair between the pretty daughter of the garage owner and a handsome youth of the town. Roscoe, as the chief deckhand of the establishment, is also in love with the same girl, and spends most of his time making it hot for his rival. There are also merry doings connected with the town fire department, of which Roscoe and "Buster" are the most energetic if not most efficient members.

Comments

CHICKEN A LA CABARET (Fox Sunshine Comedy).—A laughable two-reel comic, with a whirlwind finish that will capture any audience. The number was directed by Hampton Del Ruth and features Chester Conklin and others. The police force and city officials are portrayed in good burlesque fashion and the big trouble starts at a benefit given in a cabaret. The high diving and the burning cabin are strong features.

"A ROMAN SCANDAL" (Christie Special).—Another of those "behind-the scenes" stories. This comedy is one of the funniest of the lot. It burlesques the arena scene from "Quo Vadis" and, while the business with a fake bull is not at all new, it gets as many laughs as ever. A company of barnstormers are supposed to go on strike in the middle of a performance and a number of local amateurs are prevailed upon to furnish the show, which they do in more ways than one.

THE ROARING VOLCANO (Universal), Chapter 9 of "The Great Radium Mystery."—Gloria and Bob emerge from the shattered cabin without serious injuries. They are both pursued by the Buzzard and his men. Fierce fighting episodes occur, with men shooting in the open. Some splendid scenic views appear in this instalment. There is also a thrilling climax, when the lovers are suspended over a live volcano from a bridge of rope, manipulated by the Buzzard.

CAUGHT AT THE END (Universal), Dec. 15.—Chapter 10 of "The Great Radium Mystery." Another lively adventure instalment. Gloria and Bob are rescued from their dangerous position above the volcano by Nada, dressed as the mysterious stranger. They are once more in peril on a high railroad trestle, where the Buzzard and his gang have tied them, but they escape with their lives. The stunts in this are cleverly handled.

PERILS OF DOOM (Universal).—Chapter 11 of "The Great Radium Mystery." This opens with the rescue of Gloria and Rob from the mine shaft by means of a rope ladder strung down the side of the mountain. Nada, who has repeatedly assisted them, proves her loyalty by restoring the radium, the sheepskin and the deed, but these are later stolen by the Buzzard. The number is one of picturesque scenic effects and good action.

WEBS OF DECEIT (Pathe).—Chapter 9 of "The Black Secret." This pictures further exciting adventures of Evelyn and McKay in the forest after the death of Alexander Grey. The latter's sweetheart, discovering McKay's deception, directs them into certain peril. Evelyn is captured by German troops at the close and threatened with crucifixion.

THE INN OF DREAD (Pathe).—Chapter 10 of "The Black Secret." Evelyn and McKay are saved from death at the hands of German soldiers in the forest by the sudden appearance of a detachment of French riflemen. The next scenes, which are of an exciting nature, occur in an inn, where Frederick Vaux again appears and complicates matters. Evelyn wants to believe in him, but appearances make it more and more evident that he is a spy. The number contains much intense action.

A LUCKY DOG'S DAY (Century), Dec. 10.—A two-reel comic, by Bill Watson. This features two quarelling married couples and a trained dog. The big feature of the subject is the moving of a bungalow down a city street and then into the ocean. This is a fine novelty, and accompanied by the usual knockabout humor, should have wide appeal.

PATHE REVIEW, NO. 32.—A unique and instructive feature of this number is that picturing various important lighthouse stationed on the Atlantic coast. The opening tinted scenes from Lake Thun, Switzerland, are also very fine. Other features include "slow" camera athletic stunts and an interesting series of alligator pictures by Dr. Ditmars.

GHARLIE GETS A JOB (Universal), Dec. 31.—A two-reel comic, featuring Charlie of the Orient. This young Chinaman is cultivating some amusing tricks and is funnier than usual in this subject. The "Noblity Dinner" is extremely laughable. The humor is rough but entirely passable and will amuse non-critical audiences immensely.

TAILOR MAID, (Universal).—A clever little plot is worked out in this number, which features Billy Mason and Neva Gerber. Billy is a tailor and borrows Mr. Jarr's dress clothes, and while he is out walking meets Mrs. Jarr's maid, wearing the garments of her mistress. Circumstances force them to appear as Mr. and Mrs. Jarr, with humorous consequences. This stronger than the average comedy.

THE BERTH OF A NATION (Fox).—A typical Mutt and Jeff animated, picturing them as a pair of Pullman porters. The adventures in the sleeping car are very amusing.

ADAM AND EVE A LA MODE (Rainbow), Jan. 7.—A comic number in two reels. This opens with some conventional flirtations in a park, with the usual knockabout situations, falling in the lake, etc. The burlesque classic dances in the second reel are the main feature, and a large cast of pretty girls participates. This approaches vulgarity at times, but has been

THE LINE RUNNERS (Western), Jan. 3.—A highly picturesque two-reel subject, by Norman Dwan. This abounds in melodramatic action, picturing the rounding up of a gang of smugglers in a country resembling the Grand Canyon. The hero, a secret service man, appears first as a ne'er-do-well, who later demonstrates his ability and courage. There is the usual love story. A good subject of the elemental type.

Projection Department

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Good Work in Newark

RECENTLY we, at the request of C. W. Johnson, who has charge or general supervision of matters pertaining to projection in all Fox theatres, in company with Will C. Smith, General Manager Nicholas Power Company, journeyed to the wilds of Newark to investigate claims of the Fox Terminal Theatre to excellence in projection results.

Mr. Johnson is a very capable man. Aside from his penchant for placing projection rooms up where the stars just barely miss their ceilings (real stars, we mean, not the film sort—they never miss the projection room) we admire him for his ability.

Considering some of the Fox theatre projection room locations (City Theatre, New York City, for instance), Mr. Johnson has achieved truly remarkable results.

Results Would Be Better.

We hold, however, that those results would be still very much improved were the projection room in better location.

But to get back to our knitting: the Terminal, Newark, has recently been remodeled and changed from vaudeville-pictures to straight pictures.

The projection room is at the rear of the top gallery (Johnson's weak point). It is fair as to size, but has no ventilation other than by air entering from the auditorium.

Nathan Zapol, projectionist, was in charge at the time of my visit and his work was very good. I found him in a dark room at the observation port, where he should be, watching his screen.

Interior Dark Green.

The room interior is painted dark green. Two Powers Six B are used and on them are Extra Lite shutters, from which Mr. Johnson has removed the "filler" substituting what is presumably colored gelatine. The color is medium blue.

We will speak of this at greater length further on. There are three sources of power available, viz., two inductors for supplying emergency A C at arc, a Ft. Wayne (G. E.) series arc motor generator set taking power from 220 lines, and another taking its power from 550 D. C.

The Terminal is not likely to shut down from lack of power. Fifty-five to sixty amperes are used at the arc.

And now as to the screen. It is of Mr. Johnson's own construction, coated with a paint of some sort which he himself mixes. The foundation is plain six ounce duck.

It is painted on the back with a special paint, blue in color. Johnson says he gives the screen several coats, and does it all in one night, which would indicate the presence of some very rapid drying agent, even though the surface be a water color, which I do not understand it to be.

But anyhow the results witnessed were remarkable. First, the light was a brilliant blue-white. Now just how much of this is due to the insertion of blue in the revolving shutter and how much to the screen surface I cannot say.

It does, however, seem reasonable that the considerable amount of blue light reaching the screen between exposures may have the optical effect of whitening the light and if it does this desirable thing would be accomplished without any loss in brilliancy.

No Eye Strain.

But a still more remarkable thing was that I sat within ten feet of a seventeen-foot picture without appreciable eye strain, and the definition at that distance was truly remarkable. There was practically no "fuzziness" at all and details of the picture stood out quite sharply.

Johnson claims this as due to the screen. I doubt it because I cannot see how that could be. Still, the result was there and the lenses were just the ordinary run of projection lenses and—there you are.

Still another point is that even at a very acute angle of view there was apparently no fade-away at all.

The screen is not, Mr. Johnson says, expensive and certainly it does deliver the goods marvelously well.

I would advise those interested to journey to Newark and cast their eyes over the screen, remembering that the projection angle is steep and that not to more than sixty amperes are used.

View the picture from all parts of the house and then tell us your opinions.

Projectionist Zapol belongs to Newark Local Union 244. The man who works the other shift is named J. Hagel. He also, I believe, belongs to 244.

Union Adopts Scale

S. V. Haigler, whose union labeled letterhead declares him to be a projectionist and a member of local union 264, Newport News, Va., sends in a subscription and remarks:

Local Union 264 has negotiated a new minimum scale for the incoming year.

We believe it to be one of the best in this section of the country. It is as follows: Carpenter, thirty-five dollars a week; electrician, thirty dollars; projectionists, thirty dollars; flymen, thirty dollars; grips, two dollars and a half per performance; lamp operators, same. Extra men and time, sixty-five cents per hour.

Newport News is one of the best little theatrical towns in the state, and the new scale represents a raise of more than fifty per cent. Every theatre employs union projectionists, musicians and stagehands.

Glad to Hear From Newport News.

Glad to hear from Newport News and Local 264. But let me give you this to think about. You have secured a fifty per cent. increase. This will meet the increased cost of living, let us hope, and maybe leave something over, though not very much.

However, don't you agree with me that it is the duty of Local 264 to appreciate the improved conditions by seeking to improve the service its members give? If the manager, after willingly or unwillingly, granting a substantial increase in wages sees no inclination on the part of the men to give better, more efficient service, it will be harder to move him next time than it would be if he saw the men gave practical appreciation of improved conditions and better wages by trying to give better, more efficient service.

Good Business Policy.

Mind you, brother Haighler, I am not saying, or even intimating, that you men are not doing the very thing I am suggesting. Most likely you are, but in event that item is being overlooked it would be good business policy for your local to get busy. Don't you think so? My compliments to your members. Maybe I'll be able to get down that way some day and pay you a visit. Hope so, anyhow.

Walter Murray Passes Away

Walter Murray, an old time Philadelphia projectionist, active worker in the I. A. and personal friend of the editor of the department has passed into the Great Beyond.

The news of his passing was a shock. Walter was a staunch, loyal friend. We are grieved that he has boarded the Phantom Train that will not come back. Perhaps, sometime, somewhere in the shades of Afterward we may again be privileged to clasp his hand. Who shall say?

To the dear ones left behind we tender sincere sympathy. Had we but known in time it would have been indeed a privilege to bow our head over the silent clay, and bid a last, sad farewell to him whom we were glad to hail by that sacred title Friend?

New Invention

Dudley T. Blanchard, Superintendent of the National Film Corporation's laboratories, has invented and has the first model of a film inspection machine in shape for demonstration. The machine is claimed to be suitable for both exchange and projection room work.

In the illustration the inventor is seen using the device for matching "shots," the proper placing of titles, inserts, etc., without the formality of projecting the picture on the screen.

According to Mr. Blanchard this work can be performed with rapidity and accuracy. "Daddy" Paley, one of the pioneer cameramen on the west coast, built the machine under Mr. Blanchard's supervision.

We shall be very glad to have the opportunity of examining the machine, when the time comes, and will then express our own views as to its utility.

As to Rectifiers

Fred C. Shivers, Lexington, Nebraska, comes in with the following:

After ten years of steady grinding I am butting into the department seeking information.

Is it practical to take an old field regulating handle and attach through the slate board of an old style G. E. rectifier so that it may be used as an amperage regulator without breaking the arc?

To accomplish this it would be necessary to have two taps in contact for an instant when making a change. Would this cause damage to the rectifier?

Is it possible for you to tell me the amperage the various taps will give, using 220 volt supply? Lead 32 is on tap 14 and lead 34 on tap 31. What is my amperage? One more question and I am done. When a tube gets so old that there is a deposit of black soot on top of mercury, which same has fallen from walls of tube, is the tube then working as it should?

So Long As It Works.

So long as the tube continues to operate at all it is all right, though its amperage output may, or may not be somewhat reduced. As to that I do not know, though I think not appreciably.

Yes, provided the regulator handle has sufficient metal to carry the current, that it makes and maintains ample electrical contact with the "button" to carry current without sparking or heating, and that you do the wiring correctly, there is no reason why the plan will not work.

In fact, just such a scheme was described in the department, not so long ago, by a projectionist who had installed it.

The momentary contact of the bar with two contacts will do no damage.

Not "Butting In."

As to your "butting in," why you are not doing anything of the sort. The department is yours just as much as it is mine. Glad to help you any time.

By the way, I nearly overlooked the amperage matter. No, I cannot tell you exactly what amperage any one contact would give.

Age and condition of rectifier and any variation from 220 in the supply would change amperage, so that calculations could not be made with accuracy.

Rheostats in Parallel

R. L. Daniel, Rockport, Kentucky, orders lens charts and asks:

We are using American Standard projectors. Have 250-volt D. C. which we take through two 110-volt rheostats connected in series.

Could I connect them in parallel and have better success at the arc? Also I cannot get my projection and stereopticon lens together.

Certainly you cannot connect two 110-volt rheostats in parallel (multiple) on 220-volt supply. The grids or coils of a 110-volt rheostat are calculated to carry just the number of amperes that 110 volts will force through the resistance they as a whole offer.

If a 110-volt rheostat were hitched to a 220-volt supply singly (which is exactly what you do when you connect two of them in parallel) the doubled electrical pressure would force so much current through that the coils or grids would be very quickly heated white hot and melted.

Order a Handbook.

I would strongly advise you order a handbook at once, or if you already have one, that you study "Resistance," pages 34 to 48 and "Resistance As Applied to the Projection Circuit," pages 322 to 342.

You have not told me the capacity of the rheostats. Two hundred and twenty volts will force through the full capacity of one of the rheostats when two 110-volt rheostats of equal capacity are connected in series.

Using 220-volt current through rheostats is very wasteful. If you get fifty amperes at the arc you would be using 11,000 watts of energy and utilizing only about 2,700 in the actual production of light.

For reasons see "Rheostats Extremely Wasteful, page 333 of the handbook.

As to the lens matter you will have to explain more fully what you mean before I can help you.

As to Reels

One of the trials of the projection room is the reel with warped, bent-up, buckled, decrepit, dented sides. Such a reel does more actual damage to films than all other causes combined. The reason for the bad condition of reel sides is largely found in the cheapness of construction.

Designed to carry valuable films, which are delicate and easily damaged, it is constructed with cheapness in view rather than stability. Cheapness in first cost and lightness of weight to save shipping charges, is the slogan.

Such Construction Expensive.

Allow me to suggest that such construction is expensive in the end—expensive to all concerned, except the producer, who naturally wants to sell all the prints possible and weeps no bitter tears when a film which should last six months, at the very least, is utterly destroyed in sixty days.

Reels should be (A) all metal, with a five-inch hub. (B) Of metal having sufficient thickness to withstand any ordi-

THEATRE LIGHTING

AUDITORIUM: X-Ray indirect lighting with ceiling fixtures, coves, cornices or wall boxes produces illumination results demanded in the finest auditoriums. The newest effects in color lighting are satisfactorily secured only with X-Ray indirect illumination.

STAGE: The powerful X-Ray reflector, with color screen, has revolutionized stage lighting methods. Better color values and light control are to be had with this system; with reduced current.

EXTERIOR: The theatre front must be flood-lighted with X-Ray projectors to show its beauty at night. Outline lighting with studded lamps is an expensive way to hide the theatre beautiful; flood-lighting with powerful X-Ray projectors an economical way to enhance its beauty.

nary strain or blow without damage, same to be (C) embossed not less than one-quarter of an inch so that the sides will be stiff and rigid, resisting all ordinary bending stresses.

Such a reel would be heavy and would require more space in shipping; also a deeper magazine. Well, what of it? All this would be offset a dozen times by added protection to the film it carried, and by lessening of the present damage done by rewinding at high speed with crooked reel sides.

It would seem that if some machine manufacturer would bring out such a reel, with a magazine of sufficient depth to carry it, which need have no change to also accommodate the ordinary present-day reel, the inherent common sense of the industry would be appealed to to such an extent that it would be universally adopted in comparatively short order.

As to shipping, such a reel would have half an inch more thickness and maybe a pound more weight. It would require machine magazines having half or perhaps five-eighths of an inch more depth.

The Bugbear Is—

Of course the bugbear of the matter is that such reels could not be used in present-day magazines. This would mean that during the period of change to other magazines, the films would have to be wound onto ordinary projection room reels. This would be something of a nuisance to the projectionist, but the gain would far more than justify it. Present-day reels are an abomination, a nuisance and an outrage on common sense. Designed to carry from one to two hundred dollars' worth of films, one can bend the side of a bran new reel of the very best make all out of shape with ONE FINGER. Does that spell ordinary common sense?

Waddy Y' Know About That?

While in a large Eastern city recently, we called at a theatre, supposed to be the best in the city. Mounting to the projection room we found the right hand projector just being shut down on the change over. On the front wall, immediately over and not two inches from the top of the observation port hung what must have been a forty or fifty watt Mazda, blazing away full power.

We asked the projectionist: "Why in heaven's name do you do that? If you have no respect for your screen result, surely you ought to have some for your eyes." His reply was: "Oh, I don't usually have that light burning. I was just reading an account of the strike (steel strike was meant) in the evening paper."

While the Projectionist Read.

An audience which must have paid close to a thousand dollars was being given the screen result produced by a motor, while the projectionist read the evening paper, presumably occasionally glacing at what he could see of the screen with that light where it was.

Suppose a few of you express your opinion of such proceedings. I don't mean that you are to roast the man.

That would probably do no good, because the man who does such things is usually impervious to anything except a cut in his wages.

Just tell us what you think the result of such practice would be if it represented a general condition.

Suggestion for Rewinder

P. Darlyshire, Toronto, P. Q., offers the following suggestion as to making a geared-down rewinder.

After attending your lecture in Toronto and hearing what you had to say about the evils of rapid rewinding I feel it my duty to offer, for the benefit of brother projectionists, the following method for solving the geared-down rewinder problem.

Get a set of Motiograph rewinders and change the gears. Put on a six-inch pulley and then remove the wings and guard of a sixteen-inch fan and equip it with a small pulley.

Using the fan motor it will require six minutes to rewind a single and ten minutes to rewind a double reel.

It is easy to adjust the tension by means of the leather strap provided on Motiograph rewinders. Any of the Toronto brothers are welcome to inspect mine at any time.

Can Follow Meaning.

Brother Darlyshire's description lacks detail in some spots, but I can pretty well follow his meaning, and so, I think, can you.

By changing gears I presume he means to reverse their position, placing the small one where the large one is and vice versa. He should have given exact diameter of motor pulley.

However, many thanks, just the same.

The suggestion will doubtless prove to be of value to those having the required fan motor and rewinder. Darlyshire is projectionist at the Belmont Theatre, 1217 St. Clair avenue, Toronto.

Two Harmonious Aims

A young man in Seabright, New Jersey, who still has five years to go before he can vote, has ambitions and ideas as to his future career. In the course of a letter asking questions as to how to go about becoming a competent projectionist, he remarks: "I have two plans in view when I become old enough. One is to become an artist and the other is to become a projectionist."

It is very likely the two are much more closely allied than the boy thinks they are, for, as we have many times pointed out, to correctly reinterpret action on the screen it is absolutely necessary that one have at least some of the elements of the artist in his composition.

This is perhaps not so much true now, except in isolated cases, but will be when the time comes, as it surely will come, when realistic action on the screen will be of paramount importance.

Auerbach Joins Projectionists

John Auerbach, senior member of the firm of Auerbach, Rogers & Pollak, 60 Broadway, dealers in investment securities, has joined the American Projection Society, a body of high-class projectionists who maintain club rooms on Broadway at Columbus Circle.

Mr. Auerbach is known to department readers through his excellent contributions. He is a man of wealth who has made projection his hobby.

The American Projection Society may well feel honored to have him for a member, because Mr. Auerbach knows more about the technique of projection than does a large majority of the men who project pictures professionally.

How the Moving Picture Exhibitor May Illuminate His Theatre Artistically

WHEN lighting his picture theatre an exhibitor has three objects in view: Making the front of his house stand out in contrast to its surroundings sufficiently to attract the passers-by; making his lobby as much of a fairyland as possible and illuminating the house itself in such a manner that it will be attractive between pictures, by a system, the intensity of which may be reduced during screening to a degree of illumination sufficient for his patrons' safety and comfort, and yet in no way distracting their attention from the screen or spoiling projection effects.

As an illustration of how well these results may be accomplished, the systems offered by the National X-Ray Company of New York and Chicago will serve most admirably.

For the outside of the house a system of flood lighting may be employed.

For the interior the exhibitor has four general systems to choose from. Any one of these may be utilized singly or a combination with any of the other systems. These three types of illumination consist of hanging fixtures, cove lighting, side lighting and illumination from portable fixtures.

Based on Indirect Principle.

Each and all of these systems are based upon the indirect principle, in which light from a concealed source is thrown by powerful reflectors to th ceiling and walls and from these reflected and diffused throughout the interior to be illuminated. The ceiling thus becomes a secondary source of light and should, therefore, be so decorated as to become an efficient reflector in order that the maximum quantity of light may be reflected and diffused.

For this purpose, ceilings finished in matte white, light cream or ivory have been found most satisfactory. The matte finish is far higher in reflecting efficiency combined with eye comfor than a glossy finish.

Two Types of Fixtures.

Hanging fixtures may be divided into two types. The one which is most suitable for the interior of the house proper being furnished with an opaque bowl i which several bulbs and individual reflectors are installed. From this type of fixture all the light is reflected towards the ceiling and from there reflected and diffused.

Another type of ceiling fixture consists of a glass bowl, in the upper part of which are mounted lamps so arranged that none of the light passes through the bowl itself. The latter is illuminated by a single light, the illumination from which serves merely to show the beauty of the fixture.

This latter fixture is more appropriate to the lobby than the interior of the house.

Cove and cornice lighting produces excellent results and is an ideal method of displaying the architecture of the interior and its efficiency ranks about equal with that of ceiling fixture, over which it possesses the advantage of apparently increasing the dimensions of the interior which it illuminates.

Diagram "A" explains the arrangement of the lights for cornice and cove illumination.

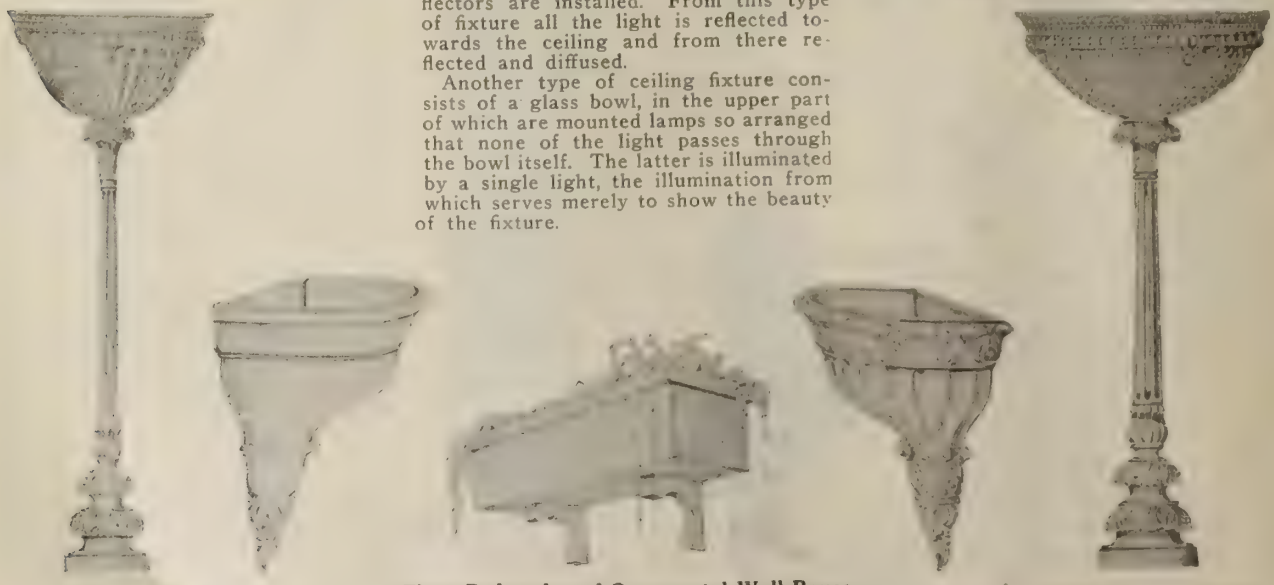
points, when it is not practical to have the cove in which the illumination may be concealed continuous.

The design and shape of this reflector permits its being placed directly against the wall without the light splashing along the side wall above the unit.

For lobby use, probably the most decorative effect is that obtained from floor pedestal portables supplying indirect lighting.

The pedestal itself may be made as



Floor Pedestals and Ornamental Wall Boxes.

These fixtures may be treated to harmonize with the decorative scheme of the theatre.

elaborate as desired and to harmonize with the general lobby scheme of decoration. The light from this can be arranged to illuminate the entire lobby and the bowl which serves as a light bed, may be filled with flowers, completely disguising the source from which the illumination is derived.

Another Decorative Method.

Another decorative method of illumination, particularly adapted to the interior is the wall box system. In this system the light source is concealed in wall boxes which may be filled with flowers. These boxes are built to accommodate from one to three lamps and arranged along the walls, and the light reflected to the ceiling and there are no centrally hung fixtures to distract the eye.

The fixtures of all of these systems are adapted to the installation of two or more sets of bulbs of varying power that may be switch controlled to furnish any desired degree of illumination from high intensity to just a low degree of illumination.

Mr. Hitchins Suggests Test Laboratories for Producers

WE are in receipt of the following communication from the director of the Ansco research laboratory and will be glad to receive comments on same from those of our readers who are interested in the suggestion:

Moving Picture World:

The motion picture industry probably uses more photographic material than any other branch of applied photography, yet there has been no serious attempt on the part of any of the large producers or finishers to institute a scientifis system of testing the materials which enter into the production of motion pictures. Photographic materials, even the best of them, will vary in quality.

The negative emulsion will vary in speed, color, sensitiveness, contrast and density-giving power and rate of development. The positive emulsion will vary in contrast, gradation, scale and rendering power. The various chemicals used in compounding developers very often vary greatly in quality and performance, and the same thing holds true for all the materials used in the production of motion pictures.

Research Laboratories Advocated.

Many of the great producing and finishing houses in these days are putting up elaborate buildings for the production of motion pictures, but one hears very little mentioned of research laboratories in connection with such enterprises.

It would undoubtedly be to the advantage of the motion picture art if the producers could be prevailed upon to introduce a department devoted to the testing and standardizing of their materials and methods. It would result in a higher quality of photography and greater uniformity in the product.

For testing negative emulsions a Hurter and Driffield equipment would be necessary. This is an instrument for producing a series of graded exposures on the strip of negative film to be tested.

After Development.

After development the resulting densities are read on a photometer and plotted in the form of a curve. From the curve obtained it is possible to interpret the character and performance of the emulsion under consideration.

A modification of the H. & D. system can be used for testing positive emulsions and a graphic representation of their performance obtained.

For testing color sensitiveness some form of spectrograph is used, resulting in the graphic representation of the color performance of the emulsion, the maximum and minimum of sensitiveness being shown.

For Testing Developers.

The Hurter & Driffield system may also be used for testing the performance of various developing agents and for controlling the tank developing solutions. A small spectroscopic and photometric equipment can be used in connection with the testing of studio light sources, the recording of the various dyes used in tinting positive film, and numerous other things where light and color are used and an expression of their value needed.

Results Justify Expense.

It is true that men who are competent to install such an equipment and operate it in a scientific manner command a high salary; in fact, when such a department is installed in connection with motion picture production the head of it should become a valuable technical executive, who might be termed "Scientfiic Director." The improvement in results would more than repay the cost of equipment and salary of such a man.

This letter is written solely in the hope that you will publish it and that some of the producers and finishers may have their interest aroused in the formation of a scientific testing department. It would give me the greatest pleasure to advise upon the equipment and installation of such testing departments purely as a matter of interest in the progress of the motion picture art.

Very truly yours,
ALFRED B. HITCHINS,
Director Ansco Research Laboratory.

Do You Own a Heating Plant? Or Does a Coal Consuming Refrigerator Own You?

IN THE dear dead days when coal cost about seven dollars per ton and one could order a few tons by telephone and hang up the humble coal merchant indefinitely, almost any sort of a heating plant went, and whether it consumed more or less fuel did not cause unusual worriment on the part of its proprietor.

If one installed a hot air system, it looked like economy to dig a shallow cellar and use a lot of coal to force the heated air through an almost horizontal flue. Now, it pays to dig more deeply into the earth and less into the coal bin.

The average steam or hot water plant was installed under the front of the house and, if the floor sloped down to the screen, the radiators at the screen end were either too high to give the best results or required excessive heat to insure proper circulation.

Cost the Owner More.

The radiator relief valve most popular with heating contractors cost about fifteen cents each, wholesale, to said contractor. What it cost in extra coal consumption to the owner of the heating plant was considerably more.

A heating plant was a heating plant to the average exhibitor and why he should spend from one hundred to one thousand dollars more for a real equipment than for another that looked like one was a problem that he did not always attempt to solve.

Did the heating contractor spend any sleepless nights in trying to make the matter plain? In a majority of cases he emphatically did not. Why should he worry? He would not be obliged to pay for the fuel shovelled winter after winter into the capacious maw of the refrigerating plant that was drafted for heating purposes.

Easier to Let It Go at That.

Anyway, the appropriation for heating purposes called for a certain sum. It was easier to let it go at that and give the most that he could for the money and let it go at that and pass on to the next job. When a yell materialized there was the attendant, engineer or the quality of the coal to whom the buck could be passed.

And it was not always that the plant was fundamentally wrong. It was often entirely too small but doing its best, like a tin Lizzie trying to pull a ten-ton truck out of the mud. A larger size would have done the stunt but no one wanted to scare off the owner who had placed the order by telling him that estimated heating capacity and the real thing vary considerably according to circumstances.

Had He Only Been Told.

The average heating plant manufacturer even then turned out equipment that would save fuel and give heat satisfactorily and the average exhibitor would have been willing to have made a larger initial expenditure and cashed in on his fuel saving had he been told the how and why.

But, then as now, the manufacturer spent all his educational ammunition in shooting at architects and heating contractors and trusted that these would spend their time and effort in educating the ultimate consumer. Once in a while, he would blow himself to imposing space in some publication of national circulation that hit most people when they did not want heating plants. When they did, the rag man had beat them to the issue containing the announcement and the good work was all off.

Are Still Wondering.

And they are still for the most part utilizing this ancient method and wondering why it is so hard to educate you exhibitors via the architectural-heating contractor line of thought transmission.

Take a Hand Yourselves.

So, I guess that you exhibitors will have to take a hand in the game yourselves. Many of you have built houses recently, some of you have doped out mighty good systems that have delivered the goods. Others of you are hotter under the collar than the alleged patron warmers that are occupying cellar space in your houses.

Suppose we institute a forum for a discussion of the subject? If you have a heating plant that behaves itself as a heating plant should, tell us just as much about it as you can. Tell us how it is installed, who made it and all about such accessories as you have attached to it for its betterment.

If You've Been Stung.

If you have been stung and are tied up to a silent partner of the coal operators, tell us about that also. It will keep some brother exhibitor from making the same break. What you will learn from the other fellows' methods will be worth more than the effort that it will require to tell your own story. Don't hesitate to praise and don't hesitate to damn—but tell distinctly why you do either.

Never mind fancy writing. Give the facts. And address them to "Better Equipment" Department, Moving Picture World.

Famous Players and Balaban and Katz Are Strong for the Simplex Projector

ONE of the many recent visitors to the Simplex factory was Lennard F. Hoffman, manager of the maritime offices of the Perkins Electric Company, Canada. He reports the recent installation of two Mazda motor-driven Simplex projectors in the screening rooms of the Famous Players exchanges in St. John's, Toronto and Winnipeg.

The adaptability of the Simplex Mazda for screening purposes, together with the fact that the Simplex is used generally by the Famous Players organization, prompted Mr. McIntyre, the representative for the concern in question, to equip each Canadian branch office with this projector.

Mr. Hoffman reports that big business is done by the Perkins Electric Company, and included in his statement the fact that a particularly large and well known theatrical circuit in Canada is being Simplexized.

Mr. Hoffmn is a former New York City boy and is remembered by old-timers for his activities with the Kinemacolor Company, in whose interests he traveled from coast to coast from 1908 to 1912, and his connections with the Edison and Renfax Talking Pictures. Mr. Hoffman has recently returned from four years' war service in Europe, where he went in 1915 with the 38th Regiment of the American Legion branch of the Canadian forces.

Chicago Exhibitors Consult Simplex.

Balaban and Katz, two of Chicago's prominent exhibitors, with five of their staff, have been in consultation with Edwin S. and E. M. Porter and the Simplex engineering staff.

The Chicago party of seven went into details of the planning and equipping of the projection rooms of their two new proposed theatres, one of which is to be known as the Tivoli, at Sixty-third Street and Cottage Grove Avenue, and the other as the Capitol, at State

Remembered Newman Installation.

Bearing in mind the success which attended the Newman Theatre projection room at Kansas City, which, by the way, has become known as one of the finest in the world, the Balaban & Katz Company decided to follow along the same lines, and with that end in view they brought with them to the Simplex factory their architect, builder, electrical engineer and several others interested in the construction of the new Katz houses.

The Balaban & Katz Company is at present operating two of Chicago's largest houses—the Riviera, at Broadway and Lawrence, and the Central Park, at Twelfth Street and Central Park Avenue, each of which is equipped with two type "S" Simplex projectors. Both these houses run daily from two o'clock in the afternoon until midnight, and the machine service under these conditions has been such as to prompt the installation of Simplexes in their chain of other Chicago theatres now operating, as well as those being planned.

Tell Us Your Troubles

WHENEVER any exhibitor or house manager runs up against a snag in the matter of equipment—its choice, use or installation; whenever you are in doubt as to just what you should do to make a new house attractive or improve an old one—ask the "Better Equipment" Department and we will dig up the dope for you. BUT don't forget to enclose a stamped return envelope with your inquiry.

Burger Joins Consolidated.

The Consolidated Portrait & Frame Company, of Chicago, manufacturers of Bilt-Rite lobby display frames, has added J. K. Burger, formerly purchasing agent of Famous Players-Lasky, to its staff as New York representative, with headquarters in the Grand Central Terminal Building.

Exhibitors realize that there is as much importance attached to the setting of the paper—the display equipment—as there is to the paper itself.

This accounts for the popularity of Bilt-Rite frames. No longer is correct lobby display considered an additional expense; rather is it looked on as a dividend-paying investment.

A Devry Show in a Hotel

A novel method of reaching the public was instituted by W. H. Bell, manager of the Equitable Film Corporation, at Kansas City on Christmas night. He gave a demonstration of the uses of the Devry portable projector at the Rockhill Manor, a fashionable family hotel. The Kansas City office has charge of the distribution of the machine in this territory.

About 100 persons attended the showing, which was conducted by A. A. Weaver, film department manager of the concern. Nine reels of matter showing the possibilities of the projector were run.

THE GREATEST ORGANIZATION OF POSTER ARTISTS AND POSTER PRINTERS IN THE WORLD

To the Industry in general:—

The poster is the one direct medium through which tickets are sold to the public. To that statement the exhibitor, the distributor, and the producer all agree, and when these three elements agree to anything concerning motion pictures it is certain to be true.

The better a poster is the more crowded the auditorium will be: a great poster is a tremendous asset; a poor one is a liability. An exhibitor has a definite and positive method whereby he can discover whether his posters are good, bad or indifferent. Check them up against the box-office receipts. This is the acid test, and there is no surer one.

It is the test by which the RITCHEY poster has been tried time and time again, and the tabulated results prove the RITCHEY poster to be the greatest poster possible to execute. The exhibitor who is not getting them is losing a large percentage of money to which he is justly entitled.

A realization of that fact should lead to an insistent demand for the greatest motion picture poster made anywhere in the world—the RITCHEY poster.

James V. Ritchey.

A picture without a motive; a moral, a plot*

YET a picture that entertains delightfully, that makes you laugh, that brings back your childhood, that makes of you a boy or a girl again for a day, that brings to real life the beloved Huckleberry Finn and the other immortals of Mark Twain's quaint humor.

Do you know anybody that doesn't like Mark Twain? Well, here's a picture with an irresistible appeal for all lovers of Mark Twain—and that means just about the whole United States.

*"Persons attempting to find a motive in this narrative will be prosecuted; persons attempting to find a moral in it will be banished; persons attempting to find a plot in it will be shot."—Mark Twain.

Who was the man?

For him Milt Shanks gave up his honor, his freedom, the love of his wife, the respect of his dearly loved son and lived among the people he loved as a thing unclean. Why?

And in his hour of bitterest trial not one human soul spoke to him, and in all the United States just one man wrote to him.

Who was the man?

Dear Milt:

Lee's surrender ends it all. I cannot think of you without a sense of guilt, but it had to be. I alone know what you did and what you endured. I send you a flag. It is not new but you will prize it the more for that. I hope to shake your hand some day.

As long as human emotion shall endure—such is the life of "The Copperhead," a dramatic entertainment as eternal as time itself. Such an entertainment as made audience after audience rise to its feet in cheers at the end of the stage play. And without exaggeration, this picture drama contains the finest piece of acting ever seen on the screen.

To Exhibitors and Public

"WE'RE as glad as you are that '23½ Hours' Leave' was the big popular success it proved to be, and that many exhibitors found it the biggest box-office draw they've had. It's a pleasure to make a bow in a picture like that.

"We hope you'll find 'What's Your Husband Doing?' just as big a success. And we firmly believe you will. Mr. Ince has put in it the same spirit of youth, rollicking good humor and comedy that made our first starring venture so complete a success. Make a Holler!

You can't disappoint your audiences, no matter how much you promise for "Too Much Johnson."

It's criticism-proof!

Tell them it's the funniest screen comedy that you've had in a blue moon. Promise them the plot will tickle their laugh-plexus as it hasn't been tickled in years. Assure them that for full five reels the comedy doesn't let down once. And add that it's perfectly acted without a thing overdrawn or impossible in the whole story.

And you'll be telling the truth! For "Too Much Johnson" is the biggest laugh in pictures!

The ROBERT-MORTON
a reproduction of the Symphony Orchestra

Organ Supremacy

The successful introduction of the Robert-Morton Organ in the higher class theatres throughout the country has justified the genius of its builders.

The Robert-Morton Organ combines the majestic grandeur of the Pipe Organ with the variety of tone color produced by a full Symphony Orchestra—the ideal combination of musical expression for picture accompaniment.

Organists playing the Robert-Morton praise its unique construction, scientific blending of tone and ease of operation, enabling the performer to be in absolute harmony with the mood and action of the story.

Exhibitors interested in the economic feature of their music will find the Robert-Morton equally successful for solo work and its ability in filling out an orchestra.

THE four following pages contain reproductions of the four-page advertisement on Herbert Kaufman's Weekly that appeared in the December 27th issue of the Saturday Evening Post and in the January number of McClure's. "Herbert Kaufman is one of the great thought-moulders of our time—indeed I think he is the greatest."

Sir Arthur Pearson
England's great publisher and philanthropist

"Herbert Kaufman entered the Great War when Belgium did—and he has been in it ever since. He dedicated his pen to the service of Democracy. No man has fought harder or longer for the cause of human right."

Frederick L. Collins
Publisher of McClure's Magazine

I am undertaking a momentous service to the American theatre and to American journalism.

I am bringing America's highest-paid and widest-read author to the screen.

I am bringing to the motion picture theatre the largest audience commanded by any living personality.

Herbert Kaufman is the one writer of our generation who has everything essential to success on the screen.

He puts an epic in a couplet. He dramatizes Opportunity. He writes prose-poems like "The Dreamers" and "The Man Who Sneered at Santa Claus"—and little things like these!—

"Take a risk or take the count."

"Some men would get in oftener if they'd get out sooner."

"Christmas gifts don't count if they aren't brought down the chimney."

"Most roosters wear their crows too long and their spurs too short."

KLY

He can cram Plato and Mrs. Humphry Ward and Mark Twain and Santa Claus and the Russian Soviet and Mary Donovan's love affair into a few reels of fast-moving, interest-attracting, attention-holding motion picture entertainment!

And that's the kind of thing he will do as only he can do it—in Herbert Kaufman's Weekly.

Herbert Kaufman's Weekly will appear in every motion picture theatre that is fortunate enough to secure a Herbert Kaufman franchise.

To the millions of Herbert Kaufman admirers who will want to see Herbert Kaufman's Weekly—I say "Ask your theatre manager, and ask him now!"

To the thousands of exhibitors who will want to show Herbert Kaufman's Weekly—I say "See the nearest Select exchange man to-day—or wire."

"Mr. Herbert Kaufman has been an assistant to Secretary Lane in this work [Americanization] for the last year, giving up his own business and serving the Government without price. Mr. Kaufman is entitled to the thanks of all lovers of America."

Senator Kenyon
Chairman
Committee on Education & Labor
On the floor of the Senate,
October 27, 1919

"The country should rejoice that a man of such exceptional talents and pre-eminent sympathy with all good things, as Mr. Herbert Kaufman, has undertaken to give his views through the moving picture medium."

"Kaufman's editorials have made him famous wherever men of our speech hire or are hired. They seem to me of the finest, strongest, most helpful deliverances that have been penned 'since spoken word man's spirit stirred beyond his belly's need.'"

"Sympathy with mankind in all its lowest and highest manifestations is the keynote of Mr. Kaufman's writings. He sees into the heart of the man to whom he writes. He is keen and clear eyed."

"His message is very much to the point, straight from the shoulder, epigrammatic and brilliant. * * *"

NEW ORLEANS PICAYUNE
"As an editorial writer of international influence, Herbert Kaufman is perhaps the greatest individual force in shaping the world thought currents of today."

Herbert Kaufman's Weekly Page, published simultaneously by a nation-wide chain of newspapers, including the Philadelphia Public Ledger, the New York American, the Washington Star, the Boston Herald, the Indianapolis News and the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, has reached the largest audience in America.

And now—he brings this vast audience to the motion picture theatre.

"It may be doubted," says the Chicago Tribune, "if any man before him ever had so many readers in his own time."

The millions who have followed Herbert Kaufman during the past decade, subscribing to magazines and weeklies for his writings—searching through the great Sunday newspapers for his scathing indictments of social and national wrongs and his messages of inspiration and encouragement—will now find concentrated in their local theatre the full range of his unique genius.

PITTSBURG PRESS

"Herbert Kaufman, Special Assistant to the Secretary of the Interior, is known throughout both Europe and America as one of the most brilliant of living writers. He is a notable figure among the dollar-a-year men who have placed their talents and energies at the disposal of the Government."

DUBLIN DAILY EXPRESS

"He writes in a spirit of splendid Optimism, very stimulating to the reader nauseated by the wretched pessimism of many of our modern philosophers."

WASHINGTON STAR

And think! Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna"! What a vision of ineffable charm, of exquisite art, the mere words bring.

"THE FORTUNE HUNTER"

The Greatest, Most Human Production in the Annals of the Screen

Every fourth year since the Julian calendar was revised, the world has had an extra day. This happens to be one of those leap years. It is fitting that Vitagraph should commemorate the period with a leap-year picture—a film that actually, literally leaps forward to fine things.

"The Fortune Hunter" is the leap-year film. It is an awakening of love. It is a reveille to young hearts. It is a great, human revealment of romance. Earle Williams, the star, and Jean Paige, the leading woman, find here an epic poem for the expression of their art and charm.

The Metro-Loew Merger

BIG news was the announcement to the trade early in the week of the affiliation of Metro and Loew, Inc., through the absorption by the latter of the producing company. We have heard much recently of producers entering the exhibiting field, but in this case the rule is reversed. The result is the same. It means production and exhibition directed from a central source.

To the man in the street the combination would look like a good one from the standpoint of both of the two contracting parties. Metro is assured of an outlet for its productions and the Loew corporation has at its command a certain supply of pictures for its theatres. The only person who would seem to be justified in looking askance at the absorption is the independent exhibitor who casually or regularly shows Metro pictures and whose house is in the neighborhood of a Loew theatre. Mr. Rowland is at pains to set forth that the arrangement will in no way interfere with the independent showman, who, the Metro president declares, "will always be able to obtain Metro pictures in fair competition in the open market as heretofore."

The announcement that the company always will be in the field for the purchase of free-lance productions will provide cheer for the independent manufacturers. This means another competitor for the product of the man or men who choose to work for themselves rather than to make a contract alliance with a program builder.

The trend of the times is toward combination and centralization. Like it some of us may not; but it's a condition, not a theory.

Virgin Soil for Camera

THE story of the visit of Frederick Burlingham to the Suwanee River, told on another page of this issue by the explorer himself, is unusual aside from the genuine human interest it contains. It is worthy of note that this river, famous in song if not in story, was for the first time visited by a camera when Mr. Burlingham carried one there in December. It would be difficult to find any one who has not heard of the Suwanee — heard of it so frequently that no longer is it looked upon as an actuality, but rather regarded as a mythical stream.

If Mr. Burlingham can bring to us on the screen a measurable part of the charm that attaches to his telling of the story in words there will be no question of the place his picture will have in the hearts not only of Americans, but of men and women everywhere the song is known.

The visit to Suwanee has value, too, as demonstrating that all the spots of larger national interest may not previously have been swept by the camera—that there may be more "virgin soil" as yet untouched by the foot of the motion picture photographer.

Picture News Important

OUT in Cincinnati Harris P. Wolfberg has set in motion a propaganda that well may be taken up by picture men in other parts of the country. The movement had its origin in the campaign to lessen the demand for news print paper by cutting down the number of pages printed by the larger journals. As Mr. Wolfberg feared, among the first of the departments to be sacrificed was the one devoted to motion picture news. The exchangeman is making it his business to see that newspaper editors understand just how important motion picture news is to their readers.

One of Mr. Wolfberg's arguments is the comparative circulation of the leading national weekly and the combined distribution of the "fan" motion picture magazines in the territory covered by the dailies the editors of which he is trying to impress. He finds on the average where 100 persons buy the single publication for 5 cents that from 60 to 75 pay 20 cents to read magazines devoted to the screen. Therefore he declares it logical to believe there is a large proportion of the reading public which gladly will pay from 2 to 5 cents to find in the dailies news of screen doings. We commend the work of Mr. Wolfberg to our readers not only in Cincinnati, but throughout the country.

AS a battle cry for the industry in its campaign against the forces of Red revolution we suggest a paraphrase of another slogan not unknown to film fame: "Fewer and better inhabitants!"

Antonio Moreno goes "south" for the winter in his Vitagraph serial, "The Invisible Hand."

QUICK GLANCES AT

Holah Made President of Omaha Film Trade Board

THE Film Board of Trade in Omaha, Neb., concluded its first year last week and new officers were elected for 1920. The board more than proved its worth, says it members, and has contributed greatly to raising the standard of the industry in Iowa and Nebraska to a higher plane. Many exhibitors have expressed their appreciation of the activities of the board, say C. E. Holah, the new president.

The 1920 officers are president, C. E. Holah, manager of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, which is the Omaha First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchange; vice-president, C. L. Peavey, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange in Omaha; secretary, Leo Delaney, manager of the Vitagraph exchange in Omaha; treasurer, SamuelaMcIntyre, manager of the Metro exchange in Omaha. Additional members of the executive board are Sidney Meyers, manager of the Fox exchange in Omaha; Max Wintroub, manager of the Fontenelle States Right exchange in Omaha, and C. W. Taylor, manager of the Omaha Selznick-Select exchange.

A gold watch fob, bearing the insignia of the Film Board of Trade, was presented to Harry Graham, manager of the Pathe exchange in Omaha, who concluded his year's term as president of the board, and a testimonial of gratitude was sent to New York to L. A. Getzler, former secretary of the board.

Many More Picture Firms File Incorporation Papers

THERE is but little let-up in the numbed of concerns in New York State who are incorporating for the purpose of entering the motioin picture business. During the last few days, the following concerns have incorporated with Secretary of State Hugo:

The Pear Amusement Company, $63,750, H. C. and C. Berlin and Samuel Feldman, Brooklyn; the Allwyn Amusement Company, $3,000, Albert Frankenthal, Ernest Kahn, Sylvan Bier, New York; Talking Picture Records Company, $25,000, P. Loff, Charles Post, B. M. Battey, New York; Ariel Theatre Amusement Company, $75,000, Joseph and George Schowartzott, Joseph Geigand, Buffalo; Screenart Pictures Company, $50,000, Romaine Fielding, Julius Cahn, William G. Willman, New York; Reserve Advertising Company, $100,000, A. F. Davidson, H. W. Mosely, P. G. Offin, New York; Municipal Studios, $250,000, E. London and M. Elkin; Hyperian Productions Company, $25,000, George H. Wiley, David W. Russell, Walter R. Hill, New York.

The New Dorp Theatre Company was also incorporated at $25,000, giving as its object the manufacture of moving picture film of celluloid or other composition, the incorporators being H. W. Bridges, C. B. Callahan and C. W. Hastings.

Minneapolis Salesmen Meet to Talk Harmony

MORE than 100 salesmen of the twenty-three film exchanges in Minneapolis were the guests of their employers at a dinner at the Radisson Hotel, December 26. The dinner was a general get-together affair and was the second annual dinner of the Minaepolis Film Board of Trade.

Following are the speakers and their topics: introductory address, A. H. Fisher, Metro manager, president of the board; "Transportation and Its Problems," Wiliam Lestico, Triangle; "Payments," B. N. Judell, B. N. Judell, Inc.; "Change in Bookings," Phil Reisman, Hodkinson; "Contracts," Charles W. Stombaugh, Pathe; "Rules," Max Weisfeldt, Fox Film Corporation; "Bookers' Problems," Harry Hillweg, First National; "Misrepresentation," Jack Elliott, Elliott Film Corporation; "Holding Films," Fred Cubberly, First National; "Response," H. W. Hembold, Goldwyn, and C. M. Van Horn, Pathe; "Legislation," R. C. Cotton, Republic; "General Co-operation," E. S. Holmes, Vitagraph; "Unselfish Selfishness of Exchange," James V. Bryson, Universal; "Knocking Your Competitors' Service to Sell Your Own," Ira Mantzka, Robertson-Cole and "Open Discussion," Frank Thayer, Standard.

Stress was laid on the desirability of closer association among the members

Congressman Would Prohibit Interstate Commerce to Films With Crime Scenes

CONGRESSMAN JOHN W. HARRELD, of Oklahoma, is introducing a bill to deny transportation in interstate commerce to "any picture film, moving picture film or films or other representation purporting to show or simulate the acts or conduct of any ex-convict, desperado, bandit, train robber, bank robber, or outlaw, or of any person reputed to be or to have been convicted of crime or to be or to have been a desperado, bandit, train robber, bank robber, or outlaw, any commission or attempted commission of any crime or of any acts of violence, or escape or flight of any such person from the alleged scene of any purported crime or attempted crime or of any trial in court or otherwise of any such person."

Fines of not to exceed $10,000, imprisonment of not to exceed five years, or both such fine or imprisonment.

"The bill comes as the result of a resolution adopted by the Oklahoma Bar Association last month," said Representative Harreld in explaining the measure, "and was based upon the fact that not long ago a man was arrested in the act of robbing a bank. His arrest was accomplished by a sixteen-year-old boy. This man sentenced to twenty years in prison, but he was recently pardoned by the governor of Oklahoma.

"After his release this man formed a company and made a motion picture film of the incident and has been going over the country exhibiting these pictures. Oklahoma has already secured all the advertising of that kind it wants. Such pictures have given the people of the country the idea that Oklahoma has nothing but people of this type."

Mr. Harreld is of the opinion that the adoption of his bill by Congress would have the effect of driving much of the gunplay and Wild West features with stage coach and bank and mine robberies out of existence. Probably all "crime" pictures would be affected.

Kansas City Showmen May Have Express Film Service

THE Film Board of Trade of Kansas City adopted the suggestions of several of the managers of the exchanges and at a recent meeting began forming plans for an exclusive express service to exchanges. Several express companies are figuring on taking the contract, which will provide instant serivce on films between exchanges and the Union Station and to the censor boards.

A fleet of light and heavy trucks will be used if the plan carries, with expressmen on duty day and night. An idea of the volume of film business handled by express in Kansas City may be gained from the amount of film that arrives at the Union Station daily. Fourteen hundred boxes of film reach the station in a day, aside from all outgoing matter.

Managers of the various exchanges almost unanimously are in favor of such a plan. They are convinced it would speed up service to the exhibitors.

AN ACTIVE FIELD

of the various exchanges of the city to promote harmony in work and the formulation of rules of ethics to guide the distributors in the territory. The dinner was a success from every standpoint, many imaginary differences in policy being ironed out. The committee on rules and regulations was instructed to draw up a set of rules to guide the board members in their future activities.

Third Fire Badly Damages Bijou Theatre, Jamestown

IN a fire which the firemen insisted was the meanest they ever fought, the Bijou Theatre at Jamestown, N. Y., was put completely out of the running, with an estimated loss of $25,000. The only fortunate thing about the fire was that it occurred just previous to the opening early in the afternoon, for if it had started an hour later it is believed that a panic might have resulted at a time when there is usually a large crowd on hand. The cause of the fire was attributed to an overheated furnace in the basement.

A. E. Van Croix, manager of the house, says that the new pipe organ is a total ruin. The pipes and valves are installed in the rear of the second floor and the smoke, combined with the sudden heat, warped the delicate valves and gummed up the pipes so that they are useless. All of the seats were either smashed or badly blisted by the heat. The floor is ripped up in a dozen places and so undermined that there is danger of it collapsing under its own weight. All of the interior fixtures of the house were ruined by smoke and water.

The fire was the worst to occur in Jamestown within a year. But for lack of ventilation in the basement, firemen say the place would have been a roaring furnace within a few minutes. This is the third blaze to start in the Bijou. Another fire originated through an overheated furnace and the other in the operating booth. The latter occurred while the theatre was crowded, but the audience was marshaled out in good shape.

Duluth Theatre Company Starts With $1,000,000

FORMATION of the Duluth Theatre Company with $1,000,000 capitalization has been announced. The incorporators are M. Finkelstein and I. H. Ruben, of Finkelstein & Ruben, of Minneapolis and St. Paul; William Hamm, St. Paul, and J. B. and Julius Cook, Duluth.

Articles of incorporation have just been granted the company by the Minnesota State Securities Commission. The company is licensed to operate theatres and other amusement enterprises within the state. Finkelstein & Ruben have already three of the leading vaudeville and motion picture houses in Duluth.

The formation of the new company indicates new enterprises to be entered into soon by the firm members in the Duluth theatrical field, it was announced. Finkelstein & Ruben recently anounced their affiliation with Marcus Loew. Their new move is the beginning of the extension of their sphere of activities in both the motion picture and vaudeville fields, they said.

Kansas City Exhibitors Like First National Plan

THE proposed new booking system for the First National Exhibitors Circuit has occasioned considerable favorable comment among exhibitors in the Kansas City territory. It is believed that the plan will revolutionize the booking system of the entire business and that it will be adopted by other film concerns.

A. H. Blank, of Des Moines, who has the franchise in Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska for distribution of First National pictures, has conferred with practically all the exhibitors in that territory on the plans for the new system of booking. He told them that he would be prepared to begin definite action by January 15, after he had attended the convention of the First National Exhibitors Circuit at Atlanta on January 12.

Mr. Blank will be in Kansas City upon his return from Atlanta, where he will meet the exhibitors and lay before them the complete plans for the new system. The tentative plans provide that an exhibitor be chosen from each section of the three states to act as booking agent for that section. Probably there will be eight or ten selected for each state. This will facilitate service and is expected to prove much more satisfactory than to have all booking done at one point far remote from some parts of the territory it supplies.

M. P. D. A. Elects Officers for "Big Year" of 1920

WHEN the "last counties" had been heard from after the midnight closing of the polls at the meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association on January 5, a most satisfactory list of officers had been elected to office.

James Vincent won the post of director; Paul Scardon, assistant director; George B. Seitz, technical director; C. Jay Williams, treasurer; Travers Vale, secretary; John Joseph Harvey, inner guard; William F. Haddock, outer guard; J. Searle Dawley, trustee (term of office, three years).

New York Again Faces Sunday Closing Agitation

THE fight against Sunday movies, which it is rumored will become statewide during the next few weeks, has already cropped out in Watertown, N. Y., where members of the City Ministerial Union met on January 5 and outlined a plan of campaign which has for its object the prohibiting of Sunday motion picture shows in the theatres of that city and the re-submission of the issue to the new city administration which on January 1 became the commission form of government.

Several of the clergymen express the opinion that the action on the part of the common council of that city, which permitted Sunday movies, was not representative of the major part of the city itself. Efforts will be made to put the matter to a referendum vote.

In Schenectady yesterday, Sunday motion picture shows were resumed. Rev. Dr. George R. Lunn, the new mayor, permitting the picture houses to open under an agreement to give a portion of the profits for the anti-tuberculosis campaign. For three years there has been a stiff fight in Schenectady in an effort to obtain Sunday motion picture shows. It is now believed that under the administration of Mayor Lunn, who is broadminded on the subject, that the theatres will again operate.

Arthur Kane on Way Home.
Seattle, January 5.

Arthur S. Kane, former president of Realart, left here today for the East after visiting exhibitors in this city for three days.

On his way home he will stop at Spokane and Butte. He announced his trip, which has included a long stay in Los Angeles, as having been highly successful.

Mr. Kane expects to be in New York January 12 and to make an announcement that may be of interest to the trade about the middle of the month.

Bullock Answering Black Suggests Get-Together in Advertising Feud

THE writer seeks no controversy neither can he be drawn into whatever trouble may exist between New York State Exhibitors and Alfred S. Black. A controversy of this kind means confusion. I hate it, and I therefore absolutely agree with friend Black in his "All the cards are on the table" advertisement, to the extent that I herewith accept his suggestion of the first line, "Let us have Facts," and his closing words, "I demand that you, too, lay your cards on the table, and let the Exhibitors and the Advertisers pass judgment," strike me favorably. That sounds like business to all exhibitors. No bluffing by anyone.

I can freely forgive Alfred for dubbing our hard-working committee "The Self-styled Executive Committee," and as temporary secretary of the same I will therefore meet Alfred, anytime, any place, anywhere, in acceptance of his proposition to "come clean," "cards face up" and other sporty phrases somewhat puzzling to a Western Reserve "hick" like me. I therefore make a proposition with no "strings" to it, to wit:

Has Faith in Committee's Integrity.

I will nominate four (4) of our committee. Mr. Black may nominate his entire committee of six (6) as named in his "Cards on the Table" demand. I have absolute faith in his six as to their integrity.

These two committees shall furnish all documentary data, facts, evidence and figures bearing upon the question of industrial film advertising; the protection of the exhibitors' screen from the free use of same by producers and advertisers. Also as a legitimate source of revenue to the screen owner and a means of financing a state or national organization; from the inception of the idea up to the date of Mr. Black's first "announcement" in trade paper issues dated December 30, 1919, and December 18, of "Printers' Ink," the National Advertisers' Journal.

Would Make Sessions Open.

I also propose as a committee to consider the above "facts" of one representative from each trade paper, whose decision must be based upon documentary evidence and said evidence to be published in their respective papers. Inasmuch as Mr. Black s quoting Tim Thrift, chairman of the film committee of National Advertisers, I would nominate Mr. Thrift as chairman of the aforesaid committee of trade papers. If Mr. Thrift is not available I would suggest Dr. Francis Holley, director of the Washington (D. C.) Bureau of Economics, the biggest showman in the world and whose films are distributed by Universal. These gentlemen, being neutral, would have no vote. Either one is eminently fitted and I won't worry about anything else.

I would favor admitting any producer or organization exhibitor who can show a membership card in SOME organization, as spectator. This is a straightforward answer to Mr. Black's "demand." I mean business and will not quibble over arrangements. Will split fifty-fifty on expenses. I think the result of such a meeting will be one grand national organization of exhibitors—and God knows that we need the steadying influence of a real theatre owners' organization.

Forget personalities. Let us not delay, or, as Alfred says, "Let us find out quick." That suits me and the "Twentieth Century" is running." Let's go.

Selznick Interests Seek to Enjoin Foundation Film

THE National Pictures Theatres, Inc., has filed an action in the United States district court, New York, to enjoin the Foundation Film Corporation from using the words "Blind Youth" or an adaptation of the phrase as a title of a motion picture.

Judge Mayer has signed an order returnable on January 9 at 10.30 a. m., directing the defendant corporation through its representatives to show cause why the company should not be enjoined from using the words "Blind Youth" in a title to a film production.

According to the complaint, the Selznick Pictures Corporation acquired the film rights to the drama entitled "Blind Youth," in which Lou Tellegen starred on the stage, from Willard Mack and Mr. Tellegen last June and produced a screen version of the play with Eugene O'Brien playing the stellar role.

A short time ago it is alleged the defendant corporation launched a publicity campaign exploiting a screen dramatization of "The Torrent" under the title of "Blind Youth." When the attention of the officials of the corporation was called to the fact that the Selznick interests were producing a cinema version of the drama, "Blind Youth," under the same title, and a demand was made that the defendant corporation adopt some other title for its dramatization of "The Torrent," it is alleged that the defendant corporation adopted the title "The Blindness of Youth."

Despite the demands of the Selznick interests that the Foundation Film Corporation discontinue the use of any title similar to that of "Blind Youth," it is alleged the company refused to make any further concession and insisted upon releasing its production under the title as modified, although the Selznick interests contend that it constitutes unfair competition.

George Loane Tucker Asks Court for Injunction On "Miracle Man"

ALLEGING that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has deliberately violated its contract with him by securing fame for the name and trademark of the Paramount-Artcraft pictures to his detriment, George Loane Tucker, director of "The Miracle Man," one of the most successful productions released during 1919, has asked the New York Supreme Court for an injunction to restrain the defendant company from distributing the production except in accordance with the specific terms of the contract. There will be a hearing on January 12.

The court is also asked not to restrain Mr. Tucker from making other contracts on "The Miracle Man," as the plaintiff considers the present contract violated and therefore at an end; to restrain the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation from completing "Ladies Must Live," which has been partially completed by Mr. Tucker, and to appoint a receiver for the picture; and to order an accounting of funds connected with the sale of "The Miracle Man," alleging that certain sums are due the plaintiff.

In five months the picture is said to have done a gross business of $589,000, this sum including only money paid in during that time and not money owed or since paid. It is said that the sum of money due Mr. Tucker, according to the papers filed, is in the neighborhood of $40,000.

Alleges Deliberate Violation.

The suit centers around Mr. Tucker's allegation that when the defendant company realized the worth of "The Miracle Man," and the reception which it would receive as an artistic photoplay production, the defendant company began deliberately violating the contract in order to enhance the reputation of Paramount-Artcraft pictures, thereby preventing Mr. Tucker from receiving the credit to which he feels he is entitled in accordance with the terms of the contract.

Mr. Tucker alleges that there has been no reference to his name in certain advertising matter, that it appears according to the advertising that he is under contract to Mayflower to create additional pictures to that of "The Miracle Man" and that the defendant company is about to complete and release "Ladies Must Live" as a production wholly directed and completed by him when he has still to make some negatives and to cut, title and assemble the picture.

Denies "Temperament."

"I have lived up to my contract fully and I am desirous of finishing myself any picture which will go before the public as my work," said Mr. Tucker. "I am being represented as a sort of temperamental person, whereas all I have sought has been recognition of the fact that I am responsible, and not Paramount-Artcraft, for 'The Miracle Man.' I am entitled to receive proper credit for any good productions I may make, and I alone will shoulder the blame for any poor work I may do."

Mr. Tucker has been a motion picture director for six years. He was a stage director for seven years.

Metro and Marcus Loew Affiliate for Mutual Strength and Growth

Transaction Involving Millions Unites Great Circuit of Theatres and Powerful Producing-Distributing Organization—No Change in Policy Is Planned, Says President Rowland—Each to Retain Its Individuality

IN a transaction involving several million dollars, Marcus Loew, Inc., and Metro Pictures Corporation have effected a business affiliation of the utmost importance. Through the purchase by Loew, Inc., of Metro stock, the Loew circuit of theatres and the Metro company start the new year with a business combination that was conceived and brought to fulfillment for their mutual expansion.

Marcus Loew, head of the Loew enterprises, and Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, in announcing the deal, declare it to have been the outcome of negotiations that have extended over a period of several months, during which every detail has been most carefully considered and worked out. It unites the business interests of one of the largest exhibiting chains in the United States, which is increasing every day in strength and scope, with those of a powerful producing and distributing organizations.

President Rowland's Statement.

The final papers in the arrangement have been signed by the chief executives of the two organizations.

"This arrangement with Loew, Inc.," says an explanatory statement by Mr. Rowland, "cements a friendship of long standing between Metro and the Loew enterprises. For several years the closest relations have existed between the two companies. The present union of interests is the logical development of the constantly growing good will on both sides. It means that we will each be of greater strength to the other.

"The Loew theatres, comprising an imposing circuit, will assure continuous and adequate representation for the Screen Classics, Inc., special productions of the 'fewer and better' sort originated by Metro. It will also assure the highest quality of motion picture entertainment for the Loew theatres, entertainment of a quality, we think, that will make the Loew theatres even more powerful factors in the communities they serve than they now are.

No Change in Policy.

"The arrangement will in no sense interfere with our established policy towards the independent exhibitors. The independent showman will receive the same service and be accorded the same zealous effort on Metro's part to give him quality productions as has characterized Metro's past deailngs with him.

"The independent theatre man, for instance, will always be able to obtain Metro pictures in fair competition in the open market, as heretofore, and benefit by their pulling power. This association with Loew, Inc., will also enable Metro to go the limit in its constant endeavor to improve the artistic quality of its productions, with the guaranty that there will be dependable market for them not only in the Loew houses, but in the great many other high-class theatres where they have in the past proved so acceptable as entertainment and so sound as commercial assets.

To Buy Independent Productions.

"Furthermore, it will greatly enlarge the field of the independent, or 'free-lance' director-producer. Metro will be in the market to buy independent productions for distribution by our large and highly specialized exchange system. Any man who has made a good picture may bring it to Metro."

Announcement of the Loew-Metro transaction also makes it plain that each organization will retain its individual identity. There will be harmonious and helpful co-operation between the two; but Metro is to remain, of course, primarily a producing company and the Loew, Inc., enterprises hold to their function as purveyors of motion picture and vaudeville entertainment.

With regard to the measure of co-operation between the two organizations, it is announced that the executives of each will be in close touch, notwithstanding the arrangement providing for maintenance of separate identities. In addition, the Metro board of directors will be reorganized with members of the Loew, Inc., directorate represented on it.

Aspire to Lead the Field.

"We have been reminding the trade from time to time that we intended to expand and then expand some more," adds the statement of the Metro president. "Our promises have not been idle words, as this arrangement just entered into will attest. The same is true of the Loew enterprises. It is now our plan to grow together; each to profit and grow stronger through the strength of the other.

"Metro's aim—and sole reason for existence, we might add—is to lead the field in the production of worth-while photodramas. We believe that leadership can be gained and held in no other way. Metro's ideal has been not merely to meet the improvement in discrimination on the part of the people whose money supports the motion picture, but to anticipate it. This arrangement will enable us to do the great things we have planned and aspired to do.

"Meanwhile, we wish again to reassure our friends, the exhibitors, that they as well as we are to benefit by this union of business interests on the part of Loew, Inc., and Metro. Affiliations such as these are inevitable, in view of the present-day trend of the industry. But they will help rather than embarrass the man who owns his own motion picture theatre and seeks to give his patrons photoplays of the better sort."

As part of the preliminaries to the completion of the affiliation, the Loew organization has already established closest relations with Metro's extensive distribution system. The Metro exchanges, numbering thirty, are situated in strategic centers throughout the United States from Maine to California and from Canada to the Gulf.

In Greater New York there are thirty-seven Loew theatres, while the chain throughout the country is being added to regularly. These theatres will be in the foundation of a constant and permanent market for the Metro-Screen Classics.

Loew Knows From Experience.

Marcus Loew's previous dealings with Metro have demonstrated to him the wide popularity of the Metro stars and the box-office value of the special production in which their talents are displayed. Attendance during the showing of Viola Dana, Bert Lytell, May Allison and Alice Lake pictures has often reached record figures.

As Metro also distributes the productions of Taylor Holmes Productions, Inc., the comedies starring Taylor Holmes will be seen in the Loew theatres, as will also the Jack London stories in which, under an arrangement with C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., Mitchell Lewis is to be starred by Metro, besides five productions to be made during the year by S.-L. Pictures, Inc.

These productions are, of course, in addition to the Nazimova Productions, of which Metro is the exclusive distributor. The Nazimova pictures are a great drawing card in this country and have also taken the European market by storm. Metro is represented in Great Britain by Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., of which Sir William Jury is managing director.

Life Membership Resolution Makes N.A.M.P.I. "Santa" to Eastman

IT is safe to say that of all the gifts reaching George Eastman, of Rochester, during the Christmas season, few will be more appreciated than a morocca-bound, gold-mounted album which reached him through the courtiership of J. E. Brulatour, acting as Santa Claus for the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

In reality, however, though the presentation of the album occurred during the holidays, it was not, except in point of coincidence, a holiday gift. It contained a beautifully engrossed resolution which had been unanimously adopted at the third annual meeting of the N. A. M. P. I. at Rochester on August 5 last, making Mr. Eastman an honorary life member of the National Association.

In presenting the album to Mr. Eastman, Mr. Brulatour delivered also a letter of presentation from President William A. Brady.

The album is a striking bit of workmanship from the studios of Tiffany and Company. It is of the finest blue morocco leather, gold mounted, and the resolution within is hand-lettered on parchment with hand-painted initials and border, from original designs. The whole is enclosed in a satin-lined mahogany case with Mr. Eastman's monogram in gold on the cover.

Des Moines Women Plan Screen Uplift Campaign

DES MOINES club women are planning an active campaign for better motion pictures in the city. While no censorship is proposed, the women wll conduct a survey of picture theatres in the city for a period of several weeks, and will educate the people to demand better films.

"It is not the plan of the Federation of Women's Clubs to dictate just what pictures to run," Mrs. George Tone, chairman of the education committee, said. "It will be their aim to endorse the best pictures and to keep the public informed as to the high-class pictures which will be shown in the city."

The women contend that some of the pictures shown here, especially the films at small houses in the residence district, are "crime breeders" and "a disgrace to the city." Pictures in the outlying districts are not alone to blame, however, they say.

"Seven-tenths of the juvenile crimes committed can be traced directly to the movies, which play upon the imaginative senses of the child and cause untold harm," another member of the committee said. "Films of the blood and thunder variety are inexcusable and it is there that most of the harm is done."

A series of "better pictures" will be shown at Lucas, Willard and Hubbell public schools and Highland Park Christian church within the next few weeks. Community centers are entirely responsible for these showings, as the City Federation is not connected with the project in any way, although many women in the federation are interested in this phase of the work.

Spanish Actor Succumbs to Lure of the Pictures

CARLOS SAN MARTIN, a noted actor who appeared in many famous stage productions in Madrid and in all the larger cities of South America, has at last reached the film capital of the world and is now playing a role in Wallace Reid's new Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Dancin' Fool," which is being produced at the Lasky studio in Hollywood.

Senor Martin came to the United States in 1912, intending to go on the stage in this country. He found the English language a hard one to master, however, and in 1914 he decided to take up screen work. It is often through necessity that we become acquainted with our greatest opportunities. Senor Martin, although at first, disliked leaving the stage for the screen, is now a confirmed motion picture artist.

Senor Martin, following out the wishes of his parents, was studying to be a doctor, but soon realized that the stage was the work for which he longed and for which he was best fitted, and securing an engagement with a theatrical company which was showing in the city where he lived, he departed with the troupe, touring South America and then Spain. He played in Spanish opera and operettes and also in many notable dramatic and musical comedy productions.

Owner Can Designate Seat for Patrons Decides Judge

THE Court of Appeal at Montreal, Quebec, has decided that the proprietor of a theatre has the right to seat patrons where he wishes within the limits of the section of the house corresponding with the price that a person has paid for his admission ticket.

This decision was handed down on December 29 as a result of an appeal by Manager Mills of Loew's Montreal Theatre from the judgment of the Superior Court which awarded Sol Reynolds, a colored man, $10 damages and costs because he had been ejected from the theatre after he had refused to accept a seat that had been designated for him by an usher.

The Court of Appeal pointed out that the admission tickets used by the theatre contain a revocation provision and this gave the theatre the right to refund the admission price in case his presence was not desired. Loew's Theatre had appealed on the question of the principle involved and on that appeal the theatre had been successful.

Justice Pelletier, who delivered the judgment, declared in part: "It has been shown in the proof that the presence of colored people in the orchestra seats prevents other people from attending the theatre and appellant is not obliged to suffer a loss of revenue which would result from this fact. The proprietors of a theatre are not obliged to give any representations at all if they do not wish to do so. They are not obliged to admit anybody whose presence would prevent their enterprise from succeeding or would injure it financially."

Dissent was made from this judgment by Justice Carroll who was of the opinion that the ticket could not be revoked simply on account of the color of the holder of the ticket. All citizens of the country, he declared, are submitted to the same laws and are bound by the same obligations.

The case aroused considerable attention in Montreal theatre circles.

Circuits Booking Dooley Comedies.

Negotiations have been completed whereby several circuits of theatres booked the Johnny Dooley Comedies. Tyrad Pictures will announce the list when the schedules of the several theatres have been rearranged to permit of the films being shown.

Clark Charges Exhibitor Betrayal By Use of Convenient Advertising

AMERICAN exhibitors have been deliberately betrayed by certain producers and distributors at a profit to the latter, for their unscrupulous breaches of faith and confidence, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars from the sale of 'convenient' advertising possibilities in strictly entertainment film to national advertisers, and for which exhibitors have been charged high rentals. This practice has grown to amazing proportions. It has become a stealthy, secret method of 'playing both ends against the middle,' a violation of all ethics, written or unwritten, which govern relations between manufacturers and consumers, and a dangerous form of capitalizing exhibitor confidence without regard for the exhibitor's moral rights."

This is the keynote of a statement issued by R. H. Clark, general manager of the New York exchange for First National Exhibitors Circuit and a member of the board of directors for the national organization, in which he attacks the injection of "convenient" advertising into productions sold to exhibitors by producers and distributors as being exclusively entertainment films, and for which exhibitors pay the usual service rentals. The facts which he outlines and the allegations he makes are the results of information which he declares has been imparted to him by exhibitors in his particular territory, and which has been submitted to the home office of First National by theatre owners in practically all sections of the country.

"A Miserable, Petty Trespass."

"It is a miserable, petty trespass on conditions which compel the majority of exhibitors to book productions without screen examination," he continues. "Cashing in without regard for obligation seems to be the actuating impulse. These same producers and distributors bellow mightily in the columns of the trade journals whenever a group of exhibitors in any territory propose to meet an issue by joint action. In the same stenographer note books that contain the plaints against exhibitors you'll find letters to national advertisers, soliciting money in exchange for 'convenient' ad values in pictures they release to exhibitors on regular service contracts.

"It is time that a few more organizations like the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League for New York State took steps to prevent a continuation of the practice. There may be exhibitors who do not care, but they are very few. In this territory I know of more than a score of instances where exhibitors have complained to exchanges, after showing entertainment films booked at high rentals, about the flagrant advertising attempts in various scenes. Invariably, they tell me, they have been laughed at, in an obviously 'if you don't like it go to' manner.

What Mr. Clark says:

It is a miserable, petty trespass on conditions which compel the majority of exhibitors to book productions without screen examination.

It is time that a few more organizations like the Miami Valley Exhibitors League and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League for New York State took steps to prevent a continuation of the practice.

Would George Horace Lorimer, as editor of the Saturday Evening Post, permit any author. . . to specifically mention Blank cars because the heroine had to drive an automobile?

It would behoove the trade papers to instruct their reviewers to watch every production they see for purposes of criticism, and to state in their reviews whether or not the pictures contain any form of unfair advertising.

Here I Take My Stand!

Would Lorimer Permit It?

"Would George Horace Lorimer, as editor of the Saturday Evening Post, permit any author who produces a short story or serial for him, to specifically mention Blank cars because the heroine had to drive an automobile? Would he tolerate the publication of an illustration in which the hero stages a fight before a twenty-four sheet stand covered with a poster advertising a particular brand of coffee? Would H. O. Davis, erstwhile executive and producer in the motion picture business, permit, in his present capacity as editor of The Ladies' Home Journal, the use of a line beneath the name of a prominent author, to the effect that the author used a certain massage cream?

Suggests Action by Reviewers.

"An exhibitor told me yesterday that twice within a week he has shown pictures featuring well known stars, and released as special productions, which contained convenient advertising by big concerns. Another theatre owner showed me a slide, sent him by an exchange as part of the advance work on a special he had booked with a popular star. At the bottom of the slide, so arranged that it could not be cut off, was a line stating that the star used a certain brand of coffee, which is regularly advertised in the national magazines.

"It would behoove the trade papers to instruct their reviewers to watch every production they see for purposes of criticism, and to state in their reviews whether or not the pictures contain any form of unfair advertising. This, at least, would serve to warn exhibitors in advance, and it would put an effectual check on the practice. There are a number of exhibitors in New York State who would subscribe to any medium which would tell them honestly whether various releases classified as entertainment had been sold out to advertisers."

Henry Alvah Strong Left More Than $16,000,000

THAT Henry Alvah Strong's faith in George Eastman's inventions was well rewarded is shown by the fact that the appraisal of Mr. Strong's estate discloses more than $16,000,000. When George Eastman was a young man with a great idea and no money, it was Mr. Strong who decided that Eastman was the sort of a man who would make good and consequently sold out his harness business to raise $10,000 with which to back Eastman. Mr. Strong was president of the Eastman Kodak Company. He died a few months ago.

Julius S. Wile and Walter S. Hubbell have just completed an apraisal of the Strong estate and filed it with the Monroe County Surrogate Court. The gross estate is valued at $16,052,408.77, and the net value of the real and personal property is $15,062,880.75. It is believed that Mr. Strong was at one time worth many more millions, because some years ago he lost control of the Eastman company when he sold a large block of his stock to recuperate losses on western mining investments.

The transfer tax statements show that he invested his estate in over half a hundred utility companies in New York State, in stock of most of the large railroads and oil companies of the country, manufacturing companies of almost every description and a number of small investments in comparatively obscure firms. He invested $25,000 in bonds of the Russian government. Nearly $1,500,000 is in Liberty bonds. His stock in the Eastman Kodak Company is valued at $7,652,350, of which $416.000 was in preferred stock.

Theatres for sale; theatres for rent, and theatres wanted by live managers are listed very frequently in The World's Classified Advertising Department.

If Frank keeps his word—and he's strong on that sort of thing—he'll write us a note next week telling of some of the things that came under his eye in New York.

Why Stop at Avenue A, Jim? You Should Go Down the Whole Alphabet.

Cradle Rocking for an Infant Industry

Glancing Through Moving Picture World Ten Years Ago

THE issue of Moving Picture World dated January 15, 1910, would not create much of a sensation in these days of motion picture trade journalism—but its "sinews of war" department was, nevertheless, representative of the biggest and best advertisers in the business. News was much scarcer than adverts—and "stories of the films" was the fattest of all sections of the work.

Pictures of movie actors were due to "bust out in the lobby" of picture theatre via Kalem's offer of a frame of 'em for $16, f. o. b. lobby. The World gave a whole page, illustrated with a cut of the frame, to a description of the innovation, while Kalem was content with a quarter-page advertisement on the subject.

"Brighten the (Lobby) Corners."

"No amount of banners or posters will give a lobby the class and attraction of this frame. It will draw the best people to your house." So spake Frank Marion in the Kalem announcement.

Tracing back over the intervening years, it may be contended that "the best people" would never have seen photoplays had it not been for Kalem and its frame of actors! Latter-day exponents of the art might give you an argument—but when they do read 'em that Frank Marion assertion and see if they don't shrivel!

"Music hook-ups," so fashionable in modern cinemas, were vogue ten years ago via the song slide. Many firms were busy on the "illustrated song" job and there were opportunities to "hook" the pleasant little ditty "My Irish Prairie Queen" (North American Slide Co., Philadelphia) with "The Life of Moses" (Edison release).

Incidentally, "Moses" was in many parts, advertised separately.

In those days famous composers didn't write songs especially for photoplays, and the "exhibitor" had to take chances on glass slide exploitation. But the "music hook-up" got its start thusly though crudely.

"The Tide of Fortune" Rising.

"Two 'Imp" Releases a Week! Then Three! And Then Four!" was the R. H. Cochrane heading to a Laemmle advertisement announcing "The Tide of Fortune." Universal now considers it a poor week when they don't issue that many in a day, no doubt.

Explaining the story of "The Tide of Fortune," the advertisement says: "It tells the story of the ups and downs of a rich family and proves that in some cases the black sheep turns out to be the bell cow." Thus you will observe that R. H. C. was, even then, such a good advertising man that he could turn a sheep into a cow by the magic of his word-building. And look at all the practice he's since had in ten years!

Your old friend Sam Bullock was manager of the Lake Shore Film and Supply Company of Cleveland, advertising the Johnson-Ketchel fight pictures to beat the band—"booking with licensed exhibitors only." Sam is still in the "fight" business—keeping" the screen safe from Damnadvertisers," so to paraphrase.

Motion pictures of the wine industry for lecture purposes were made at Wahtoka, Cal., under direction of Horatio Stoll, secretary of the Grape Growers of California. Writing on the day after the Supreme Court had declared "2.75" an illegal fraction and ten days before the Constitution becomes Constitutional, one feels that this story might better be cut short—even the old Underwood is choked with greasy tears!

"Discovering" Pictures for Advertising.

Elsewhere, and for some time, much is being said about using the screen for advertising. Out in Wahtoka, Cal., ten years ago, they were awakening to the propaganda of the photo-screen. "People in Fresno and other counties," said Secretary Stoll, "have not realized up to this time the value of moving pictures for advertising purposes."

Shades of Watt Rothacker; ditto Harry Levey, et al! If Wahtoka was slow, ten years ago, everybody from Hostetter's Headache Bitters to Paruna Baking Liquids are away out in front, just now. Ask Sydney S. Cohen if they ain't (even if that is bum and colloquial English). And as for Alfred S. Black, "he'll say so!"

Exposing Trick of Film Producer.

Our own G. P. Von Harleman, of Chicago, took a trip to George K. Spoor's studio and wrote a stickful on a "marvelous stage setting" Essanay had completed. "We have a story in the making," said Mr. Spoor, "with two or three summer scenes, and as it is impossible to make the picture out of doors we have built a little summer scenery inside the studio."

Just about there started the deceit producers have since practiced on the public to an amazing extent. Rainsorms from the city water-works, sunshine from kerosene, whirl-winds from Typhoon fans, and "sich-like" chicanery has gone on to a tremenduous extreme from the "Summer scenery" start at Edgewater, near Chicago, when a painted drop was made to bloom as the flowers around the State House in Sacramento.

William ("Daddy") Paley.
One of the first infants in the industry. The first man to shoot motion pictures. Now technical expert with National Film.

Days of Struggle and Travail.

Regular weekly releases made on Wednesday were promised by the Actophone Company to be made in "the large plant of the defunct Cameraphone Company." Take down your Chinese mathematical frame and figure how many producing firms have "refuncted" since 1910!

The Pantograph Company made its first release. The Phoenix Company announced "The Celebrated Case"—a double reel!

Pilar-Morin Gets Into Pictures.

Edison announced the engagement of Mme. Pilar-Morin to play the name-role in "The Japanese Peach Boy." Her Edison release, "Comedy and Tragedy," was accredited with being the greatest work in film pantomiming the industry had known up to them.

And why not? Pilar-Morin was the greatest artist France has ever sent to our shores—pantomimist, we mean—and she later was David Belasco's greatest "Mme. Butterfly." Incidentally it was rare, in those days, to mention a star in films—the title was the thing!

Vitagraph's "Home Talent" on View.

Vitagraph gave a dinner to friends and 200 employes, January 8, 1910. Over 600 guests were invited to be entertained at (a) dinner, (b) vaudeville, (c) dance and (d) a "general good time." Here's the program as devised to introduce the arts and sciences of the Vitagraphists:

1.—A Reel of Vitagraph Pictures:
A surprise for everyone.
2.—Baritone Solo.....Signor Corroccini
3.—Comedy Sketch
Florence Turner and Maurice Costello
4.—Dramatic Reading.....Bill Phillips
5.—Songs and Cartoons.....Sam Spedon
6.—Magic and Mystery..Albert E. Smith
7.—Irish Sketch
VanDyke Brooke and William Shea
8.—Soprano Solo.....Madam St. Loup
9.—Cohen at Greenfield.Walter Ackerman
10.—Monologue and Nonsense
J. Stuart Blackton
11.—Vitagraph Review
Vitagraph Stock Company
12.—Vitagraph Photoplays

An enjoyable time was had by all. Rather interesting bill, eh wot?

Film Prognosticates Air War.

Among the films announced for release in 1910 was a work of Charles Urban entitled "The Battle in the Clouds." The description: "A graphic picture illustrating what may occur when the airship is sufficiently perfected to become an engine of destruction, which some of its devotees believe is possible." Probably those who saw the film looked upon it as high class comedy.

At all events this present scrivner sat in a London Music Hall (in 1913) three years after the Urban release and witnessed a sketch called "War in the Air" while Londoners laughed right out loud at the sensational goings-on, as London was "bombed and burned" on the Palladium stage. But the "Nero's" who fiddled in the orchestra pit didn't have time to laugh.

If you are concerned in what Moving Picture World, January 22, 1910, contained—get next week's issue. W. K. H.

Nature Looks Her Best As West Coast People Celebrate Warm Christmas

By Giebler

CHRISTMAS week and as warm as toast, and everybody feeling just about as crisp and as full of snap as a piece of toast that has been left over from day before yesterday's breakfast.

The thermometer has been dallying between eighty and eighty-five for the last ten days and a couple of time it flirted around and came as near as three points of making a date with ninety.

"Seeing" Things.
ZaSu Pitts and Claude H. Mitchell, star and director of Brentwood's "Seeing It Through."

Of course the weather is wonderful. Recent arrivals from the East are full of "wonderfuls," "glorious's," and "did you evers!" And even those of us who have been out here two or three years stop saying our prayers for enough cool weather to put a little pep into us, to admit it when we are pressed.

A lady tourist called the turn on the weather not long ago when she said, "If one stays in California long, one gets the ong-wee."

I'll say they do, and the trouble is that it is so hard to find anything to take for the "ong-wee" nowadays. Outside of that, the weather in West Coast Filmland is all that it is cracked up to be.

Nature Never More Beautiful.

The mountain laurel is in bloom and the foothills never were more beautiful. If I were an artist I'd paint a picture of 'em if I had to use my other shirt as a canvas. The almond trees are full of milk-white blossoms; the olive trees are as green as green can be, and the boles of the walnuts glow like dull silver in the moonlight.

Our trees are at their best, out here, in the winter time; only the sycamore loses its leaves, and there are not many sycamores. The live oaks are scattering their seeds on the lawns. The peppers are festooned with long, grape-like clusters of red berries; the air is filled with the spicy odor of eucalyptus acorns and camphor leaves, and every vagrant breeze that blows brings us the sweet scent of orange flowers from the citrus orchards—and all the comedy lots are full of beautiful one-piece suit bathing girls.

It Was a Merry Christmas.

Christmas passed with much merriment. Filmland had many parties and gatherings—too many to be enumerated here. The cafes and dining rooms did a roaring business, and thanks to the "bring your own" rule, things were not absolutely arid in spite of the drought. If there was a sad note anywhere in the festivities it came with the thought that even cellars have bottoms and the knowledge that every gulp brought the gulpers one step nearer to Adam's ale and soda pop for liquid nourishment.

Christmas was good to me. I got a tie, an ash tray and some socks from Santa Claus; engraved and embossed cards from Marshall Neilan, Allan Dwan, Lew Cody, J. Hesser Walraven, Si Snyder, Tom North, Jim Hoff of Ours, and many others; a beautiful poem about a lady's picture from Harold Bell Wright, written by Harold himself; and to brim the cup, a set of signed photographs from the Sennett Beauties, including Charlie Murray and Ben Turpin.

Levino Plays Santa Claus.

There was much gift giving and receiving in the colony. It would take too much space to print a complete list of the presents, but mention should be made of the almost new dark green automobile that Albert Shelby Levnio, of the Metro studio, presented to a total stranger one evening during the festive season while Albert and his better half were calling on some neighbors.

Mention should also be made of the Pathe camera that Henry Lehrman bestowed on some person or persons unknown who called at the studio during the stilly watches of the night to receive the gift.

Taking it by and large, Filmland is happy and busy.

I visited the Brentwood plant and found it a regular ant-hill of activity and all cluttered up with hand-picked atmosphere diked out in soup-and-fish, diamonds and decollette.

Kolker Teaches Politeness.

Henry Kolker was making a play called "The Third Generation," with three magnificent sets representing the lobby, grand staircase and the diamond horseshoe of the big opera house in New York. Mr. Kolker was working on a big scene showing the audience coming into the house and going to their boxes.

Henry made the bunch of atmosphere act like real society folks. The gents bowed and scraped and some of them reared back so far that their long-tailed coats almost swept the floor, and the ladies peacocked along in their fine feathers and furs and held little receptions here and there in the lobby and on the staircase. It was all very fine.

Mahlon Hamilton is playing the lead in the picture and Betty Blythe and Betty Brice are the leading feminine support. To keep you from getting those two names mixed up, as I did at first, Betty Bryce is the lady we used to know as Rosetta Bryce when she was on the V. L. S. E. program a while back.

ZaSu Not Zasu.

In addition to Mr. Hamilton and the two Betty's, Jack Pratt, who is Miss Bryce's other half in real life, Fred Kelsey, Joseph Swickard, Edward Cecil, Arthur Redden and little Peggy Cartwright, two clever kids, are in "The Third Generation" cast. I also saw Claude H. Mitchell and ZaSu Pitts, who

One Caption We Don't Have to Worry Over.
Everybody's glad to see her. These are the very latest views of "America's Sweetheart" taken as she completed "Pollyanna," her first United Artists' production.

insists on having her name spelled with an upper case S in the ZaSu.

Mr. Mitchell had just finished making "Seeing It Through" with Miss Pitts in the lead, supported by Mayme Kelso, Edwin Stevens, Henry Woodward, W. H. Bainbridge, Frank Hayes, Julanne Johnston, Frankie Raymond, and last but not least (to pull an old one) Hughie Mack.

Brentwood is a pleasant place to visit, everybody around the works is so human. Leroy Haynes, one of the big bosses, came out on the stages and helped me visit.

Mr. Haynes is one of our producers who has a sense of humor and does not take himself seriously. Of course a producer or any one else who has a sense of humor could not take himself seriously, but unfortunately many of our leading lights in the production end seem to be lacking in funny bones.

Universal City a Revelation.

At any rate, Mr. Haynes is "clever." That's a word they use in the Ozark Mountains in describing anybody who is friendly and neighborly, and it fits Haynes to a T.

Another day "Mack" MacArthur, the pilgrim from the East, rubbered around with me.

We went to Universal to pay our respects to Carl Laemmle, but were unfortunate enough to miss him. We "rubbered" the works at U. City until Mack became a perfect exclamation point of astonishment at the immensity of the place. The weather being so good for location work, there were not many players on the lot, but we looked at a Mary MacLaren set, peeped in on Priscilla Dean making "The Virgin of Stamboul," talked to Eddie Polo, blew out a tire and watched a large colored man fix it, and had a real good time in spite of all.

That afternoon we visited John Jasper's new community studio, which is growing like a mushroom.

Gene Gauntier Returns.

Two companies are shooting at Jack's plant. King Vidor is working on his initial release for First National, and Syd Chaplin is grinding away on his second big comedy feature. A third company will be working at the plant next week, but no announcements further than the fact that Gene Gauntier is to play the leading part in the feature can be made at this writing.

Gene Gauntier! That used to be a name to conjure with in the old days. We speak of the old days as though it were a long time ago, when in reality it has only been a few years since Kalem was knocking 'em dead with Gene Gauntier. We had a long talk with Miss Gauntier; she is looking fine, and I see no reason why she can't come back and just about knock 'em dead again.

She told us she had been in Switzerland and other foreign parts, and that she had gratified the ambition of a lifetime by writing dramatic criticisms and pieces about the movies for a Kansas City daily during her absence from the screen.

Head of Norma

Norma Talmadge as she appears in her Selznick, "She Loves and Lies."

A Sunshiny End to the Day.

We dropped in at the Burston studio and met Kittoria Beveridge, a new lead for Burston pictures; then next door to Warner Brothers, and re-met Gilbert P. Hamilton, who is going to direct Helen Holmes in the new serial that Sam, Jack and Abe Warner, the "work and win" boys, are going to make, and J. P. Goodwin, an airplane driver who has seen much service with our Uncle Samuel, who is doing some fancy flying for the serial.

Then all of us went down to the little restaurant across the street from the Sunshine studio and had lunch. Mrs. Davenport (mother to Dorothy Davenport and mother-in-law to Wallie Reid), who works in Fox films, came over to our table and had a bottle of "Kwas," another name for spring water flavored with fruit juice and fizzed with carbonic.

Did We? Well!

And "Mother" Davenport being there, and looking like a good chaperon, Aline Griffith, Bess True, Norma Trentoni and Gladys Walton, four Sunshine girls, were emboldened to come over and have a little snack to eat with us.

Did we have a pleasant party? I'll say we did.

Exhibitors Booking "Blue Bird"

Taking advantage of the large amount of publicity which is being given all over the country to the coming visit of Maurice Maeterlinck and the National Blue Bird Campaign for Happiness, exhibitors are booking the Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Blue Bird," which Maurice Tourneur made from the Maeterlinck play. These bookings are being made to coincide with the speaking dates of Maeterlinck in various sections of the country.

Church Gives Free Shows.

Feature pictures for the Sunday School children have been inaugurated by St. Philip's Cathedral in Atlanta and a motion picture machine has been installed by the church in the chapter house. Mary Pickford was featured in the first picture in "The Little Princess." F. R. Shaw, superintendent of the Sunday School, announced that pictures would be shown regularly twice each week through a booking arrangement with an Atlanta film exchange. No admission fee is charged and the children and their parents are invited.

Stable Prices in Building Materials Will Attend Great Boom in Spring

EVERYTHING points to a building boom of record scope for the coming spring. The New York Journal of Commerce has the best barometer, showing that the building activity for the spring will be above the best normal ever known in the prices of concrete ingredients, such as sand, gravel and crushed stone.

The contract prices issued show sand at $1.90 a cubic yard, as against 45 cents in 1912; $3.25 a yard for crushed stone, as against 85 cents in 1912, and a ratio for gravel the same as that for crushed stone.

Contractors are booking big tonnages of these and other building materials for future delivery.

Selznick Tells of Americanization Work To Be Done by the Industry

L. J. SELZNICK, president of Select Pictures Corporation and of National Picture Theatres, Inc., accompanied by C. R. Seelye, general manager of the last-named organization, arrived from New York Sunday, December 28, and remained until Tuesday, December 30, when the return trip to New York was made. He was up to his ears in work connected with National Picture Theatres, Inc., during his stay, and it was given out that the results of his visit far exceeded his most sanguine expectations.

When seen at the Chicago offices of Select, Mr. Selznick was the busiest man I have interviewed for many a day. Whether it was from the desire to relieve his mind a moment or two from the pressing atmosphere of things connected with National Picture Theatres, Inc., or to take up a subject that interests him at the present time even more than enlarging the membership of the organization in question, Mr. Selznick immediately launched into a discussion of the recent meeting of representatives of the industry, called at Washington, D. C., by Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, at which a plan was worked out to enlighten the foreign element of the population of the United States on their good fortune in being subjects of Uncle Sam at this especial time. The plan in question aims at the Americanization of this foreign element by means of moving pictures, of one reel or at most two reels in length, fifty-two of which will be made by the various producing companies of the country, in which well-known stars will appear.

To Show Country's Opportunities.

"These pictures will show how it is possible for even the humblest man to be a success," said Mr. Selznick. "They will truthfully show the great opportunities in this country for every right-minded man, and that a poor rail-splitter, Abraham Lincoln, became one of the greatest presidents the country has had.

"I had the honor of being appointed chairman of the committee on distribution of these pictures and I am going to devote all my energy in seeing that they are shown in every city and hamlet in the country.

"I am already making a picture of the life of Lincoln, in which Thomas H. Ince will play that part. In this character he gained wide celebrity several years ago. The teaching powers of this picture will, therefore, be of lasting benefit, and no man of foreign birth, be he ever so ignorant of our language, can escape the convincing truth that this country is the best of all for a poor man, who is honest and who has the wish to better his condition.

Praise Work of Picture Men.

"During the Great War the moving picture men certainly did great work; but I do not believe that it has ever been recognized to the proper extent. In this case, with our able Secretary of the Interior Lane heading the enterprise, and with the various chairmen representing the producers, exhibitors and municipalities in support, we will be able to do even better work than during the war.

"This time our work will be recognized by the whole country, as a committee of the Senate and House of Representatives has requested producers, distributors and exhibitors to help out in the plan of Americanization of the people within our gates, who are ignorant of the real chances to better themselves which are offered in the United States.

"There is no doubt on my part when I say that producers, distributors and exhibitors will be able to make such a showing in this instance that the moving picture industry will be considered the greatest actor, outside the government, in this undertaking.

"It is because I feel this work is so important that I prefer to discuss it rather than my personal affairs in the business or the general conditions now prevailing, and I will appreciate it if you will devote your valuable space to this undertaking."

Mr. Selznick named the following as being chairmen of the various departments connected with the film Americanization campaign: Adolph Zukor, chairman of production; L. J. Selznick, chairman of distribution; Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C., chairman of exhibition, and Major Pullman, Chief of Police of Washington, D. C., chairman of municipalities throughout the country.

Dr. Sam Atkinson Appointed Business Manager of A. A. A.

AT a joint meeting of the officers of the Allied Amusement Association and of the Chicago Theatrical Managers' Association, held Friday, December 26, in the office of the first mentioned organization, in the Consumers Building, Doctor Sam Atkinson was appointed business manager of both organizations by a unanimous vote. The Theatrical Managers' Association includes all the legitimate, vaudeville and burlesque houses in Chicago, forty-one in number, while the A. A. A. represents 375 picture theatres and all the exchanges and accessory supply houses.

Doctor Atkinson's chief duties will include the perfecting of the A. A. A. organization, the conduct of its business and the protection of its interests as well as those of the Chicago Theatrical Managers' Association, by legislative means or otherwise.

Doctor Atkinson has been manager of the Hoyburn Theatre, in Evanston, for three years. During the past six months he has been special representative for Universal in Chicago territory. In this field he has been exceptionally successful, and the severance of his connections, in order to take up his future duties, is much regretted by Manager Lesserman, of the Chicago office.

Fought Censor Bills.

While he had charge of the Hoyburn Theatre, Evanston, Doctor Atkinson took a prominent part in all matters affecting the welfare of moving pictures. In 1916 and again in 1919, he was prominent among those who fought against the passage of the state censorship bills brought up for passage at Springfield. In the fight against the censor bill of 1919 he easily took the lead, both in propaganda work and in a campaign of public speeches.

He ranks among the foremost platform speakers in the industry and is referred to—throughout Illinois and the country at large, as "the silver-tongued orator of the movies."

Doctor Atkinson's entrance into the moving picture field took place in this way. During the season of 1912-13 he was lecturer for the National Rationalist Association. In his course of lectures he had several which dealt with the social significance of the modern drama. Because of his fearless manner in dealing with the stage plays, "Damaged Goods" and "Maternity," a warm friendship was formed between Richard Bennett and himself. As a result, he was requested to take charge of the first presentation of "Damaged Goods," in pictures, in Los Angeles, where he started the great censorship fight which led to the removal of the local censor board by the municipal authorities. Shortly afterwards he was instrumental in preventing the appointment of a state board of censorship in California.

Following that success he came East in the interests of producers, visiting and lecturing in over sixty of the leading cities throughout the United States.

Doctor Atkinson is held in high repute by all who know him. While strongly against the censorship of pictures, he is equally opposed to the making or screening of unclean pictures.

Picture Theatre Licenses Raised in Chicago for 1920

AT a meeting of the Chicago City Council, Monday, December 29, the license fees of theatres of all kinds, baseball parks, ice cream parlors, etc., were increased from 25 to 400 per cent. for 1920.

The loss of $7,000,000 in revenue through the closing of saloons is the cause of the increase, as the city must have sufficient funds to carry on.

The new license for theatres, including moving picture houses, is graded on seating capacity and admisison charge. For example: a theatre with a maximum seating capacity of 350 and an admission of not more than 25 cents, must pay a yearly tax of $200. For the same seating capacity and an admission of not over 49 cents, the tax is $250; for an admission of not over $1, the tax is $300, and for an admission of over $1, the tax is $1,000.

For a house seating not over 750 people, at the admissions cited in the former case, the tax is, in order, $250, $350, $400 and $1,000.

For a house seating not over 1,000, at the same admissions, in order, the tax is $300, $450, $500 and $1,200.

For a house of 2,500 capacity, at the same admissions, in order, the tax is $700, $800, $850 and $1,450.

Chicago exhibitors are satisfied with this license raise, seeing that they are largely benefited by the closing of saloons and that the city government must have sufficient funds to conduct the city's affairs.

Chicago Operators Want Another Raise in Wages

THE moving picture machine operators of Chicago have asked another raise in their weekly wage. They have decided that their minimum wage of $30 a week should be raised to $36.25 and that operators now receiving 90 cents an hour should be paid $1.25 an hour.

Local No. 110, I. A. T. S. E., has now a membership of 600, who are employed in moving picture and other theatres in Chicago. A meeting of the officers of the Allied Amusement Association with the officers of Local 110 has been arranged for Saturday, January 3.

Metro Uses Arizona Prison as Background for Picture

MORE like a modern hotel than a prison is the Arizona State Penitentiary, according to ten members of Bert Lytell's company filming "Alias Jimmy Valentine" for Screen Classics, Inc.

Arthur D. Ripley, the director, returned to the Metro studios in Hollywood, after five days at Florence, Ariz., and reported to Maxwell Karger, director general, that he had difficulty in locating barred windows at the prison for scenes of the Paul Armstrong crook play.

Besides taking pictures inside the prison, Mr. Ripley gave a special presentation of Nazimova's Chinese spectacle, "The Red Lantern," before the prisoners and officials.

Permission to use the Arizona prison as a setting was granted by the warden to David Thompson, production manager for Metro.

The filming began at the studios with scenes in the warden's office in Sing Sing prison. As it was necessary to have real prison atmosphere, the company made the trip to Florence.

Besides the director, Vola Vale, the leading woman and Sol Polito, the cameraman, the following members of the company made the trip: Nate Watt, Jack Huddleston, Ben Critchley, Marc Robbins, Mrs. Mayon, Clyde Dunbar and Frank Williams.

Balaban & Katz Join Forces With Ascher Brothers in Big Film Deal

IMPORTANT changes in the complexion of the first-run theatre situation in Chicago and throughout Illinois are expected to follow the purchase by Balaban and Katz of the 50 per cent. interest owned by Jones, Linick and Schaefer in the First National Exhibitors Circuit franchise for that territory.

The transfer of the half interest in the franchise, said to be at a cost to Balaban and Katz of $250,000, gives that firm an equal main franchise partnership with Ascher Brothers for all First National releases in the state. This carries with it the first-run privileges for the Riviera and the Central Park theatres, owned and operated by Balaban and Katz, and credited by central western exhibitors as two of the finest motion picture houses between the two coasts.

Heretofore, the downtown theatres, including the Randolph, McVicker's and Rialto, owned and operated by Jones, Linick and Schaefer, have given first-run presentations to the circuit's attractions. Whether this will continue to be the case until the Capitol, with 5,000 seats, is completed by Balaban and Katz as their first venture in the "Loop" district is not explained by them.

Long Business Experience.

Meantime, it is freely predicted that there is every possibility of a change in the downtown first-run showings of First National attractions, which will give this preference jointly to the Riviera and the Central Park, with the theatres controlled by Ascher Brothers joining in an equitable arrangement of dates which will give even honors to the houses controlled by both interests. The firm of Balaban and Katz, which consists of Abe and Barney Balaban and Sam Katz, has been in existence about four years, but the individual members have been connected with the picture business in one way or another for nearly twelve years. Before they combined forces, the Balaban brothers, Abe and Barney, managed the Circle, the Ashland and the Madlin theatres in Chicago, while Sam Katz and his father managed the Wallace, Avon and Illinois. Barney Balaban was at one time connected with the General Feature Film Company and later he and his brother opened the Movie Inn.

It was in 1916 that the firm of Balaban and Katz as it now exists came into being. That was when plans were laid for the erection of the Central Park Theatre.

Seized Their Opportunity.

With the opening of the Central Park Theatre came their opportunity. The theatre is located at Twelfth street and Central Park avenue, on the west side of the city.

Here Messrs. Balaban and Katz decided to put into effect their pet ideas. However, there were many who predicted failure. The result was another example of the fact that the public does appreciate the best, for the theatre was soon drawing its patronage from all parts of the city and many suburbs.

After the Central Park was well established in its success, announcement went forth that Balaban and Katz were to construct an even more elaborate theatre in the most aristocratic section of the North Side.

Opened Riviera in 1918.

This was the Riviera, which opened in the autumn of 1918, a theatre with a seating capacity of 2,400, even more beautifully equipped than the Central Park.

However, the firm of Balaban and Katz considers these achievements as only a good beginning. Already plans have been completed for the erection of two additional theatres, the Tivoli, which will be located in the southern section of the city, at Sixty-third street and Cottage Grove avenue, which will be their first downtown venture.

The Tivoli will seat about 4,500, and the Capitol, to be located at State and Lake streets, near Marshall Field's store, will seat about 5,000. These houses will, if plans do not miscarry, be completed before the close of the present year. Balaban and Katz confidently state that these theatres will far surpass even the brilliant Riviera and that the proposed Capitol will rival the famed opera houses of the great European cities.

The purchase of the large interest in the First National Exhibitors Circuit marks the entrance of this firm into the distributing field. While they state that they will continue to give most of their attention to their exhibition activities, they are already co-operating with the local First National exchange, especially in the exploitation of the pictures.

All Seattle Turned Out to See Midnight Matinee

THE Coliseum and the Liberty, the two largest Jensen and Von Herberg houses in Seattle, offered a unique New Year's Eve midnight matinee. It consisted of pre-release showings of Charlie Chaplin's and Fatty Arbuckle's latest comedies, "A Day's Pleasure" and "The Garage," also the latest Mack Sennett, "The Speak Easy," as well as a rollicking vaudeville and cabaret act, "The Overseas Revue," in which thirty entertainers appeared on the stage. The admission price was $1.

Many of the tickets were sold for both houses as early as Tuesday, and when the performances began at 11.15 p. m., both houses were filled. It was a gay time for everybody. Seattle-ites have become used to looking for the next best thing on New Year's Eve, since they have had to be without "the warming fluid" for the past four years.

The first New Year's Eve midnight matinee ever held in Seattle was at the Coliseum three years ago. It was wild cabaret party, and people have been looking forward to them every year since. Other theatres are giving midnight matinees on their regular programs.

"Gamble in Souls" Press Book Ready.

All press matter, campaign books and posters on "A Gamble in Souls," the Thomas H. Ince production which Triangle will release on January 25, is ready for distribution to exhibitors. "A Gamble in Souls" promises to be one of the biggest and most profitable release issued by Triangle in its new series of recreated productions. The combination of Dorothy Dalton, William Desmond, Thomas H. Ince and Triangle is a rare one for any producing company to release in one feature. Each of these four names has box-office value and the combination should make a red-letter day for any wise exhibitor.

Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 7.

MEANS for combating Sunday laws, burdensome censorship and usurpation or films by producers for advertising were devised by the Exhibitors' Protective League at a meeting in Minneapolis, Wednesday, January 7. Despite a severe storm, attendance was large from Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Wisconsin and the upper peninsula of Michigan. Telegrams, telephone calls and letters from delegates all over the Northwest, unable to attend because of the heavy snow, were received, pledging support in league undertakings.

Data will be collected immediately by H. L. Mitchell, executive secretary, on the amount of advertising paid by national advertisers and sold to exhibitors by producers at regular rates. Charles W. Gates, of Aberdeen, S. D., president, announced:

"Contracts were drawn pledging members not to buy any films carrying national advertising for which payment is not shared by the league. Investigation will be made to determine what share should go to the league. The contracts are effective for two years and violation will result in expulsion from league protection. All films for the territory will be passed on by Secretary Mitchell and league representatives. Reports will be made to league members on all films. National advertisers will be notified immediately that films carrying advertisements will not be shown by exhibitors unless a part of the payment made by them to the producer is shared with the exhibitor. The league aims only to obtain justice for its members and to stop sniping of the screen. Legitimate producers need not fear."

It is reported that the Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, which had close connection with Motion Picture Exhibitors of Americ a, has abandoned its organization and that all members have joined the league.

A Fine Time Was Had by All

Particularly here in Supreme Pictures' Reeve-Grey serial, "The Mystery Mind," starring J. Robert Pauline.

Plans were made for fighting the campaign begun by the South Dakota Ministerial Association by the introduction in the South Dakota legislature at its coming session of a bill for the censor committee as the first step in the fight against Sunday closing.

President Gates left immediately after the meeting for Eagle Grove, Iowa, to assist William Stewart, manager of the Empress Theatre, in his fight against a Sunday closing ordinance. Mr. Gates announced that the league has doubled in membership since its last meeting. The next meeting will be on February 3. Ruben and Finkelstine have joined the organization. A wire approving action taken at the meeting was received from Sidney Cohen, of the New York executive committee in charge of the campaign against sniping, consisting of President Gates, A. L. Robarg, Wausau, Wis; Vice-President F. E. Nemec, St. Cloud, Minn; Secretary S. G. Latta, Fergus Falls, Minn.; Treasurer A. L. Picker, Ironwood, Mich.; Fred Larkins, Anoka, Minn.; Phillip W. Myers, Minot, and J. C. Collins, Perry, Iowa, and Jay Gould, Glencoe, Minn.

Texas Exhibitors' Circuit, comprising eighty exhibitors in Texas, at a meeting of the board of governors, Sunday, January 4, tied up with Motion Picture Owners of America for the entire membership of the Southwest; also voted to include in its membership exhibitors of South Oklahoma and South Arkansas served by Dallas exchanges. It is thought this move will make the circuit self-sustaining.

Business for Lawyers Is Seen in "U-Boat" Films

THE ghost of Hun submarines broke the surface of the film-trade's otherwise troubled waters when the right to show "Log of the U-35" was questioned in New York January 6. The C. B. Price Company and the Fitzpatrick McElroy Company, the latter a Chicago firm, are heading for the courts to settle various matters at issue.

Counsel for the Price Company wrote the New York Strand and various film-distributing concerns, including Fitzpatrick McElroy Company, on January 6, advising those addressed that the Price Company owns the negative rights to "The Log of the U-35," promising that distribution of a print under any other title and covering the same matter would lead to business for lawyers. It is claimed that Price bought the negative and print from John Olsen & Co. of Copenhagen and that prints under the name of "The Lost Empire" are being distributed, alleged to be duped.

"The Log of the U-35 has been playing the New York Capitol, week starting January 5, and the New York Strand has been playing a film titled "The Lost Empire" covering the same dates.

"Thirteenth Commandment" Scheduled.

America's most common vice is said to be spending more than we earn. Rupert Hughes wrote a striking novel about it, called "The Thirteenth Commandment," and with the assistance of Alice Eyton, who wrote the scenario, and Robert G. Vignola, who directed, a more than ordinarily interesting motion picture is said to have been made of the story and it is to be released on the Paramount-Artcraft schedule January 11. Ethel Clayton is the star.

Miss Clayton has been surrounded with a strong cast. Charles Meredith is the leading man. Anna Q. Nilsson is the idle wife. Monte Blue is the harassed husband and Irving Cummings has a congenial villain role. Winter Hall, Arthur Maude, Veverly Travers, Lewis Morrison and Jane Wolff are also in the cast.

Zukor-Loew.

In the presence of 350 guests assembled in the Crystal Room of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, Mildred Harriet Zukor, daughter of Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Arthur Marcus Loew, son of Marcus Loew, president of the Loew Circuit of theatres, were united in marriage on the afternoon of Tuesday, January 6, at 5:30. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Shephen S. Wise.

The room where the ceremony took place was artistically decorated under the supervision of artists from the Famous Players-Lasky studio on Fifty-sixth street and a motion picture camera recorded the nuptials from the moment when Miss Lucille Goldstein, flower girl, started strewing rose petals down the steps of the Crystal Room in the path of the bridal party. The marriage was solemnized under a canopy of pink and white lilies.

Robson-Ledoux.

Stuart Robson, son of the actor, Stuart Robson, was married January 7, at the City Hall, New York, to Yvette Ledoux, of Boston, daughter of the former United States Ambassador to Portugal.

Young Mr. Robson is playing the juvenile lead in the production of Augustus Thomas' drama, "The Harvest Moon," now being filmed with Doris Kenyon as star by Dietrich-Beck, Inc., at the Leah Baird Studios, Cliffside, N. J.

Jeanie Macpherson On Film Limits and the Joys of Unbounded Space

By Edward Weitzel

THIS may be telling tales outside the screen schoolroom, but it has its humorous side, so out the story pops. Jeanie Macpherson and I were chatting good-naturedly about the deep concern shown by one or two critics of the New York dailies over the changes made in the Barrie play when it was adapted to the screen. Said the scenarist of "Male and Female":

"One of the young men who reproached me for taking liberties with the work of the Scotch dramatist never saw the original piece."

"If he had," said I, "he might have realized that the plays of even the most gifted authors get out of date."

No Room for an Argument.

"Dreadfully so, at times," exclaimed Miss Macpherson. "This cry of mutilation of the novels and dramas of famous writers by their screen adaptors is often a sentimental pose which, if heeded, would doom many a costly picture to financial ruin. Take this one point in the Barrie Play: Twenty years ago, when 'The Admirable Crighton' was written, class distinction was spoken of in England in tones of worshipped admiration. A world war had not then tumbled social divisions about with a rude hand, and labor had not gone on strike to such an extent that noble lords and younger sons of famous old families were to be seen acting as engine-drivers on English railways or hustling some other chap's luggage along a station platform. Class distinction has been greatly discredited since the war, and if we had stuck to this theme in the way Barrie did we would have exhausted it for present day screen purposes before the end of the second reel."

"That is to say," I put in with the conviction of one who hears his own views backed up by competent authority, "Barrie let nothing interfere with what was then an important theme, and turned out a highly successful play. Cecil De Mille and you let nothing interfere with bringing this play up to date, and have turned out a moving picture that not only squares with screen technic but is commercially correct."

The Limitations of the Screen.

"Perhaps," said Miss Macpherson, "overlooking the fact that it is necessary to fit a novel or a stage play to screen form, not alter the screen form to fit the material, may be the cause of this outcry against the cutting and shaping and patching which always goes on when a photoplay is adapted from some drama or book. When I first took an interest in the theatre I remember there was the same criticism of dramatised novels. And when I went on the stage and heard the matter discussed from the other side and learned the reasons for making the changes, I realized that there are tricks in all trades—the kind of tricks that enable a master of stagecraft to write a play which will run for 100 nights or more. It is the same with the screen dramatist; he has to learn his trade from the inside; its limitations, first of all."

An Airwoman at Home.

Standing outside the door of the Macpherson suite at the Hotel Astor the mental picture I had drawn of the Famous Players-Lasky scenarist was that of a determined looking young woman whose ability to manage an airship and whose love of danger would be reflected in her dress and manner. When the door was opened by a rather slightly built young person gowned in a most becoming pink silk affair, and a pleasantly modulated voice bade me enter, I so far controlled my surprise as not to say:

"Thank you....is....is Miss Macpherson in?"

The Joys of Unbounded Space.

My first question was in reference to those spins of hers among the clouds:

"I beg pardon, Miss Macpherson, but is it true that you do a few hundred miles in your airplane when you want to rest your nerves?"

"Yes," was the smiling reply.

"And does it really rest them? I know I should have to leave mine ashore before venturing on such a trip."

"Not after you become used to flying. When my brain gets fagged and my nerves start to put in a protest I try the upper air treatment. There isn't any tonic on earth like it."

"That's its great drawback—you have to leave the earth in order to take it. Quite a number of screen folk on the Coast are addicted to the hazardous habit, I believe."

"Yes, indeed! Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford are among the stars that go in for flying. And of course you know that Mr. DeMille was one of the first to take up aviation as a sport."

"So I've heard."

The leading airwoman of the Paramount forces put another question:

"Have you heard about Jesse Lasky's first trip in a flying machine?"

I was obliged to confess ignorance.

A Pilot's Thoughtful Politeness.

"To get the full benefit of the story you should hear Mr. Lasky himself tell it. Most people, if they told the truth about their feelings on the first trip would be forced to admit that they did not feel in a frame of mind to enjoy the sail with any extra supply of calm confidence. Mr. Lasky is positively frank in admitting he was no exception to the established rule, and it's a treat to listen to him describe how hard he tried to make himself believe what jolly fun he was having and what a dismal failure he made of the attempt. He had been up for several minutes when he noticed that the pilot was evidently trying to say something to him, but the roar of the engine completely drowned his voice. Presently the pilot tried it again and made still more frantic efforts to be heard. The apprehensive passenger could think of but one thing: something had gone wrong with the plane and the pilot was telling him to get ready to jump. Finding there was no other way to communicate with the head of the Lasky Company, the air man shut off his engine and asked politely of his now frightened passenger:

"'Are you enjoying the sail?'"

"'Yes, thank you,' replied Mr. Lasky, 'now that I know what it is you wanted to say to me.'"

There was a small gilt clock on the mantel and I glanced at it regretfully. Half of the time allotted to me had passed, and it is always so agreeable to have one's own opinions backed up by the aforementioned competent authority.

Jeanie Macpherson.

The Day of the Director Has Come With the Advent of All-Star Casts

By CECIL B. DE MILLE

MUCH has been said recently regarding the future of the photo-drama. "Better pictures," "greater attention to artistic and mechanical details" and a score of similar phrases have been appearing in the conversation and the interviews of the leaders of the industry.

I believe firmly in the truth of these prophetic utterances. Pictures will be better, higher pinnacles of artistic achievement will be attained and greater mechanical perfection will be achieved. But so far, no one has cited the reason for this forthcoming improvement.

The reason or reasons, in my opinion, are based on this fact: The era of the director has arrived. In the old Biograph days the picture that moved was the thing. Those early efforts were successful because that was the era of the "moving picture." From this primary stage, by gradual degrees, we achieved the era of the star. The public learned to discriminate between the work of the many film actors and actresses. Those that the public favored achieved tremendous popularity.

Tired of Names.

But the public soon tired of names. Exhibitors learned that a star in a good photoplay drew the people; a star in a poor production was a losing venture. At this stage of the screen's progress, a few of us read the handwriting on the wall. What the public really wanted was not a lone star in a mediocre story backed by indifferent support, but a well-rounded cast portraying a story of real merit.

It was not a simple matter to convince the business men of the producing corporations of the saneness of this change in policy. The star idea has taken exceedingly firm root in their minds. But a few of us ultimately convinced our associates and small beginning was made. Today the non-star photoplay with a well-rounded cast, worth-while story and careful direction is achieving the success which no star's production could ever hope to attain.

The Director's Golden Era.

What has gone before along the line of this type of motion picture has been, to a certain extent, experimental. We have been feeling our way. Now we have found it and 1920 will, I believe, see the true beginning of the golden era of the director.

I do not claim that the day of the star is past. On the contrary, I believe that the star's popularity in almost every instance is founded on the merit of his or her work. True merit will continue to receive its tribute.

Triangle to Release Four Comedies During February

TRIANGLE will release four comedies during the month of February. These will be a continuation of the re-created comedy releases which are meeting with much favor among exhibitors, due to their advertising value, as many of the best known comedians, such as Mabel Normand, Mack Sennett, Syd Chaplin, Chester Conklin, Roscoe Arbuckle, Mack Swain, Ford Sterling and the original Mack Sennett-Keystone Bathing Beauties, are featured in each of these productions. On February 1, "His Baby Doll," a one reel comedy, will be released. "The Dancing Master," a two reel Triangle comedy, will be available February 8. Another one reel Triangle, entitled "His Day of Doom," will be released February 16. February 24 is the date set by Triangle for the release of the two reel comedy "The Love Riot."

The Mack Sennett-Keystone comedy featuring Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle and Ford Sterling, entitled, "A Lunch Room Romance," was released January 4. "Only a Farmer's Daughter," a two reel Mack Sennett-Keystone comedy, featuring Louise Fazenda and Chas. Murray, will be released on January 11. January 18, the one reel Mack Sennett-Keystone comedy, "Mabel's Speed Cop," with Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle and Ford Sterling, is scheduled for release. "She Loved a Nut," with Mary Thurman and Ray Griffith, a two reel Mack Sennett-Keystone comedy, will be available January 25.

Exhibitors Acclaim Triangle Film.

"The Clodhopper," the Thomas H. Ince production featuring Charles Ray, which Triangle released January 4, has been welcomed by exhibitors as an assured money-making release. The popularity of Charles Ray among movie fans is realized by wise theatre managers, and they are taking advantage of this fact by booking "The Clodhopper" for a run.

Molly Malone in "Molly's Millions."

The first picture in which Molly Malone will be featured as a star in Supreme Comedies, released through Robertson-Cole, will be Molly's Millions," directed by Scott Sidney. James Liddy is the other featured lead in this story, which was prepared by Frank R. Conklin.

May Allison in "The Walk-Offs" Walks Off with the Palm and the Bouquet.
Some charming glimpses of charming May in her newest Metro Screen Classic.

This Is "Live Sparks"; and When It Comes to Sparking, Warren Kerrigan Wins the Platinum Carburetor.
Showing "Handsome Harry" himself in these scenes from his Robert Brunton feature for Hodkinson.

"Juggernaut" Comes First.

"The Juggernaut" will be the first of a series of five Anita Stewart features which will be released by Vitagraph during the first half of this year. The others include "The More Excellent Way," "Clover's Rebellion," "The Message of the Mouse" and "The Daring of Diana." "The Juggernaut," which has been edited by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester, will be released next month.

Five-Reel Show Draws Crowds in Pittsburgh

USING a two-reel production as a feature without a longer subject to fill out the program is a precedent which was set recently among Pittsburgh first-run houses by the Columbia Theatre. The house did turnaway business with Charlie Chaplin in "A Day's Pleasure," a short western subject, a news reel and a travelogue, making five reels in all. The regular scale of prices was maintained, and the shortness of the program gave an opportunity for an extra showing each day, which enabled the theatre to establish a new house record for attendance.

No exploitation outside of increased newspaper space was attempted by the Columbia, but from the opening performance the seating capacity of the theatre was taxed to its uttermost. The Columbia had the keenest sort of competition also, for the Liberty during the same week was running Anita Stewart in "Mind the Paint Girl." The Million-Dollar Grand was also running the Anita Stewart picture and the Olympic had Constance Talmadge in "The Virtuous Vamp." The last two named theatres are on the same block and almost across the street from the Columbia. Despite the big attendance which these three theatres drew, however, the short program at the Columbia was one of the most popular which has ever been given in Pittsburgh.

Knoles Signs With Famous Players.

Harley Knoles, who recently began directing Dorothy Dalton in "Half an Hour," Sir James M. Barrie's play, has signed a long-term contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to direct Paramount Artcraft pictures. "Half an Hour" is the second Paramount Artcraft picture to be made by Mr. Knoles, the first having been David Graham Phillips' novel, "The Cost," featuring Violet Heming.

"Tiger Girl," Starring Lillian Gish, To Be Triangle's February Release

TIGER GIRL" will be the only Triangle release during February and follows the Thomas H. Ince "A Gamble in Souls," with Dorothy Gish and William Desmond, which will be released on January 25. "Tiger Girl" is said to be one of the best productions made by the D. W. Griffith-Lillian Gish combination. Due to the popularity of both Mr. Griffith and Miss Gish at this time, this production has large money-making possibilities and will undoubtedly score a great success with the public. A large advertising campaign will be begun by Triangle to acquaint the public with this production, and exhibitors will have the same opportunity to cash in on this feature as they have on Mr. Griffith's more recent productions.

The play shows Miss Gish in the sympathetic and appealing role of the unsophisticated wife battling in her own way for the man she loves, a man whose ears are deaf to her appeal but who listens eagerly to the song of the siren. It is the ever present battle of vice and virtue, of good and evil, of the lily and the rose.

Those in the Cast.

Miss Gish gives a strong portrayal of the deserted wife, whose husband is won from her side by the wiles of a dancer of the music halls. The role of the dancer is finely essayed by Rosizka Dolly, one of the famous Dolly Sisters, whose fame among the theatre-going public is well known.

Wilfred Lucas, strong, powerful and Irish, is an excellent wayward husband. Elmer Clifton, Lyola O'Connor, Cora Drew, Mary Alden and William Hinckley are also in the cast. The production is admirably staged and elaborately produced.

The story is full of dramatic interest and suspense. It is a story which not only entertains but which will make the patrons of any house think and talk. It deals with a young country girl brought up in genteel surroundings, the idol of her two old aunts with whom she lives. A quarrel with her sweetheart results in sending her into the arms of a city bred, world-wise man of the "round-the-town" type. He sees the youth and sweetness which she possesses and for a time makes an ideal husband. But he cannot repress the urge for the gay life and finally falls for the wiles of the dancer. He leaves his wife, who returns back to her old home. Then comes the climax as D. W. Griffith conceived it.

Many Brave Weather to See "Beloved Cheater"

PLAYING against some of the biggest productions of the year, the Robertson-Cole special, "The Beloved Cheater," starring Lew Cody, broke all records at the Criterion Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., two days the week of December 29. Although booked against three special first-run pictures within three blocks, "The Beloved Cheater" was received with auspicious greetings, and when the star, Lew Cody, made his personal appearance, another chapter in his history of success was written.

The Criterion Theatre is situated on the boardwalk facing the ocean. At the opening performance, more than 1,700 men and women braved a flurry of snow and weather registered ten above zero and fought to get into the theatre. The afternoon performances and the last evening also saw the "S. R. O." sign displayed before the up-to-date film playhouse.

Manager O'Keefe, after the four-day showing, asked for return dates on "The Beloved Cheater." He predicted great things for the first of the Robertson-Cole specials for the new year. The theatre was especially decorated for the showing of "The Beloved Cheater" and a special musical program added to the evening's program.

June Elvidge Not Featured.

Contrary to an erroneous report, June Elvidge is not to be featured in "The Law of the Yukon," which Charles Miller is directing. The Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, for whom this production is being made, does not feature players. The leading feminine role in "The Law of the Yukon," Goldie Meadows, is being portrayed by Nancy Deaver, who is a new ingenue type making her first screen appearance in this photoplay.

Edward Earle is playing the leading male role, John Kleath. This production is for Mayflower and will be released through Realart.

"Live Sparks," Starring Kerrigan, To Be Released Soon by Hodkinson

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces for mid-January release J. Warren Kerrigan's fourth Robert Brunton production, "Live Sparks," a delightful comedy-drama of the Texas oil fields, prints of which were shipped this week to all Hodkinson exchanges.

As a story "Live Sparks," leaves little room for improvement. It has rollicking humor, drama, cohesive action and a striking plot; as a production it is remarkable for technical finish, clear photography and clever casting, Mr. Kerrigan's company including Fritzie Brunette, Joseph J. Dowling, Arthur Millette, John Steppling, Roy Laidlaw and Mary Jane Irving, announces Hodkinson.

The leading role of "Neil Sparks" is admirably suited to the popular idol of romance, and he plays it with a new dash and virility that is exceptionally pleasing. He is seen as a lively young millionaire with a decided faculty for getting himself into one scrape after another.

Spectacular Effects.

Several spectacular effects have been introduced to heighten the effect of the smashing climax, notably the burning of an oil derrick and a thrilling fight scene in which several hundred people are employed.

The new Kerrigan pisture, directed by Ernest C. Warde, who supervised the production of all Kerrigan-Brunton vehicles, is from the pen of Caroline Sayre, who lists among her successes "Kentucky Lew," "Missouri Folk" and "Sold." A number of pre-release engagements have been contracted for by big exhibitors in the Chicago and San Francisco territories.

Murray Becomes a Benedict.

H. L. Murray, booker for Hallmark Pictures, in Washington, D. C., celebrated Christmas Eve by standing up before the altar and saying all kinds of "I wills" while the parson said "Whom God hath joined let no man put asunder," and Miss Madeline S. Wood, blushed, smiled and looked charming, and echoed those replies.

Mr. Murray is a brave man. He proved that once before when he was with the 77th Infantry, the organization that was associated with the "Lost Battalion."

And That's Quite Enough.

Canadian Dramatic Critic Raps American Productions

S. MORGAN-POWELL, dramatic critic of the Montreal Star and acknowledged as one of the leading theatrical authorities of Canada, takes a rap at moving picture productions of the United States during the course of a discussion regarding film developments in Canada. His editorial offering, in part, is as follows:

"The American film is given preference over the British because the American interests are fully organized here whereas the British motion picture interests have only just begun to organize for the Dominion. An inevitable result of this has been the flooding of the Canadian motion picture market with all the flag propaganda, Wild West and other purely and exclusively American material.

"If, with additional facilities for the exhibition of motion pictures throughout the country, the selection of the class of pictures is to be left to American decision instead of Canadian, then the outlook will be worse than ever instead of better. There are exceptions, of course, where managers have carefully and assiduously studied the tastes of their particular clientele but such instances are few and far between.

"Canadians want the best American pictures, of course, but they also want the best British pictures and they do not want the sort of propaganda that goes down in Chicago and Milwaukee as 'great stuff.' In a word, Canadians want to control their own motion picture houses. The only way to insure such control is for Canadian capital to put its money into the motion picture houses. You cannot control if you are afraid of taking the steps that alone will entitle you to control."

New Title Artist for Selznick.

The Selznick eastern studio forces have been further augmented, it was announced this week, by the addition of a California title artist.

Irivn J. Martin, considered one of the best title artists in the business, has arrived in Fort Lee from the Sunset State to take charge of the Selznick art department at the New Jersey studios.

New Kaufman Weekly by Selznick Stars Bruznova

FOLLOWING the interest aroused by the national and trade paper campaign being conducted in behalf of Selznick pictures, included in which are the Herbert Kaufman Weekly subjects filmed from the widely known writer's editorials, it was announced this week by Lewis J. Selznick that Madame Halina Bruznova will have the leading role in the second Kaufman Weekly, "The Faded Butterfly." This subject is now in the process of production at the Fort Lee studios and upon release will be distributed by Select.

In the leading male role of "The Faded Butterfly" is Warren Chandler. Little Helen Reinecke, child actress who has appeared in several Selznick productions, is to appear in this picture as the daughter.

The first Kaufman Weekly, "Little Red Riding Hood," has gone through the cutting room, emerging from the process in what is announced as "first class condition" and pronounced excellent to show on the screen of every motion picture theatre. The third Kaufman Weekly is scheduled as "Puppy Love" and is expected to be well under way shortly at the Fort Lee studios.

In connection with the national advertising on the Kaufman Weekly, Lewis J. Selznick used four full pages in the Saturday Evening Post of December 27, thereby fulfilling his purpose to create audiences for the exhibitors even before the release of the first subject, "Little Red Riding Hood."

English Girl War Veteran Seeks Director's Address

A COMELY young Englishwoman, heroine of many battles in the late war, motor driver for French generals during four and a half years of fighting, nurse in French hospitals, and an airplane driver of real skill, is eager to go into screen work in America; but it must be motion picture work that requires skill and daring, not lovemaking.

An American director who fought with the American army is to blame. He met the brave little Englishwoman at Chateau-Thierry—the hell in which the American army got its real christening—and, in rests between fighting, he promised the young woman a job in pictures if she would come to America. She lost his name and address, but still remembers him and his promise, so she is making a public appeal to him to respond.

If the soldier-director wishes to keep his promise, he can find the young woman by addressing G. W., care of E. S. M. P., 19 Coleman Street, London, E. C.

Changes in Crandall Forces.

Two changes in the Crandall forces have been noted within the past few days, resulting in a change of management at the Ninth and E streets theatre and the Avenue Grand, Washington, D. C.

John Keenan, who was manager of the Avenue Grand before it was taken over by Harry Crandall and who has since continued in that capacity, has resigned and will probably return to his old home in Wilmington, Del.

Mr. Keenan will be succeeded by H. C. Lehmeyer, who has been manager of the Ninth and E streets theatre, and that house will be put under the management of L. E. Wilson, son of the manager of the local Vitagraph exchange, who has just joined the Crandall forces. Mr. Wilson was formerly assistant to his father.

Burlingham, First to Film "Suwanee Ribber," Finds It Beauty-Festooned

FREDERICK BURLINGHAM, whose adventures have led him into many strange parts of the world, has just returned to New York from his Florida jungles, where he filmed the famous Suwanee River. His pictures will be released on the Paramount-Burlingham schedule of adventure scenics.

His story of exploration makes one wonder why this widely known stream never before has been screened.

"In looking over the American field for something new to film," said Mr. Burlingham to a representative of Moving Picture World, "I was amazed to find that no one yet had been 'Way Down on the Suwanee Ribber.'

Suwanee Inspires Patriotism.

"Before leaving for Jacksonville, Fla., I made some inquiries, but no one in New York seemed to know just where the Suwanee River was. I went down quietly, not wishing to attract attention. There were no boats on the upper Suwanee, so I built one with an airdrive engine so as to get over the shoals and sunken logs without mishap, and after filming some scenes in the Okefenokee Swamp in Georgia, where the river rises, left White Springs for the Gulf of Mexico with an improvised crew.

"Every genuine American ought to go down the Suwanee. The sight of this river, to those who know the song, will inspire more patriotism, more love of country, than all the Lusk committees and defense societies born and unborn.

"I saw it for the first time at night. When I arrived at White Springs, a primitive, ante-bellum resort, my first thought was to go alone to the river bank, to make a pilgrimage as it were, and as I wandered there in the gloaming, with the live oak trees weeping with festoons of Spanish moss, with the mocking birds singing in the night and the crickets and katydids chirping the refrain came to me:

Hard to Keep Back Tears.

"'Dar's where my heart is turning ebber, dar's where de old folks stay.'

"As I gazed on the Suwanee River for the first time it was hard to hold back the tears. If an American believes it easy, just try it.

"'The Suwanee River' has been called the song of the homesick. In the old days when songs had small publicity 400,000 copies of the 'Old Folks at Home' were sold in a few weeks, and eventually translated into almost every language and many Asiatic and African dialects.

"Echo River."

"The Suwanee River, mysterious, wild, lonely and semi-tropical, however, is a reality. As we floated towards the Gulf we passed innumerable wild razor-back hogs, groups of turtles sunning on the logs, now and then an alligator, but frequently cranes and herons and many turkey buzzards silent in the great dead trees.

"The bank of the Suwanee is lined with hanging moss and palmettos, and as the water is dark amber from the cypress tree roots, it forms, when not rippled, a perfect mirror, so that in looking towards the shore one seems to see the trees underneath and inverted. This may be why the Indians called it Suwanee, which translated means 'Echo River.'

"Near the junction of the Suwanee and the Withlocoochee we passed a native 'cracker,' or backswoodsman, apparently doing nothing on the bank. I asked him how far to Beeson shoals, and he replied, 'Two miles.' But he had a very pretty daughter near him, and an Irishman in our party, to be gallant, bowed low and tipped his hat. The girl ducked behind a tree, like a startled doe. The old man said nothing, but simply reached for his gun and cocked it. The movement was eloquent, and, believe me, we 'beat it.'

Makes You Homesick.

"These pioneer settlers are of a sturdy race and nearly always go armed. If friends, there are none truer. If you get in bad with them then you had better leave the country while the going is good.

"We camped nearly two weeks on the Suwanee and came back to civilization with a growing feeling of homesickness, a longing which is still vivid for palmettos and cypress water and the indefinite perfume of many flowers which bloom there all winter."

Mr. Burlingham leaves the end of this week for Vancouver, where he sails January 21 for the Fiji Islands, New Zealand and the South Seas, to be gone until next July.

Goldwyn Presents Group of Interesting Subjects

ARTISTIC photography of high order is found in the Ford Weekly, "Eventide," a study of cloud and water effects at dusk on a picturesque lake. The film is finely toned and tinted to give the scenes the quality of a painting and will prove an excellent attraction on any program, especially if it is supported by an appropriate musical accompaniment. Some of the most charming scenes in the picture introduce remarkable moonlight effects.

Two other subjects introduced in this film are intimate studies of animal life. One shows the beaver at work building a dam, felling trees, gnawing them into sections and constructing his house. The other presents the Canadian porcupine, stripping the trees of leaves and defending himself against attack with his stinging quills. Both of these subjects will be of particular interest to students of nature.

A novel title for an unusual subject treated in No. 7022 of the Goldwyn-Bray Pictagraph is "Valuable Holes." By way of explanation, gold is taken from holes, the soldiers in France found the dugout a fortunate place of refuge, manholes are a necessary part of the passages running under city streets, the hole in the needle is indispensable to its usefulness, the hole in a life buoy has been instrumental in saving many lives, and so on through a long list of valuable holes.

"How Ice Is Harvested" is a particularly timely subject for January release, and appears also in this number.

Special Distribution for Urban Educational Films

THE growing importance of the educational market as a solid plane of investment is becoming more and more evident as men of brain and means continue to fall for the idea; while those who have long exhibited faith in spite of obstacles, still remain firm in their convictions, and attack the game with renewed energy and more progressive methods.

Long ago, for instance, Charles Urban, a man with the bump of thoroughness well developed, began to gather material of scientific, industrial, historic and other interest, films of happenings from all parts of the world—carefully detailed illustration of important events. These negatives in addition to new ones constantly arriving at the offices of the Kineto Company of America, Inc., are being utilized in separate series of educational interest known as "Movie Chats" and "Kineto Reviews."

One of the most important points in Mr. Urban's return to the spot light is the fact that he has embraced the system of special distribution, which does away with the limitations of the less adequate method of regular release through the regulation exchange. The latter method so long in vogue meant a meteoric career on the part of each film released.

Charles Urban is distributing through Cinema Classics, Inc. This method of distribution means that one year or even five years hence, any number of the splendid Urban series will be available for use in theatres, schools, churches or any place they may be desired.

In the "Kineto Reviews" appear such subjects as "Trip of the U. S. S. Idaho to Brazil," "New York, America's Gateway," "Beauty Spots in the United States and Canada," "Kentucky Thoroughbreds" and "While Canons Crashed" the story of "no man's land." Included in the "Movie Chats" are subjects of varied interest all handled in a professional and entertaining way.

These films, each one reel in length, are being added to at the rate of four reels per week. In the near future they will be found in Urban film libraries located at convenient points throughout the country.

Some Things Worth Knowing

That Underwood & Underwood have purchased the rights to the touriscope, an invention by F. H. White. The touriscope practically revolutionizes the stereopticon slide in that it places on a reel of film two and one-fourth inches wide pictures required for a lecture, in the succession in which they should come, and as many as are required for one lecture. This reel is manipulated by a lever, and as one picture is dissolved another is released.

That moving picture advertising was carried to a fine point by B. D. Nice & Company, music publishers, when they converted to the screen brief glimpses of vaudeville acts by artists using their publications, with neatly worded advertisements in the inserts. The advertisement is made to work three ways—it advertises the publisher, the composer and the vaudeville artist. Into the first of the series are gathered a remarkable number of artists, including the Mosconi family, the Cameron sisters, Ted Lewis and George and Dick Rath. By a clever trick of business these films are expected to be shown in theatres throughout the country. They are known as Vaudegraphs.

That Camilla Donworth, of the Films of Business, in an address delivered recently at the New York University, declared for the moving picture as an advertising medium, and also made the interesting statement that five years can be lopped off the period of education from kindergarten through the university, by a discriminate use of motion pictures in conjunction with text books.

That the Fox News in its release No. 26 demonstrated the fact that in America the workman has an equal chance with the rich to attain high places in the Nation's councils, when they filmed Congressmen John G. Cooper, of Ohio; William L. Carrs, of Minnesota; Patrick McLane, of Pennsylvania, and William L. Burke, of Pennsylvania as they donned uniforms and overalls and set out from the Union Station, Washington, in charge of a train. These men were formerly employed on the railroad.

That every day Charles F. Campbell, of the Red Cross Institute for the Blind at Baltimore, Md., reads a summary of current events to the blind soldiers, followed by gems of humor from "Topics of the Day," selected by the Literary Digest, screened by Timely Films, Inc., and distributed by the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

That Attorney General Palmer has enlisted the assistance of the Pathe News in fighting the menace of wood alcohol, and that its closing issue of 1919 carried a warning as a feature of the news.

* * *

That the Community Motion Picture Bureau of New York is providing service for one of the largest factory motion picture theatres in the country—that of the Edison Lamp Works at Harrison, N. J. This theatre, which is used twice a week during the noon hour, is most elaborate. It boasts an orchestra, organized from the roll of employes, which is larger than those of many public theatres. It seats 1,300, and has the finest of mechanical equipment, including a large screen and a specially made portable projection booth. A modern ventilating apparatus has also been installed.

That Milton Ray Hartman, of the Swiss Eagle Film Enterprise, recently arrived from Berne, is at No. 40 Beverly road, Ridgewood, N. J., and has with him considerable footage of film showing Swiss Boy Scouts mountaineering, and views of the Swiss high Alps taken from an airplane.

That one of the latest of the Robert C. Bruce scenics, "Chilkat Cubs," presented at the Rialto Theatre during the week of December 28, is one of the most unique of animal pictures. It presents the story of a couple of bear cubs, Wow and Woof. Wow is the wayward brother of Woof, who tries to do the sisterly act of nagging to the best of her ability, and finally succeeds in driving her brother to the open road.

That the Children's Holiday Theatre run by Hugo Riesenfeld at the 63d street Music Hall during the Christmas and New Yeark season, was a success. The children enjoyed the carefully selected programs, and the Christmas pantomime in which Santa came in through the chimney place, lighted the Christmas tree, distributed toys to the two sleeping children, and demonstrated to them in their dreams two wonderful animated dolls, which stepped from boxes at either side of the stage. The features presented were "Rags," "The Man from Mexico," "Puddin' Head Wilson," "Seven Swans," "The Dummy," "Tom Sawyer" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

That C. L. Winston, Famous Players-Lasky's exploitation representative in Denver, in his campaign for "Every Woman" in that city, not only succeeded in creating a tremendous amount of interest and talk about the picture, but obtained the written indorsement of a number of the city's clergymen.

* * *

That Bertin E. Moisant, a Fox cameraman, recently accompanied Lieutenant Milton Elliott on a hair-raising flight above San Francisco and Oakland. The first of these pictures was taken in a wild nose dive toward San Francisco, in which the buildings of the city seem to rush directly at the spectator. Views of the famous Cliff House, the City Hall of Oakland, and other points of interest seen from the airplane appear in the Fox News No. 25.

Republic's Newest on News and Industry

Prizma's most recent release through Republic shows "The Big Guns of the Navy." It is a highly interesting portrayal of the launching of the dreadnaught, the manufacture of the guns, the training of their crews and target practice.

Being in natural colors, this picture has an entirely new interest, showing in realistic manner scenes impossible of adequate portrayal without the colors.

The target practice aboard is perhaps the most interesting feature of a most interesting subject. To actually see the lurid flash of the guns as the black smoke-cloud rolls away over the ocean's blue, is a spectacle never before shown with such absolute perfection.

Kinograms contains such subjects as repairing the Northern Pacific which ran aground at Fire Island last year, a Swedish ship riding in the Hudson River, cavalry riding to music at Fort Bliss, Texas; Japan's J. P. Morgan; Shibusawa, the Orient's foremost ironmaster, and reclaiming farm lands from the marsh waters near Choupique, La.

Tyrad Pictures Distribute "Wonders of Nature" Series

TYRAD PICTURES, INC., have secured the state and world's rights for "Wonders of Nature," a series of single reel nature studies, compiled and produced by Prof. W. L. Brind, naturalist, author and cinematographer. There are fifty-two subjects in the series and under the arrangement with Matthias Radin, president of Tyrad, they will be released one each week.

"Wonders of Nature," as produced by Prof. Brind, are exploited as educative subjects, snappily titled and entertainingly present events in the little known lives of living creatures. This series was given pre-release showings at the Strand, Rialto and Rivoli theatres, New York.

They have the endorsement of personages like Thomas A. Edison and Jacob Schiff and such institutions as the American Museum of Natural History, the University of Illinois, the Department of Public Instruction and the New York Public Library. A partial list includes, "Small Tropical Fish," "Bees and Humans," "A Fish Story," "Bird Comedians," "Ant Antics," "Gold Fish Extroadinary" and "Butterflies That Flutter By."

Don Carlos Ellis Head of Universal Pedagogicals

IT was announced some time ago that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company had contracted to supply animated illustrations for the school and college text books of D. Appleton & Company. Material assurance of this fact is expected to be given within the next month, and work is to be begun on the task immediately.

For the facilitation of this work, Don Carlos Ellis, formerly in charge of the vizualization section of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., has been engaged to take charge of the production of pedagogical films. Mr. Ellis has been a member of the Department of Agriculture for twelve years, and in charge of its moving picture section for the past two years. Under his supervision, the Department of Agriculture became the leader among government departments in educational film production, and has for the past year released an average of five hundred feet of new subjects a week of a fine quality of instructional film.

The actual commencement of this work by the Universal marks an important step in the history of the pedagogical film—it means a start in the right direction. Practically every subject of the school curricula from the primary grades to the university are to be visualized, according to the conceived plan. Not only such subjects as history, geography, nature study, physics, geology, biology, chemistry and agriculture, which obviously lend themselves to graphic picturization, but such subjects as accounting and mathematics, which, contrary to general impressions, are admirably suited to screen presentation.

Samples of these films are expected to be shown at the convention of the National Education Association, which will be held in Cleveland, commencing February 23.

Ten Film Men Resign from Omaha Commerce Chamber

THE Omaha Chamber of Commerce has accepted the resignations of ten picture men and firms who resigned because the chamber permitted its executive committee chairman to urge the closing of picture theatres even after the coal strike was settled. F. A. Brogan, who wired to Washington in the name of the Omaha Chambe asking that the theatres be kept closed, was presiding at the time the resignations were accepted.

Those who resigned are: H. M. Thomas, manager of the Rialto Theatre; C. L. Peavey, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange; C. W. Taylor, manager of the Select exchange; C. E. Holah, manager of the A. H. Blank Enterprises; W. R. McFarland, S. H. Goldberg, W. H. Jones and Harry Rachman, of the World Realty Company, owners of the Sun, Moon and Muse theatres. Two of the firms had memberships which were withdrawn. At the time Mr. Brogan made his request, the chamber was waging a campaign among the amusement men of the city, trying to induce them to become members. All those who had been solicited wrote to the chamber that they would not join.

Just within the last week have th last few theatres that were closed throughout Iowa and Nebraska been permitted to open. H. E. Swan, of the Swan Theatre in Columbus, Neb., appealed to the Omaha Film Board of Trade, complaining that his house was being kept closed through the animosity of the local fuel administrator. The matter was taken up by the board's attorney and two of the influential exchange managers and the Swan Theatre was allowed to open within twenty-four hours after Mr. Swan had made his complaint.

Stories of almost heroic effort to furnish entertainment to the bored folks of several towns throughout Iowa have just come to light. Among them is the story of W. A. Matlack, of the Princess Theatre, Ames, Iowa, who rigged up a steam threshing tractor and a dynamo to furnish power for his house. He burned corncobs and wood in the tractor to get up steam, and he furnished entertainment to his patrons throughout the strike season. At the Twin-Star Theatre in Ames an automobile engine was attached to a dynamo and light was furnished to the theatre for regular shows. The exhibitors' efforts were greatly appreciated by their patrons.

De Mille Uses Art Objects For His Title Backgrounds

SPECIALLY selected art objects of porcelain and bronze have been utilized by Cecil B. DeMille's production manager, Howard Higgin, to augment the beauty and power of the title backgrounds in Cecil B. DeMille's latest Paramount-Artcraft creation, "Why Change Your Wife?," soon to be released by Famous Players-Lasky.

"Why Change Your Wife?," as the companion picture to "Don't Change Your Husband," centres around the lives of a man and two women. Thomas Meighan as the husband, Gloria Swanson as the wife who failed to understand in the beginning, but learns her lesson in time to achieve happiness, and Bebe Daniels in the role of the "other woman," head a cast of unusual ability.

To emphasize the change in the wife and to establish by suggestion the type of the other woman, Cecil B. DeMille chose the medium of art title backgrounds selected by himself and Howard Higgin.

Exquisite porcelains were chosen and photographically blended into the finished production. For the first stage of the wife's career, an owl was chosen. A perfect specimen of a fifteenth century Sevre peacock serves for the second period. A magnificent Dolton fox, much sought by art collectors, appears in the title backgrounds in connection with the "other woman."

Another specimen of unusual interest, which appears in the title backgrounds is a bronze figure which achieved fame in a recent Paris salon exhibition.

Radin Sells "The Red Viper."

Matthias Radin, president of Tyrad Pictures, Inc., has sold the foreign rights on "The Red Viper" to the Export & Import Film Company.

No two men advertise alike. If they did, there would be little pull in advertising. But the man who does the best work is usually he who makes the most radical departure from the average.

Michigan Health Commissioner Olin Takes Stand Against Hygienic Films

THROUGH our Detroit correspondent, Moving Picture World has received from Richard M. Olin, Commissioner of Health for the State of Michigan, the following letter, a copy of which has been mailed to every exhibitor of moving pictures in Michigan. Commissioner Olin has handled a subject "full of dynamite" in a nice manner and without "slamming," as will be noted by perusal of his letter:

"I have been notified by the Social Hygienic Film Company that the film, 'Some Wild Oats,' is to be shown in Michigan. They have asked the co-operation of the Michigan Department of Health in this showing, and I have most emphatically declined to give it.

"I should like to make clear to your readers our position in the matter, since it applies to all films based on the venereal control or sex motive handled by any commercial concern, and there are many such films on the market today.

Sensational Advertising.

"Our experience during the past two years with the showing of 'Fit to Win,' 'The End of the Road,' and others of this type, has proved that it is apparently impossible for a commercial concern, formed for the object of making money, to handle a film of this type and not advertise sensationally and raise prices. It pays in dollars and cents and the cause of public health suffers.

"A subject of this kind cannot be brought down to the level where it appeals to the morbidly curious without doing incalculable harm. To cater to the sensual cannot help the venereal control campaign.

"We have had too much of mystery and innuendo in the past, and the Michigan Department of Health, through its Bureau of Education, is making determined effort to put the whole subject on a sane and dignified basis.

Educational Value of Films.

"We believe that the commercial showing of films which may honestly have been intended to teach a lesson does more harm in the mass than it does good in individual cases, and consequently we oppose any commercial presentation of films of this type.

"We appreciate fully the value of the motion picture as an educational measure and the prominent part that the managers play in molding public opinion, and we wish to help you to prevent criticism. The recent movement toward film censorship in Michigan was largely due, I believe, to the commercial showing of venereal control films.

"Our interests in this matter seem to be identical. Your co-operation in keeping such films out of your theatres will not only aid the cause of public health, but will also tend to protect the general field of motion pictures. May we not count upon your support in this matter?"

Votes Not to Indorse Censor Bill.

The Film Club of Boston, at its January meeting, voted unanimously not to indorse the Massachusetts bill pending for censorship of motion pictures. The club was addressed by Secretary Cocks, of the National Board of Review, and Mrs. Marcellus Ayer, owner of the Exeter Theatre. The club founder, Marion H. Brazier, has been congratulated on her stand against state censorship as expressed in print and in her lectures all over New England. At the recent meeting of the City Federation of Greater Boston (representing more than 30,000 women) the matter of censorship was discussed and it was unanimously voted to table the matter indorsing the bill.

Bookings Continue Heavy on the "Blind Husbands"

"BLIND HUSBANDS," the Universal-Jewel production featuring Francelia Billington, written and directed by Eric Von Stroheim, continues to be booked heavily in all quarters.

The Fox theatres, New York City, booked "Blind Husbands" for forty-two days; the western Greater Theatre Company took it for twenty-eight days; the Meyer & Schneider Circuit for twenty-two days; Fitzgerald & McElroy's Michigan Circuit for seventeen days; the Consolidate Amusement Company for fifteen days.

The Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, ran the film for two weeks; Ziegfield's Chicago, for fourteen days; the Dundas Theatre, Hamilton, Canada, for twelve days. A host of other theatres ran it for two weeks.

Among the houses booking "Blind Husbands" for seven days were: the Strand, Buffalo; Fay's, Rochester; Casino, Chicago; Majestic, Columbus; Strand, Cincinnati; Dayton, Dayton; Liberty, Youngstown; Strand, Akron; American, Denver; Superba, San Diego; Lyceum, Winnipeg; Rialto, Washington; Capitol, New York; Rex, Racine, and Alhambra, Milwaukee.

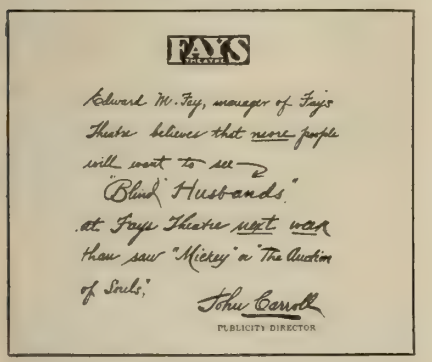
Handwritten Tickler Ad Worked Well Just Once

FAY'S THEATRE, Providence, R. I., got out a particularly good tickler for "Blind Husbands" in the shape of an autographic three five and a halfs. It might have been a little more plainly written, but this is a detail. Now and then a written display in a mass of type will do more than 120 point letters. The text is very simple, merely reading:



FAYS
Edward M. Fay, manager of Fays Theatre believes that more people will want to see "Blind Husbands" at Fays Theatre next week than saw "Mickey" a "The Auction of Souls."
John Carroll
PUBLICITY DIRECTOR

An Effective Written Announcement from Providence.

"Edward M. Fay, manager of Fay's Theatre, believes that more people will want to see 'Blind Husbands' at Fay's Theatre next week than saw 'Mickey' or 'The Auction of Souls.' John Carroll, Publicity Director." The wording is very simple, yet effective, and the display is excellent, the two point border setting almost an inch from the cut off rules. With half a dozen of these displays in succession, the cost of four would be lost, but for a "just once" the scheme is excellent.

Goldstein, the Program Specialist, Shows How

Lew Goldstein sends in a fresh batch of Philadelphia programs with their new dresses. Lew prints most of the theatre programs in his district and with his new outfit of stuff he gets even better results than before. One of his prettiest effects is a card for "The Miracle Man" for the Bright Spot, Laurel Springs, which evidently takes its name from the Haddonfield house of the same name. It is a card printed in pale purple, overprinted in a strong blue for the lettering and in a yellow, giving almost a bronze effect, for festoons. In wreath circles above are the word "Faith" on either side of the main festoon. Below is "Announcing a miracle film in 'The Miracle Man.'" The house name is set below. This is all there is to the front, the full advertisement running on the back. The front is in singular good taste and forms one of the best displays we have seen lately.

The Bright Spot, Haddonfield, N. J., still uses the historical spots idea for its front page. We have commented upon this before, but for the benefit of new readers it might be explained that this house runs on the front page of its program a cut about three by four inches, showing the various points of interest about the town, century old houses or anything the photographer can snap. The series has been running for more than a year but the photographer still seems to be able to bring in fresh cut copy. The series will have a real historic interest some day, and we know of no plan which will more surely result in the saving of the programs. And every time the collection is looked over it advertises the house afresh.

Goldstein has developed a certain style about his work, the result of his long specialization in program printing. It may interest those who are planning to issue a program, for these represent the discoveries he has made. The first is a double program for the Lincoln and Broadway theatres, with a page to each house and a split front page design with a cut going to the most prominent star of the work. The panels are small, but the type is legible, a heavy monotone, not quite a bold face, and yet more pronounced than straight Roman. It is a very handy face for a program printer in the smaller sizes. This sheet is a 5 x 9 folded once. The second style is a 6 x 8, one house, three days to the page. There is plenty of room for a small display, and the titles show up well. This is where Goldstein comes out ahead. Long years have taught him how to get small displays which still look large. In no other point do programs fail so often as in the handling of the display lines. General printers, not called upon often for this small work, will either use a line too high or too small. They cannot get a well proportioned display because they lack the experience. Now and then a small town man will come across with an example that is a gem, but for every good one there are a hundred or so poor ones. Goldstein hits it every time. The third example shows the use of a cut on the same style page. We do not believe that the crowding necessary to let in the cut makes it worth while, particularly as the cut is duplicated on the front page. In these small spaces, there is little chance to lead out and the cut makes it impossible. Compare the two sides of the page and you will get the idea. Just to show that his heart is in the right place, Lew shoots along a leaflet with directions for distilling and brewing and receipts for seven kinds of beer, nineteen kinds of wine and two kinds of whiskey. Attaboy!

and a halfs, the latter showing merely a cut of the star, with the reddest kind of red hair, while she has an entirely different shade of hair in the big display.

The frame is green with red roses, in allusion to the "American Beauty" billing. To all intents and purposes it is a full page display, though not more than three quarters of the space is paid for. The other theatres are crowded out and they get the entire space to themselves so far as amusement is concerned and the clothing advertisement is not in the least in the way. The copy is well written and well laid out and Mr. Hustler seems to be aptly named.

Wichita Showman Finds It Pays to Boom House

Stanley Chambers, of the Palace, Wichita, who recently contributed the "Trade Mark" advertisement, sends in another purely house display in the shape of a three eights pulling purely for the house. It runs in a lower left

The treatment that makes General Gloom and his army of Worry beat a hasty retreat. It's a treatment we all need as we make our way through this giddy whirling maelstrom of excitement and depression called "Life".
PALACE

hand corner, with no left hand rule, but we have drawn in the line that the exact arrangement may be seen, for this open effect is a part of the drag of the space. There is a clean margin of slightly more than an inch from the house signature and the same for the catchline. The body text runs more than three inches from the left and is set 17 picas wide.

Probably many managers will consider that this is a waste of space, but we cannot agree. The arrangement of the advertisement is such as to get for the space the utmost display, and the argument is worth all it costs. Mr. Chambers is seeking to build up a tradition for the house. He wants to sell the house as well as the show. He knows that now and then when he has some attraction which is not quite up to the standard, he can still sell the house and make them like the show. This may sound foolish, but nevertheless it is a great truth in showmanship that you can help a show with the house name. You can actually make them think it a better show than they would regard it if they saw it in another house. There is a mental tradition that it must be good if it is at the Palace, and this will help an attraction just a little below the standard. It will not make a bad play good, but it will help to get over a weak sister. Not one house manager in a thousand seems to make the slightest effort to sell the name. He simply uses his house as a bargain counter over which to sell film, and yet money spent on the house is a far more permanent investment and a more profitable one from every angle.

Buffalo Theatre Used Benefits for Holidays

THE Elmwood Theatre, Buffalo, a wide awake neighborhood house, tried a novel scheme for the interval between Christmas and New Years. The kiddies were out of school. The Elmwood wanted them. It did not merely advertise for the kiddies. It took the afternoons for a series of benefits for local organizations. Special films were booked for these matinees; pictures suited to a juvenile audience, and the house was turned over to the beneficiaries, presumably upon a sharing basis. The stunt accomplished several results.

It pleased a number of influential local organizations.

It made every child in the section a press agent for the house.

It pleased mothers by assuring them that their children were seeing worthwhile pictures.

It brought to the house many who had not regarded the pictures with especial favor.

It made business, not alone for the matinees, but for the night shows, for the kiddies took home their programs.

And probably it brought in returns well in advance of the usual receipts and it paved the way for a whale of a New Year's matinee on their own account, with the regular program.

sign to get the fullest effect, but in this particular instance the selling is all in the proclamation, done in a very legible imitation of block letter.

It is unusual and because it is, it will be read and the effect desired will be gained. The rest of the space merely gives the details and is little more than a frame for the script. But some one stumbled on the last line, below the proclamation, which reads "By Public Command—Third and last week." The "last week" should have been taken away from the "public command."

Universal Offers Large Cash Prizes to Encourage Better Lobby Displays

BELIEVING that most exhibitors are neglecting a valuable asset in giving scant attention to their lobbies, the Universal Film Company has announced a series of contests for prizes to be awarded the best lobby displays for the Universal "Big Money Twelve" pictures. The first contest period will cover three months and a prize of $100 will be awarded at the end of that time to the exhibitor who shall have made the best individual showing for any one of these pictures he may have offered.

Entrance will be by means of photographs accompanied by a letter of explanation, and the letter will be considered in conjunction with the photograph in making the award.

Need for Better Displays.

The contest suggested itself to Carl Laemmle during his recent tour of the country, and it came to a head when he had occasion to look over the books of a certain house which had expended $496 on newsapepr and billboard advertising within a given period, during which but $9.30 had been laid out for the lobby.

This house was located on a business thoroughfare and a suitable lobby display could be brought to the attention of thousands of passers-by, yet the management depended entirely upon its billboard and newspaper campaigns and made no effort to clinch argument with proper lobby showings.

In certain types of neighborhood houses, there is perhaps little opportunity to attract business with lobby displays which are seen by few persons until they actually arrive at the theatre intent upon seeing the current attraction, but in many more instances it is felt that a proper lobby display, particularly one offering some unique attractor, would not only clinch the business half formed through a reading of the newspaper notices, but would also make business not to be reached through the newspaper columns.

To Reach All.

Mr. Laemmle feels that no exhibitor can expect to do the largest possible business unless he uses every advertising means at his command, and while the contest is primarily intended to get the best results for the showing of these specially designated pictures, it is felt that the campaign will open the eyes of the showmen in many sections to the undoubted value of special lobby displays. Better advertising means better business, and business means more houses booked. Mr. Laemmle aims to do something more than boost a certain brand of Universal pictures.

It is not contended that the lobby can supplant newspaper advertising, but rather that it can be used to supplement this printed announcement and clinch the sale.

The duration of the contest has not been announced beyond the first three months period, but it may be continued if the results seem to warrant a continuance, as undoubtedly they will.

Sivitz Uses Lightline to Cut Space Bills

Samuel Sivitz, of the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, has been experimenting and writes that he finds this is about the best layout with which to get prominence with a minimum of space. Mr. Franklin set the pace long ago for lightline and benday effects, but Mr. Sivitz has taken the idea and worked it out for a circuit scheme where Mr. Franklin has but a single house to handle. This space is a five sevens, covering three houses, with an average of twelve inches each. It stands on the page against all comers and the blacker the other fellows make their displays, the better this stands up for contrast.

It is referred to the Crandall management in Washington. They have been trying to get distinction with drawn designs and black mass. They will have greater success with this lighter drawing. An even better effect will be gained by mortising the cut to let in straight type for the smaller lines. It will pay. Advertising is a matter of prominence, not dependent upon the size of the type or the blackness of the cut. Ink is not advertising. It is what you do with the ink. If you can use less ink and gain more prominence, you are that much ahead. Mr. Sivitz has been experimenting for some time. You can profit from the result of his work without the cost of the experiments. Why not try it, if you use a house artist. If you have no artist, perhaps you can at least get outline and inline type from the printer.

Cincinnati Revives "Bluebird"

EXHIBITORS in the Cincinnati territory of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are planning an active tie-up with the National Blue Bird Campaign for Happiness, which is being conducted in connection with the visit to this country of Maurice Maeterlinck, Belgian poet, and Madame Maeterlinck. Manager Harris P. Wolfberg of Paramount-Artcraft Cincinnati exchange, has in readiness prints of "The Blue Bird," and many exhibitors have booked the picture to coincide with the personal visit of the Maeterlinck party to Cincinnati, February 9; Indianapolis, February 8; Dayton, February 4 and Evansville, Ind., February 10. Nearby towns also are tying-up with the campaign. The alertness of Famous Players Cincinnati exchange to give its exhibitors "tips" on profitable special engagements is causing many pleased comments. When the King and Queen of Belgium passed through the Cincinnati territory, the revival of "Till I Come Back to You," in which the Belgian ruler appears, brought some big business to the theatres playing the picture.

Another Exhibitor-Editor

Paul J. Schlossman, who owns the Regent, Majestic, Rialto and Elite theatres, Muskegon, Mich., is also the editor of the photoplay page of the Sunday issue of the Chronicle by virtue of the fact that he takes the full page for his four houses, gives them a reasonable amount of straight advertising space and then fills in with news.

In this he is one jump behind George A. Bleich, of Owensboro, Ky., who conducts the photoplay departments of two Sunday papers and does not have to pay for the space he uses, and some years behind R. B. Wilby, who was the first, we believe, to buy a full page and get out a department.

To Do Away With Dull Seasons—Hustle

Chose Christmas Dull Season for Breaking All His House Records

ALTHOUGH most managers are content to break even on the dead pre-Christmas week, Kenneth E. Finley, manager of the Broadway, Richmond, Va., selected the Monday before the holiday for his first showing of a feature at fifty cents, selecting for his attraction "Soldiers of Fortune," and employing the Boy Scout tie-up, earlier worked in New York at the Capitol Theatre.

Mr. Finley was quick to perceive the value of the Boy Scout appeal and he made arrangements for a special showing of the picture to the Scouts, with speeches by the scout master and members of the National Security League.

This special performance attracted so much attention that it was found necessary to limit the attendance to those who were actually accredited members of the organization at the time the announcement was made, and in recognition of the value of the performance, the city donated the use of the auditorium of the John Marshall High School, adding the municipal endorsement to that of the Boy Scouts, the National Security League and many prominent citizens interested in one or the other of these organizations.

Made Them Take Notice.

Such an indorsement naturally attracted widespread attention. It raised the picture to the plane of an event, and it did this with the best sort of publicity—public opinion. The approval of a single well-known citizen, properly played up, is of far greater value than pages of purely house publicity, and Mr. Finley obtained the indorsement of a long list of people who stood for civic advancement and better boyhood. It was a truly representative list.

The boys paraded through the streets to the High School, and before the picture was screened there were five minute talks by Scout Executive Weaver, Albert Winton Perkins, editor of the Richmond Virginian, and a ten minute address by Wyndham R. Meredith. The feature address was made by H. Manning Carpenter, of New York, representing the National Security League. Henry Wise Wood was also announced by the league, but found himself unable to keep his engagement.

Worked a Second Angle.

For a second appeal Mr. Finley offered to give a special showing for all children in institutions and for the children of the poor, if the Social Service Federation would undertake to get the children to the house and return them to their homes.

This federation is composed of all of the active charitable organizations of the city. It includes on its lists practically all of the best people in the city, and their practical endorsement of the scheme was in the nature of a social triumph.

Among the institutions represented were the St. Paul's Church Home, the Masonic Home, the Male Orphan Asylum and the Methodist Home, as well as the children of the poor. The showing was made at a time not to interfere with the regular performance, and attracted widespread attention, not alone in the newspapers, but through the actual presence of the children on the streets in autos supplied by the federation.

As a side light, one of the papers recalled that some twenty years ago, Richard Harding Davis had been the guest of Charles Dana Gibson in Richmond, and much was made of this fact.

Cleaned Up.

As a result of this activity, the business in the three days before Christmas was to capacity and at the highest admission ever charged. It broke all records.

The jubilant Mr. Finley wired John S. Woody, of the Realart Pictures Corporation:

Opened here today with "Soldiers of Fortune." Turned them away every show. Cannot understand this on the Monday before Christmas with everyone else in the city starving to death.

Raised admission to fifty cents for first time in history of theatre, and despite fact this is worst week in amusement season this does not keep them away. Managers of other houses standing in front of my theatre wondering what it's all about. Smashing records is one thing, but smashing them Monday before Christmas is another. Keep up the great work and we are yours for life.

All over the country, beginning with the first showing at Tom Moore's theatre in Washington, "Soldiers of Fortune" has been made the foundation of big exploitation schemes, usually in connection with the Boy Scouts, and this is a plan which can be followed even in the smallest towns, for there is not a hamlet in the country which does not boast of one or more troops of Boy Scouts. Mr. Finley worked it on a big scale and got big results, but it will work in proportion in any house, no matter where.

Looking for the House Number.

Used Song to Exploit Canadian Theatres

DISTRIBUTION of 100,000 copies of a popular song to exploit a theatre is the latest stunt of Herbert Jennings, of Allen's Danforth Theatre, in Toronto. The song, "My Shadowland," was written by William Handorf, the orchestra leader, and it appealed so strongly to Jule and J. J. Allen that they ran off an edition of 100,000 copies—said to be the largest edition of a Canadian song ever put out—for distribution to the patrons of all of the Allen chain of theatres.

There was no direct advertising on the music other than a dedication to Jule and J. J. Allen, but the song had reference to the pictures, and, with the dedication and the fact that it was given out by the Allens, was considered sufficient of a hook-up.

Mr. Jennings gives as a reason for selecting sheet music, the fact that he has noticed that popular music is almost never thrown away, but remains stacked upon the piano, where it serves as a constant advertisement.

Evidently, it is not alone motion picture features which profit through song publicity.

Theatres for sale; theatres for rent, and theatres wanted by live managers are listed very frequently in The World's Classified Advertising Department.

How to Handle "Everywoman" for a Run

Dayton Exhibitor Used "Everywoman" To Counteract Hurtful Sensational Film

COLORFUL" is the word to describe the way Charles Gross of the Columbia theatre, Dayton, Ohio, put over his exploitation campaign on "Everywoman." Mr. Gross had the distinction of having the second showing in his part of Ohio of this Paramount-Artcraft super-special and for this reason—and another—he decided it must be a memorable event. And it was; Dayton is not acustomed to engagements of more than a week so when "Everywoman" dashed through eleven days of big business, Mr. Gross felt his campaign was a success.

His other reason for making a special effort of his "Everywoman" engagement was that Dayton, he believed, needed a tonic for its moving picture ills. Some unclean pictures had been shown in a downtown house recently, accompanied by suggestive advertising that brought the church folk to the mayor's office and there were in the air such things as municipal censorship and Sunday closing. So Gross thought that a picture like "Everywoman" would be just the thing to counteract the off-color stuff. He also started in with the expressed conviction that "Everywoman" is the finest picture, artistically, he has ever seen in his years of showmanship. That gave him the necessary moral enthusiasm that should back up a man trying to do something big in exploitation.

The Lithograph List.

First, Mr. Gross used 500 one sheets for papering the town, not to mention 24's, etc. He also had a set of the especially made three-sheets for cut-out displays. With the assistance of the exploitation man from the Cincinnati exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. Gross and the house press agent, W. K. Mathews, began the most vigorous newspaper publicity and advertising campaign ever seen in Dayton. The campaign came to a rousing climax on the Saturday and Sunday before the opening. The town was dazzled when the Columbia Theatre "burst forth" with a full-page advertisement in three colors. But this wasn't all.

The Journal, the leading Sunday paper of Dayton, issued a special section for Everywoman, in colors, comprising fourteen pages of feature mater and special advertising. The cover of the special section was designed by the F. P.-L. exploitation man and followed the style of the Saturday Evening Post ads on "Everywoman" and also the lettering-style of the lithographs, so that while it appeared as a regular magazine section in colors, the reader couldn't help but think of the picture—the tie-up was as tight as it could possibly be made.

Got a New Year's Angle.

The special section was illustrated with photographs. The quest for love of "Everywoman" was traced in a full page feature; there was a half-page feature on "Everywoman's search for beauty; stories of the cast, story and production. Because "Everywoman" played on New Year's a story was used saying that the only "wet" spot in Dayton would be the New Year revel of wealth on the screen of the Columbia Theatre.

A full page advertisement was shared in by four druggists of Dayton—an unusual thing, for druggists do not usually advertise. The advertising manager of the Journal conceived the idea of making a page cut from a one sheet lithograph sent out by Famous Players to be used in window display tie-ups. All drug stores that sell "Hinds' Honey and Almond Face Cream," which is used by "Everywoman," made window displays—a half dozen of them in Dayton. The special one-sheet exploited "Everywoman in connection with the Face Cream. The druggists were pleased with the chance of getting a page ad of so attractive design and—they supplied another page of free publicity for the Columbia Theatre.

Other Hook-Ups.

An auto dealer advertised he had the electric car for "Everywoman;" household dealers; women's apparel dealers, etc., also advertised along those lines, each ad being a tie-up with "Everywoman."

The Dayton Herald ran an essay contest on "For Whom Does Everywoman Dress?" the exploitation man taking his cue from a discussion along those lines being run in the French magazine, "Femina."

Leaving nothing undone, Mr. Gross was ready for the opening. It was a bad day but the crowds began pouring in at 11 a. m.—pretty early for Dayton. The Monday following was slushy and sleety—but the business exceeded that of either "The Miracle Man" or "Male and Female," which had held the records up to then.

Get In Line To Save Photoplay Pages

Paramount Manager Has Campaign to Keep Picture Pages in Newspapers

HERE is a movement launched in Cincinnati by Manager Harris P. Wolfberg, of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that should be emulated at once in every part of the country and should have the immediate attention and support of every exchange and exhibitor.

It is a propaganda movement—a constructive effort to protect moving picture publicity in the newspapers.

At this time the newspapers of America are laboring under the severe handicap of a shortage of paper; legislation to reduce the size of newspapers; to eliminate certain feature pages; to cut down in every way on the use of print paper may prove a real menace to the moving picture interests if the editors are not thoroughly convinced that they should not sacrifice their moving picture departments to the cry for white paper.

Fighting for Publicity.

Manager Wolfberg, realizing this condition and knowing that he is working in a territory where moving picture publicity has not developed to the high point it has in some localities, has launched a psychological propaganda campaign to remind editors of the importance of maintaining their moving picture departments at all hazards. Exhibitors in the Cincinnati territory are urged to do their utmost, both by personal appeal to editors and by raising the standard of their publicity matter to prevent any thought entering the editor's mind that he may dispense with or even cut down the space he is giving to moving pictures.

One of the interesting steps in Mr. Wolfberg's campaign is the gathering of data on the comparative circulations of moving picture magazines. He is endeavoring to show editors that there is such an enormous interest in moving pictures that the circulation of the film publications almost equal that of the Saturday Evening Post in leading cities. It is logical to believe, then, that if the film fans are willing to pay 20 cents to read screen features in magazines, they will want to see the same kind of stuff in their newspapers and will pay 2 or 5 cents to get it. Motion picture news is a circulation builder and valuable adjunct to the paper.

Here Are Some Figures.

For instance, in Cincinnati the Saturday Evening Post has a circulation of 16,000, according to best available figures. The motion picture magazines have a combined circulation of more than 12,000! In Louisville, Ky., the Post has 6,500 circulation; the motion picture magazines 4,115. Here are other figures:

	Saturday Evening Post	Moving Picture Magazines
Indianapolis, Ind...	11,000	7,000
Columbus, Ohio....	9,000	5,675
Dayton, Ohio.....	5,000	3,000
Springfield, Ohio...	2,500	1,700
Charleston, W. Va.	1,500	1,000

Those figures are impressive. When considering them, remember that they include only the leading seven film fan magazines and not any of the smaller publications, which would bring the figures much higher. Also that they are all 20 to 35 cents magazines, while the Saturday Evening Post is only 5 cents.

Play to the Reader.

Another bit of advice from Mr. Wolfberg, is that exhibitors try to launch publicity stunts that will result in a display of "reader interest." For instance, in Cincinnati recently a one column cut was run in the Post, showing a masked picture star. A very small prize was offered to those who identified the star. Hundreds of replies poured into the manager's office. He took them to the Post's editor to show how his readers watched the moving picture column. If a one column cut aroused so much interest among readers —causing them to sit down and write a letter—the screen column must be a mighty fine bit of circulation builder.

Another instance was a "Vivian Martin contest" in the Kentucky Post. The editor sought girls who resembled the Paramount-Artcraft star. He expected to hear from ten or twelve girls. Several score entered the contest and it ran a month with unabated interest! That editor is "sold" on the question of circulation value of motion picture news.

Features Mme. Nazimova to Indicate Class Shows

BELIEVING that "Nazimova" upon a picture has the same value as the "sterling" mark upon silver, E. C. Bostick, of the Merrill, Milwaukee, Wis., has been advertising the latest Nazimova picture, "Stronger Than Death," for more than a month in advance of the showing.

Across the inner lobby he draped a black velvet hanging upon which was the word "Nazimova" in translucent glass letters which are illuminated at night by small electric bulbs; the letters showing white in the daytime. Below and at either side were the legends "Watch for the date" and "Stronger Than Death." Between these was an oil painting, four feet by nine, showing the star in the still, made familiar in the trade advertisements, showing the player reclining upon the grass feeding a peacock. The painting was done from one of the advance stills and is an excellent bit of color work. It is illuminated by a spot light thrown from a distance and the effect is so striking that in the rush hours the lobby man has instructions to keep the matrons moving toward the entrance, as many paused to study the display.

Mr. Bostick has done so well with the previous Nazimova pictures that he feels that this advance work is well worth the trouble and cost entailed to get its patrons interested well in advance. "I believe," he writes the Metro office," that this display has been of value to us not alone in exploiting Nazimova but in making the patrons realize in a simple and indirect way that this house offers the best in photoplays. It gives a standing to the house."

Played Up Mystery Angle in "Yellow Room" Stunts

MAKING mystery the chief appeal of his campaign for "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" brought good business to C. Floyd Hopkins, of the Victoria, Harrisburg, Pa.

He built into the lobby a yellow room similar to that in the play with the color scheme to match the title. On the floor he painted the foot prints which are a part of the detective problem, starting these from the edge of the lobby entrance to the box office and so to the room. In the room a card offered free admission to any person whose shoe prints matched the painted tracks. Not many qualified, but hundreds followed the tracks and made the attempt.

Another stunt was the offer of a fifty dollar prize to any detective who could solve the mystery at the end of the fourth reel, a special showing being given for detectives and high police officials. None claimed the reward and the newspapers all ran heavy press stories on the stunt.

Ralph Ruffner Resigns from the Rialto Theatre

RALPH R. RUFFNER has resigned his position as manager of the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco, and has gone to his home in Portland, Oregon, to await offers. Mr. Ruffner went to the Rialto some months ago from the Butte, Mont., and has been making a game fight to put the house on the theatrical map, but internal friction developed and his resignation followed. He was for a long time manager for the Jensen and Von Ferberg interests in Portland, Seattle and Butte, and is one of the best known advertising men in the country, adding to his skill as copy writer a positive genius for developing little stunts to hold the interest of patrons.

The small advertisement is not to be despised—especially when it is an announcement in The World's Classified Advertising Department.

Thomas D. Sorierio Used Mayor to Get Personal Appearance of Alice Brady

THOMAS D. SORIERO, recently moved from Boston to the Strand, Lowell, Mass. He has been plugging hard to bring business up to meet his idea of what business should be, but he ran into the pre-Christmas slump and he felt the need of a picture revival-meeting. He felt that the personal appearance of some star would help to renew the interest of his patrons in the silent personages of the screen, and in looking around for someone to make this appearance, he discovered that Miss Alice Brady was then playing in Boston.

He had signed on the dotted line for Realart pictures and felt that this would help him persuade Miss Brady to come and see and conquer. It looked easy, but it was not as simple as it seemed. Miss Brady does not care for personal appearances, and she was busy putting on a new play when not appearing in her current offering. A side trip to Lowell did not appeal to her in the least. She said so.

Soriero Gets an Idea.

But Mr. Sorerio figured that there was more than one way to get what he wanted, and if the easiest way would not work he still had other avenues of approach. Lowell has a Christmas Basket fund for poor people. He figured that perhaps he could hook Miss Brady up with the fund and get some real action. The Mayor was in charge of the fund, so the manager went to the Mayor with a proposition for popularizing the fund. He would get Miss Brady to come and talk for the fund. He would give the use of his house for the meeting. He would see to it that the details were looked after. He did not try to conceal the fact that he would profit by the appearance, but he laid stress upon the value of the idea to the fund.

The Mayor saw the point of the argument and presently this leter went to Miss Brady, typed on the official stationery of the city:

My dear Miss Brady,

May I invite you, on behalf of the people of Lowell, to visit the Strand theatre, this city, on Friday, December 12, 1919. I can assure you of an enthusiastic reception if the reply is favorable. Kindly wire that arangements may be made to receive you.

Respectfully yours,
Perry D. Thompson,
Mayor.

No actress could resist such an appeal as that; particularly an actress with a live wire press agent. Miss Brady accepted and Mr. Soriero got word to go ahead. He did.

The front and interior of the house were lavishly decorated. The personal appearance was widely advertised, not forgetting the municipal invitation, and though the day was wet and gloomy, large crowds turned out. Miss Brady was given an enthusiastic reception by an 1,800 house, the basket fund was given a tremendous boost, and incidentally there was some good slide advertising for "The Fear Market," Miss Brady's next picture to be shown at the Strand.

This Manager Encourages Competition in Advertising

FRANK DOWLER, JR., general manager of the Signal Amusement Company, has found a new way to keep his local managers on tiptoe. Instead of routing a feature over the circuit and letting the same layout of advertising go with it, he books two or more copies simultaneously, sets the advertising appropriation and then tells the local men to go ahead and see who can do the best. Attraction and advertising space being identical, it is up to the resident managers to show something, and instead of a cut and dried campaign, the idea brings results in excess of the slight additional cost for accessories saved where the same cuts are used in turn.

Here's the Summons Again

EVERY portion of the country has tested the value of the fake "summons" as a publicity getter. More or less close imitations of the usual legal paper have been employed to gain interest for stories of murder mysteries, divorce problems, detective stories and various other forms, and in no instance has faith been misplaced. Even a crude copy has its effect, and this effect grows with increasing fidelity to the model, though too close an imitation is apt to be dangerous.

Allen's Theatre, Toronto, recently took up the old idea from a new angle and issued 6,000 summonses, almost identical in appearance with the summons served automobile speeders in the Canadian city. These summonses were printed on a blue stock closely approximating that used by the police department and were placed on the seats or on the steering gear of parked cars and sent by mail to the owners of automobiles whose names appeared on the license lists.

The summonses bore marked resemblance to the official forms used by the police department for speeding cases and the words "summoned," "speed," "court," "costs," "judge" and appropriate terms in heavy type were sprinkled throughout the text so that the first glance of the paper would be startling. The circulars were folded in legal style and the word "Summons," in large type, appeared on the back of the folded document.

The best advertiser is he who knows most about other men's advertising methods. Study up.

Used Novel Question Contest to Get Interest for Big Goldwyn Specials

SEARCHING for something to concentrate public interest on its Goldwyn week, C. C. Cady, of the Colonial, Lansing, Mich., hit upon a novel question contest in the shape of twelve questions, the correct replies to six of these entitling the well posted contestant to free tickets for the showings. Some of the questions were so easily answered that everyone could locate the four stars. The others were made more difficult to eliminate the danger of too great a volume of successful replies.

The contest was announced as a "What do You Know About Movie Stars?" competition, and Manager Cady had the assistance of Harry R. Guest, the local Goldwyn service man in preparing the questionaire.

Some of the questions asked were: "Who is the bashful, gum-chewing, rope-swinging actor now a motion picture star?" "What film star do the words 'irrepressible Mabel' refer to?" "Who was leading man for Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy and Mabel Normand and is now a star himself?" "Who has been called 'the screen's most emotional star?'"

Five Thousand Sets.

The contest was exploited by means of a special dodger which contained a general announcement, the questions, and the rules all neatly framed around a paneled announcement of the Goldwyn Week Program. Five thousand of these circulars were distributed and in addition, liberal space in all the Lansing dailies was used to herald the contest.

Based on a sound bit of psychology, the success of the stunt was assured. Picture fans are keenly interested in the personal history of the stars and take great pride in displaying their knowledge in this direction. The popularity of the various fan publications and the eagerness with which the "Questions and Answers" columns are scanned bear testimony to this.

Idea Proved Popular.

The Colonial's contest, affording fans an opportunity for converting their knowledge of film history into free tickets to the theatre, "caught on" with the public instantaneously and aroused more interest and discussion than any similar stunt put over by Manager Cady, and he has worked them all.

The success of the contest exceeded even the most optimistic expectations of both Mr. Cady and Mr. Guest. From the day the contest was announced to the day it closed, the Colonial was deluged with answers and although a considerable number of free tickets were issued, Mr. Cady believes that the stunt merits the "Croix de Efficiency," for it not only sent receipts sky-rocketing during Goldwyn Week, but has done much to permanently establish the Goldwyn stars in the favor of the Lansing public.

A Sales Campaign and a Sign Suggestion

Colorado's Largest Auditorium Is Employed for Film Revival

A MOTION picture "revival" is the latest promotion stunt from the exhibitor's end of the game. One staged in Denver recently has attained results far past anything which was expected. An interest in motion picture productions was created to the extent that all houses are reporting increased attendance.

While most of the regular houses in the city were doing business the managers felt that there were not enough new patrons coming in and all were on the lookout for some attraction to widely exploit. "Auction of Souls," the First National, featuring Aurora Mardiganian, looked like the picture that was needed. At first it appeared that this picture probably would occupy three first run houses during the same week. The difficulty then arose that only one of the houses, or at the most two, could procure personal appearances of Miss Mardiganian in connection with the showing of the picture.

This difficulty gave rise to the idea, which was this: "Put the picture on at the Auditorium for a run, the exhibitors combining to push it. Exploit it to the limit of its worth. Book extra attractions at each individual house at the same time and make the course of the run of 'Auction of Souls' a period during which a special effort was to be made to get every person in Denver to attend at least one motion picture show during the period."

Biggest House in Colorado.

The Auditorium is the state's largest place of entertainment. Previous engagements for the big house made available only five days for the "revival."

The first was a news story to the effect that the Auditorium had been engaged for a five days showing of "Auction of Souls." The picture itself was spoken of in a big way, but the fact that the Auditorium had been engaged for it, was, in itself, convincing proof of its bigness.

Two weeks prior to the beginning of the run, practically every billboard in the city was covered with lithographs of the event. The billboard advertising was done in circus fashion. Fences, sides of buildings, stone walls, and every place which offered a space for pasts was adorned with a lithograph as large as it would hold and cut-outs were put in other places.

Used Every Publicity Device.

The newspaper advertising was started ten days prior to the opening day and daily space was used. Cuts were used freely in the make-up of the advertising and the type was large display.

A week before the opening window displays appeared in stores all over the city. The managers of the affair had taken particular care to make the displays tasty. Cut-outs from lithographs furnished the main figures.

Tapestry, oriental in design, was supplied for the back grounds where needed, but in the main the stores had something of the kind in stock. The reading of the window display was all on small hand lettered cards and the groupings of the cut-outs themselves indicated the story.

With the billboards, newspapers and window displays making their appeal the run opened. Then one of the most talked about advertising novelties which has ever been used in Denver was sprung. The traffic police out there use a red card with a printed warning for the owners of automobiles or wagons which are left standing in violation of traffic rules.

Faked a Police "Warning."

On the day "Auction of Souls" began its five day run there was not a driver of a horse or automobile who left his vehicle standing for a moment but what he found such a card attached. Instead of the usual police warning, however, the printed matter on the card read:

"Warning: Your car should be parked at the Municipal Auditorium Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday or Sunday and you and yours should see and hear Aurora Mardiganian, the 18 years old Armenian beauty who will appear at each performance of the only picture ever shown at $10 a seat."

More than ten thousand people saw the picture the first day. On the morning of the second day of the run a special showing was given for women only at which Miss Mardiganian gave a talk. Nearly four thousand women attended this one performance.

Before Sunday people were being turned away. More than 70,000 persons paid admissions during the run.

"The surprising part of it to the exhibitors," said Lieut. James Anderson, who staged the run, "was that every picture house in town also did a business above the average at the same time. Any big exploitation of any real big picture aids every worth while picture. The exploitation brings out people who are not regular attendants."

The term "revival" was not used until after the run was ended. It originated with the exhibitors, the owners of Denver theatres who have found that the Auditorium showing has actually benefitted them in their own houses, and there is already talk of another revival some time in the spring.

A Good Idea in Electric Signs

ALTHOUGH the accompanying illustration shows a special electric sign erected by the Universal on the front of the Mecca Building, the New York headquarters, to advertise their film attractions, there is a hint for theatre owners in the designing.

The top line "Universal—Pictures—Universal" is in blinking incandescent globes. Just below is a figure of a projectionist at his machine, a ray of light leading across the space to a framed transparency of the star or director to be advertised, this panel being changaable to suit the current attraction boomed. Below this is a panel of electricically lighted letters and from this depends three more changeable signs illuminated from the rear.

The whole forms a layout which could be used to advantage to exploit the house attractions, providing the means of offering four titles or repeating one title four times as may be deemed most advantageous. Along Broadway they are putting up two motion picture signs for every whiskey advertisement taken down.

Universal's New Electric Sign.
A huge electrical display which should give a hint to theatre owners who want a practical sign.

Translated to the screen this rare and beautiful story becomes even more charming and entertaining than it's popular stage production. The story is of special interest to women, telling in a highly dramatic & original way of a girl's sacrifice for the man she loves.

"Auction of Souls" Still Drawing Huge Crowds in Western Theatres

THE finest box office record in the theatrical history of Dayton, Ohio, was recently accomplished when the Columbia Theatre of that city took advantage of the exploitation possibilities of a special feature attraction and played them to the limit.

Whether the personal appearance of Aurora Mardiganian, star of "Auction of Souls" for which First National Exhibitors' Circuit is the official distributor, was responsible for the unparalleled success is problematical. It is a matter of record, however, that her personal visit to the National Cash Register Company where she spoke to 900 women and girls employed there created such a volume of word-to-mouth advertising that subscribers were asking favorite dailies for facts about Miss Mardiganian.

The ice once broken, the management of the Columbia specialized on display advertisements in the Dayton newspapers as a means of bringing home to the republic the fact that the horrors seen in "Auction of Souls" such as selling Christian women for eighty-five cents each, tying Armenian girls to horses and throwing Christian girls into Turkish harems, were really the fate of women of the near East.

Morning Matinees Drew.

The idea of morning matinee as a method not only to arouse a general interest that always attends an exclusive event, but also to enable many women of Dayton who had evening engagements to see the attraction was hit upon shortly after the picture began its run. At these morning performances Miss Mardiganian went more into detail about the experience of the women during the turbulent times in Armenia.

Publicity in the news' space of all local newspapers came quite easy for the Columbia. Various business men's noon day luncheon clubs invited her to be the guest of honor, the Kiwanis and Rotary Clubs heard her story and a number of women's clubs entertained her. Each of these events turned out to be a gratifying source of publicity.

The news that "Auction of Souls" with the bold exploitation given it by the Columbia had so shattered all previous box office records of that house caused every large house in Ohio, that has played the attraction thus far to call for a return engagement.

First Ladies Special.

Previous to the showing of "Auction of Souls" a performance for "ladies only" had never been given in connection with the exploitation of a motion picture. A general curiosity as to how many women would attend this performance and hear the personal story of Aurora Mardiganian's experiences lead the Dayton Journal to send a photographer to get a picture of the ladies in line waiting for the performance to begin. The following day a picture of the long standing line appeared in the newspaper.

Clever Book Hook-Ups for Mary Miles Minter Feature

OHIO exhibitors have been making big business for "Anne of Green Gables," Mary Miles Minter's Realart production, through the use of various hook-ups with book lovers. Taken from the book by L. M. Montgomery, this form of tie-up was especially indicated, and it was worked in several forms.

In Cleveland I. Kuhn, of the Loew houses, hooked up with booksellers, including Burrows Brothers, the largest book concern in the city. A neat book marker was prepared, bearing a thumbnail cut of the star and appropriate text. This was given out on request and one was slipped in each volume sold, either to be taken or sent. In addition the circulating library department slipped one into each of the volumes issued by it during the campaign. As a result thousands of these attractive markers were put before book lovers and were taken into the homes.

Burrows Brothers gave a large window display of the book filmed, with pictures of the star and scenes from the play, which was made in Dedham, the actual locale of the story.

Used Pasters.

In Dayton the public library permitted the affixing of a small but conspicuous sticker to all books issued for a cople of weeks preceding the showing. Some 5,000 books were issued to readers in that period, each carrying the advertisement of the play.

These books were all paper covered, the covers being renewed frequently, so that no injury was done that bound the volume and the advertisement was returned within a reasonable period.

Dayton further played up the film by giving a special showing to some 500 veterans from the Soldiers' Home. These guests were taken to the theatre in decorated street cars and several patriotic features were added to the program as a special event. The newspapers were represented and the human interest stories which were run by all of the daily sheets carried a generous proportion of advertisement for the house.

All through the state the favorite forms of advertising has been the slate idea suggested by one of the trade paper advertisements, and this seems to have worked excellently.

Wedding Made New Year Film Exploitation Stunt

STARTING the New Year all wrong, a couple got married on the stage of the Whitman theatre, Philadelphia on New Year's Day for a reward of $20 offered by the management to anyone who would stand up in public and take the fatal vows.

Stage marriages are no novelty, but they are sufficiently infrequent to draw a crowd and the management felt that a real wedding would make a fine chaser for Viola Dana in "Please Get Married," so they offered a purse of twenty dollars—which is no great sum in these days of the high cost of living, and threw in a minister and the marriage license. The offer stood open for any number of couples, but only one blushing bride was led to the improvised altar. One bride proved sufficient to draw a big crowd and clinch a record breaking box office cleanup.

Here's A Winner—and It's Cheap, Too

Similarity Contest a Big Winner For the Majestic, in Grand Rapids

SEEKING to popularize Katherine MacDonald, the new First National star, the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, Mich., staged a "Similarity Contest" with excellent results.

Enlisting the interest of Carl M. Saunders, editor of the photoplay department of the Herald, the management induced him to conduct a contest for the girl who most nearly resembled Miss MacDonald. It was inaugurated five weeks before the playing date of Miss MacDonald's first picture, "The Thunderbolt," and carried no allusion to the possible appearance of the star in town. Ostensibly it was a circulation feature conducted by the newspaper with which the theatres had nothing whatever to do. Prizes of $25, $15 and $10 were offered the three young women whose photographs most nearly resembled that of the star, the judges being Mr. Saunders, the manager of the Majestic Gardens and Harold Hefferman, of the First National Exchange, Detroit.

Free Photographs.

One of the local photographers was shown how he might make a profit from orders for extra prints; and offered to make the photographs without charge, getting several hundred sitters, most of whom ordered half a dozen or a dozen pictures for themselves. This provided the paper with an ample supply of prints without charge and a page of portraits was run each Sunday in connection with the contest.

At the commencement of the last week the advertising started for the house showing of "The Thunderbolt," the attraction running the week following the contest. The contest had attracted a remarkable amount of interest and the Majestic Gardens played to standing room business both afternoon and evening. So great was the business, in fact, that the opposition house, the Isis, was moved to book the feature for the following week and this house also cleaned up. Something new in the history of local theatricals.

Worked Four Ways.

The net results of the contest were that four different interests made a clean-up.

The Herald had enjoyed an unusual circulation feature at no cost.

Entries were received from all over the state and the interest was very general. It was not only a good circulation stunt, but the paper had a special feature for five Sundays.

The local photographer developed several hundred customers and made a substantial profit in addition to getting valuable advertising.

The theatre had an immense week.

The Isis also enjoyed a big week.

In passing, the exchange also profited, for the contest advertised Miss MacDonald not alone in Grand Rapids, but in scores of smaller towns, creating a demand for the picture.

The scheme is simple and can be worked for any star, but it is particularly valuable where it is desired to make known a new face. It has been worked many times before, but it seems never to lose its pulling powers.

Woolworth to Handle the "Cheater" Song Exclusive

BOOKING up with the Robertson-Cole Company, the Woolworth chain of five and ten cent stores, covering practically the entire country, will make a special feature of "The Beloved Cheater of Mine," a song written by L. Wolfe Gilbert and Edna Williams to exploit Lew Cody in "The Beloved Cheater." Arrangements have been made with the chain stores to cooperate with the various Robertson-Cole agencies throughout the country in window displays and from other angles, and special singers will be employed for three days in advance of the showing of the film for the first time in each town where there is a Woolworth store.

The music hook-up inaugurated in conjunction with "Mickey" has grown in importance until its value is recognized to the extent that the chain stores are willing to make special concessions in order to obtain the exclusive sales, and the entire edition of this song will be disposed to to the Woolworth people, who will make a lightning campaign simultaneously with the release of the film. This includes special window displays, the showing of stills and posters, special singers and cooperation with the local exhibitor. E. Z. Nutting, in a statement, said:

"We shall do everything possible to put the song over in keeping with the elaborate way in which Robertson-Cole has booked 'The Beloved Cheater,'" said Mr. Nutting. "Of course, Woolworth will not tackle anything but a distinct hit and when we do accept a melody there is only one way out and and that is an avalanche of sales. I have notified every store manager to co-operate to the fullest extent with the various Robertson-Cole branch managers in displaying advertising and publicity aids which will have a two fold purpose. No time will be lost in getting the songs to our stores."

"The Beloved Cheater" is heralded as the best advertised picture of the times. In connection with the exploitation, prizes aggregating $500 are being offered for the best love letters sent to Lew Cody. To date more than 3,500 missives have been received.

Used a "Mystery Girl" for Goldwyn Feature

USING the old "Countess" stunt brought two front page stories and a lot of other publicity for the Marion Theatre, Marion, O. A masked woman made her appearance in town, putting up at the leading hotel and making herself much in evidence on the streets.

Excitement ran high, but she volunteered no information as to her visit until the day before the showing of Mabel Normand in "Upstairs" when she broke her silence to explain to the reporters that she was from the Goldwyn Culver City studios and was there to exploit the Normand production. By that time she had become a real news feature and the papers played her up for front page stories. This works best in the smaller towns, but it should be remembered that this stunt was first worked in New York City. And be it remembered that it worked for several weeks.

Edward L. Hyman East Again

Edward L. Hyman has moved back east and is resident manager of the Strand, Brooklyn, N. Y. The Strand is one of the handsomest houses in Brooklyn as well as among the newest, and while Mr. Hyman may not have the same space chances as in towns where the advertising rates are more moderate and the papers fewer in number, we think he will do as well with an intensified campaign. One recent stunt was to pull a Christmas treat for 2,800 poor children under the auspices of the leading Brooklyn paper. It all helps with the reading notices and it helps with the public, as well.

Don't advertise your ordinary films so extravagantly that you have nothing left for the occasional big film. Gain the confidence of your patrons and your "good" will sell as well as "greatest ever." Then you have something left in reserve.

Projection Department

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Dam

THE above refers to the kind used at a mill of course. It is brought into use by reason of a letter from Charles S. Stuckey, formerly projectionist at Edmonton, Alberta, whose name is familiar to our readers through his very excellent contributions to this department.

Brother Stuckey writes, saying that for reasons of health he has had to give up projection, temporarily at least, and is now switchboard operator in one of the big power houses at Niagara Falls.

He winds up with: "Should you ever be in this section, look me up and I'll do the honors, including a trip through one of the big power houses of Niagara." Dam (mill)! And I was in Niagara two weeks ago and would have given a small portion of my right ear to have had a real (not the tourist sort) trip through one of those big power plants.

What Stucky Says.

Friend Stuckey speaks highly of Brother W. B. Allen, of Edmonton, and his knowledge of the optical system of the projector.

Well, Brother Allen, why don't you get busy with your writing apparatus. Why keep your light so carefully hidden under a bushel.

Stuckey says that a mere few thousands additional K W means nothing to the power house where he now is. Says a couple of thousand added K W looks like a couple of added amperes on a projection room ammeter.

Says he has visited quite a few theatres in and around Niagara Falls, and that the Queens Theatre (Canadian side) has a fair screen result, but that it might be much improved.

Machines are up at rear of balcony, and from lobby seats level with lobby entrance there is a bad glare or dazzle from screen.

Change over is very poorly made, though he does not know the reason. May not be projectionist's fault.

Much Advertising Shown.

He comments on the display of a long string of advertising slides between shows.

Says at times there are so many that it gets very monotonous.

The Lumberg Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., Brother Stuckey praises highly as to its screen results. Says he don't know what the equipment is, but that he would like to shake the mitt of the projectionist in charge, because it takes a real projectionist to put on a real picture, no matter what equipment is provided, in which view the editor heartily concurs.

We are sorry Stuckey had to quit the projection field, even temporarily, because he was a live one. His health is now better and we hope we shall find him shooting a screen again before long. The profession needs all of its good men —and less of the other sort.

Information Wanted

A California L. A. man desires information as follows:

I have the lens chart, but am not certain as to meaning of some things on chart No. 2.

Taking the four-inch projection lens, for example, as I understand it the 8.8 inches is distance between shutter blade and aperture, but how and where do you get the measurements .55 and .7?

Means that at 8.8 inches from aperture (shutter position) if you hold a piece of black paper in the light ray you will find thereon an image of the aperture which will measure .7 of an inch wide by .55 of an inch high, BUT (every one with lens charts take note) there is a minor error in chart No. 2. Instead of 8.8 inches in the instance quoted, the reading should be 7.7 and this holds true for all readings of distance from aperture to shutter in lens chart No. 2. All shutter to aperture distances should be made one inch less than the figures given. This error is not important, but we nevertheless would suggest that owners of lens charts make note thereof.

We say it is not important, because these distances are not, in the very nature of things, precisely accurate, and some leeway may be allowed. An inch is, however, too much.

What are the seven columns at right side of chart No. 2 for?

Rectangles, Not Columns.

You mean the rectangles, not columns. They show relative size of aerial image under different conditions. Taking the largest, for example, you will find its height and width given under 7 inch E F projection lens, where distance aperture to condenser is 14 inches.

If the same lens were used with 21 inches from condenser to aperture the size would, as you will see by looking under that condenser to aperture distance, be .92 by 1.16.

I understand from the handbook that the 4.5 inch diameter condenser is best. If I used a 4-inch diameter condenser would the focal length of required condenser, as given in chart No. 1 be altered?

I think not, but the required diameter of objective (projection lens) would be considerably reduced.

As a matter of fact many projectionists who work unintelligently as to the adjustment of their optical system and the diameter of their objective, might with advantage use a smaller diameter condenser.

The superior collecting power of the larger diameter condenser is of no avail because all the light so collected falls outside the object and merely serves to brilliantly illuminate the interior of the projector mechanism itself.

The smaller, thinner lenses would break less readily and would absorb less light energy.

Apart from the added distance from condenser to aperture the M Bi-C gives, what determines whether or not there is advantage in its use?

The Determining Point.

That is THE determining point. Where there is a long objective working distance (distance aperture to first lens of objective) and a heavy amperage, which means short distance from aperture to condenser, the added distance from condenser to aperture which the M Bi-C gives is valuable in narrowing the ray beyond the aperture.

This you can readily see by studying chart on pages 116 and 117 of the handbook. Plate 9, page 120 of handbook shows you what is taking place, and a consideration of that plate and the diagram will convince you of the benefit of added distance supplied by M Bi-C, even though it be but two inches.

If a dynamo or motor armature is revolving in a certain direction, should the contact end of the brushes face, or be against the direction of rotation?

Generators having the "reactance" type of brush holder have the brushes set against direction of rotation. I doubt if this type of holder is any longer used. Send copy of everything on name plate and I will find out for you if your brushes should be that way.

Should the frame of a motor or generator be permanently grounded?

It is not necessary that a generator or motor frame be grounded, but it is proferable if the system itself is grounded, as is the case with three-wire and where a transformer is used.

Please do not publish my name. I am one of the many who feel indebted to you for what I have learned from the "Bible of Projection" and the department. I find it mighty nice to be able to draw at will upon your knowledge and experience. There is so very much to know that I suppose I will never know it all.

Let's Hope So.

Let us hope so anyhow, brother Los Angeles, because the man who gets to the point where he knows it all (or THINKS he does) begins, right then and there, do die of dry rot.

He becomes a nuisance. I infer from your language that you think I have much knowledge.

Why, man, I have but just begun to learn! I really haven't half as high an opinion of my own knowledge as I had ten years ago, though I really do know a great deal more than I did then.

But the added knowledge simply serves to open up to my view wider and better fields of knowledge and I hope it will be thus until I am no more.

The Department

S. R. Juleson, Cronkton, Illinois, says:

That I have succeeded in projecting a picture satisfactory to my people is due entirely to the projection department and your handbooks. The lens charts have improved my picture wonderfully.

I get a better picture with thirty amperes than I got with fifty before I had the charts. Can you tell me when the Projection Department first began?

The "Operators' Column" began in the February 19, 1910 issue.

By September of the same year it had, by sheer practical worth, became so popular that Mr. J. P. Chalmers, then owner and Editor in Chief, suggested a change to "Trouble Department," which was adopted and became effective in the September 10 issue. July 15, 1911 the permanency of the department having been determined, and its practical value thoroughly established, the name was finally, after considerable discussion, again changed to the "Projection Department," and as such it has continued through eight and one half years.

Its total length of life, under the three names, is almost ten years. And there you are, friend Juleson.

Toronto Disagrees

John Stringer, Toronto, Ontario, squares off and lands on the editorial slats as per the following:

With reference to answer to "Shutter Problem," December 13, I find brother Jardin's trigonometrical solution all wrong. (Let us hope that outside of that trifle it's all right.—Ed.)

In considering the problem it is seen that the area of the light beam at plane of intersection of beam with shutter blade is greater than a pin point, hence the number of degrees to be added to the angle established by the intermittent angle is governed by the extreme edges of the light cone.

These are the first light the shutter intercepts and the last it uncovers when leaving the ray.

Jardin has assumed that these points are situate at the points of intersection of the circumference of the circle with the diameter when same is drawn at right angles to the line joining the center of the shutter shaft with the center of the light cone.

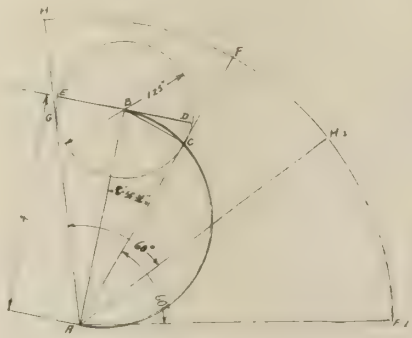
May Be Readily Understood.

This may readily be understood by carefully examining Jardin's diagram. That this assumption is wrong can be seen by examining diagram here shown.

If line A B be rotated about point A it will come into contact with circle C D E (the light ray) at point C, instead of at D, as assumed by Jardin.

Thus the line A F forms a tangent with circle C D E G. Now looking at circle B C A we find it continued within semi-circle A C B where it contacts with the center of circle C D E G.

Since this is so then the angle B C A is a right angle. (Authority for this statement, Ontario High School Geometry, Book III, Theorem 9.)



Note— The light cone is twice the size By doing this the extreme pin points can be distinguished more clearly

Therefore the triangle A B C is a right angled triangle. The correct trigonometrical function (Help! Help!! Hellup!!!—Ed.) for the angle B A C then is the sine of the angle B A C, therefore sine A $\frac{BC}{AB}$ — $\frac{.625}{4}$ = .15625, or 8 degrees, 59 minutes and 36 seconds.

Hence the correct number of degrees to add to the basic number of degrees would, in this case, be two times 8° 59′ and 36″, which is 17° 59′ and 12″. The total number of degrees in the shutter blade for the conditions set forth by Jardin's diagram then would be 77° 59′ and 36″.

Would Suggest.

In order to obtain the greatest degree of accuracy when making a shutter I would suggest the following: (1) Draw a circle the exact size of light cone at point of intersection by shutter blade, remembering that it may (or may not, according to conditions) be a rectangle instead of a circle, in which event it must be measured across its greatest diameter.

(2) Draw line A H tangent to the circle, as seen in diagram.

(3) From line A H to point A measure off the intermittent angle in question, which, as seen in diagram, is the angle HA-H_1 in the case of a five to one intermittent. This fixes size of blade for extreme point G on that side of ray.

(4) Draw line A F tangent to other side of light ray.

(5) Measure off the intermittent angle from line A F, establishing angle Fa-F_1.

Then the angle HA-F_1 will be the necessary angle for shutter blade, since the two extreme sides bear proper relation to extreme outer diameter of light ray.

Brother Richardson I think it would help everybody if you would publish in the Department a table of the correct ratios of the various intermittent movements, making it an official list.

It would eliminate all the guess work now in vogue. Will you be good enough to submit this letter to Brother Griffith. If I am wrong I want to know it.

Good Night.

Whew! Good night pajamas. Whaddythinklamanyhow??? I'm wiping the sweat from my noble brow and just publishing the whole thing. But if you ask me I think friend Stringer is right.

I can see his point all right, or at least I think I can. What do the rest of you, including brother Griffiths, think. Neighbor Auerbach will, I think, be able to decide the matter definitely.

As to publishing the ratios, why man I would be hung, drawn, quartered, chewed up and spit out if I did. But, without naming names, here are three, one of them a special movement sent out on order only. They will vary somewhat, but are approximately correct— 84 degrees, 70 degrees and 94 degrees. But it must be remembered that other items, such as distance of center of shutter shaft from center of light ray have a distinct bearing on efficiency.

Much Trouble

A southern exhibitor has trouble which she describes as follows:

Recently my projectionist ran a two-reel comedy which went through the projector without trouble. It was followed by the main feature, and after about twenty-five feet of the first reel had been projected, the film began slipping over the aperture without any control as to framing, and doubling up in folds under the shield above.

In fact all control of the film was lost. After repeated efforts to put the film through, I announced that we could not give the main feature, bu would run a news weekly and refund the money as the audience passed out.

Have Had Some Trouble Before.

The comedy and news reel were in good condition, but the feature was not, though I have used others no worse. Forwarded the one in question to another exhibitor who ran it without trouble. Twice before we had the same difficulty.

My projectionist is a young boy. I sent for experienced projectionists to come and examine the machine, but could find nothing wrong and never before heard of such a trouble.

Can you explain it and suggest the remedy? Machine is a Powers Six B, motor driven, purchased last year. Motor gets warm and makes a "chucking" sound. Supply is 110-volt sixty cycle. Use a Ft. Wayne Compensarc.

In the school where I taught last year I assisted the projectionist in order to learn as much as possible, so that I could assist my own projectionist. I have been told by union men that the union objects to women projectionists. This I do not like to believe true.

Must Be in Error.

As to the trouble, I think you must be in error in describing it.

If the film "doubles up folds under the upper fire shield" it can hardly "slip over the aperture."

Apparently what has happened is this. The film went through all right until the intermittent sprocket struck a place where the sprocket holes were ripped out or the divisions between them cut or ripped through on both sides.

This need not necessarily be for more than one inch of the film. Under that condition the intermittent sprocket having nothing to grip, the film stops dead still from the upper end of the tension shoes, but being still fed down by the upper sprocket it folds up under the upper fire shield.

That the next exhibitor had no trouble is simply proof that his projectionist inspected the film, as yours should have done, the film being on "circuit," and removed the damaged place.

Another Solution.

Another possible solution is that your intermittent sprocket idler bracket spring is weak. Under this condition a film might run O K with lower loop of normal length, whereas if this loop be made too short the roller would be raised off the sprocket, thus releasing the film with results similar to those described. This has happened. Remedy is a stronger spring and loop of normal length.

You are at fault in employing a "young boy" as projectionist. Unless the business will justify the employment of a man of sufficient age to have at least a little knowledge and judgment, it should not be conducted at all.

To place a mere boy in charge of the reproduction of the work of artists in costly productions is unfair to the entire moving picture industry. I take it that you are in a very small village, hence could not employ a really competent projectionist. But there is a decided difference between a man and a "young boy."

Better do your own projecting, if you cannot employ a man. As to the motor trouble, every motor gets warm, but not hot. The chucking sound is due to lack of proper adjustment.

Will have the Powers Company advise you direct. As to women projectionists, while individual union men may object, and an individual union may refuse them admission, the organization as a whole could not consistently do so. In fact, it does not.

The international leaves the matter of accepting women projectionists into membership to the local union, and already several unions have accepted them into membership, and old Ohio is one.

The Watt Hour

James S. Hilton, Chatham, Iowa, says:

Will you explain for me the exact meaning of the "watt hour"? I don't seem able to get the idea.

Suppose you attach wires to a battery generating just one volt pressure, and to these wires attach a device of some sort which will use exactly an ampere of current. Since one ampere at one volt equals or is one watt, you would be using one watt of electric energy.

You may use this energy for five seconds, five minutes or any other length of time but if you use it for just one hour you will have used one watt of energy for one hour, hence one watt hour.

Were the voltage 110 and the amperage ten you would use 110X10=1100 watts or 1.1 K.W. and if you used if for one hour you would use 1100 watt hours or 1.1 K. W. hours.

Watt hours equal voltage times amperes multiplied by number of hours the current is used.

Connecting the Compensarcs

Frank E. Lee, Three Oaks, Michigan, asks:

Please advise how to connect two Ft. Wayne Compensarcs. Have one now and want to use two. Is there any danger of burning film before starting projector?

Not if you keep your dowser down until time to start.

For rough centering of light drill a ⅛ inch hole in center of dowser. Keep your automatic fire shutter in good operating condition.

Referring to the diagram, A A are fuses, which may be sixty, but can as well be seventy ampere capacity.

The over capacity won't injure anything, since everything the current can reach is amply able to stand much more than seventy amperes for a short time.

C is a double pole, single throw switch. B and D are the same, but are not really necessary. They serve only to kill the wires between them and the machine table switch.

You can dispense with them if you wish.

The operation is self evident. When switch C is open the compensarcs are disconnected entirely from each other. When switch C is closed you would get combined the capacity of each compensarc at one arc. If each compensarc be set at minimum that would be about 80 amperes.

At maximum it would be 120. I am assuming that you mean the A C to D C Compensarc. Switch C must be open which both arcs are burning. In fact you could not get both to burn with it closed.

More Helps for Van Allen

John Auerbach, New York City, amateur projectionist and member American Projection Society writes of friend Van Allen's trouble, as follows:

With regard to inquiries of Edward Van Allen as to how to improve his projection, may I offer the following:

The meniscus bi-convex I think would be preferable to the plano convex in his case, where the working distance is so great (5.25 in.) unless, of course, his objective is of considerable diameter. Incidently, he does not mention the diameter of the lens at all.

If he should adopt this combination, he should place a 6½ meniscus lens next to the arc, and an 8½ bi-convex in front, spaced not more than 1/16 of an inch apart. The distance from center of condenser combination to aperture should be slightly less than 19 inches.

His objective should certainly not be less than 2 inches in diameter. The shutter should be placed, if possible, about 16½ inches from aperture, and should then be trimmed as much as possible.

If He Prefers a Plano Convex—.

If, however, he prefers a plano convex combination, he may continue to use his 6½ and 7½ lenses, with the 6½ lens next to the arc, and with not more than 1/16 of an inch between them. The distance from center of condenser combination to aperture, should then be slightly less than 17 inches, and the objective should be about 2¼ inches in diameter.

The shutter in this case should be, if possible, about 17 inches from the aperture.

Last But Not Least.

Last but not least, with 50 amperes, he should discard his present carbons, and use ⅝-inch cored uppers, and 5/16-inch silvertip lowers.

Using the same amperage as he does, I made this change in my carbons recently with remarkable results, both in quality of light and in stability and ease of control of arc.

In this connection let me remind him that there will be an increase of 1,500 to 2,500 candle power at the arc, in using the carbon combination I suggest, over his present set.

My authority for this statement is the extremely interesting article by Mr. Benkelman, in the projection department of March 15, 1919. From the results I secured in experimenting, I do not believe there is any question, but that it is true.

I should advise Mr. Van Allen to take apart his 6½-inch objective, and see if the combinations are properly spaced and set, as the 7-inch lens would seem to be the one to fill the bill in his case.

With all of which we agree. Our compliments to Mr. Auerbach. He has comprehensive understanding of the various points involved.

Screen Paint

O. H. Wise, Diboll, Texas, orders lens chart and handbook and says:

Can you advise what we can get to paint our screen which would give a close imitation of a gold fiber screen surface?

Just at this time we do not care to invest in an expensive screen. Business will not justify the expense.

We are of the opinion that there is something which will give the desired effect.

Depends on your ideas, friend Wise. Screen surface making is a scientific proposition, and one not to be lightly undertaken.

I cannot recommend any paint as likely to give the results you desire.

If you try the proposition out I am afraid that you will find the making of satisfactory metallic screen surfaces is not so easy as it looks.

If you are unable to buy a screen such as the one named, you can nevertheless get splendid results by following the directions under "Coatings," pages 185-6 of the handbook.

Perhaps after you have studied the whole subject matter of screens contained on pages 166 to 192, inclusive, of your new handbook you will understand several matters much better.

Rothacker Strengthens Organization In Preparation for Big 1920 Drive

ENTERING upon its tenth year, the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago has big plans for 1920 in the way of educational, industrial and advertising pictures. The first thing on the program will be to continue producing always better industrial and advertising films—that branch of motion pictures in which Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the concern, became a pioneer nine years ago.

President Rothacker's first move toward strengthening his organization was to rob the Travelers' Insurance Company of Hartford of the services of Douglas D. Rothacker, his brother. He was assistant sales manager for the western division of the American Banknote Company when he went to the Travelers' Company two years ago. At Travelers he was assistant Illinois state manager.

Prepare Copy Ammunition.

From now on he will direct his selling energy toward prospective film clients. Rothacker salesmen are now systematically covering all parts of the country. Sales offices will be maintained in Buffalo, New York, Boston, Los Angeles and St. Louis in addition to Chicago. Copy ammunition is now being prepared for a national advertising campaign during the year.

The next addition to the Rothacker organization was S. J. Stoughton, who will specialize on film circulation. Stoughton spent nine years in the advertising and sales department of the H. J. Heinz concern. From Heinz he went to the Famous Players Film Company, as general sales manager for the Middle West. When the Paramount Pictures Corporation was formed, he was transferred to be sales manager in New York City. Later he became Paramount district sales manager for the Middle West, in charge of exchanges at Chicago, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Minneapolis and Cincinnati. Just before joining the Rothacker organization he was identified with the operation of a large string of picture theatres.

President Plans Trip.

Watterson R. Rothacker's third lieutenant is Edward O. Blackburn, who is now studio manager. Mr. Blackburn came to the Billboard as Chicago critic shortly before Watterson R. Rothacker resigned as Chicago Billboard manager. Mr. Blackburn joined the Rothacker organization as salesman in 1916. Later he became a Rothacker director. He will co-ordinate the work of directors and supervise writing, cutting of films, editing of films and laboratory work.

President Rothacker is planning to be absent from the Chicago home office for six months early this year. This will be to get construction started on the new laboratory-studio in Los Angeles, for which a site was purchased several months ago. When the workmen get down to business on this job, he will jump to New York to start another laboratory-studio there. London will be the next place where he will put up a plant, he says.

Tomlinson to Represent Fox Interests in France

CAPT. DANIEL G. TOMLINSON, Yale athlete, who took part in the war, sailed for France on Tuesday, January 6. He goes abroad on an important mission for the Fox Film Corporation.

Three Men Who Will Figure in Strong Rothacker Drive.
S. J. Stoughton, to specialize on film circulation; Douglas D. Rothacker, Watterson's brother, who will "drive" on prospective clients; Edward O. Blackburn, studio manager.

Shortly after leaving the United States Army, in which he served as an officer in the Seventy-seventh Division, Capt. Tomlinson allied himself with Fox Film Corporation. He first visited the Los Angeles studios, where he spent some time studying the organization and then returned to the home office in New York.

Capt. Tomlinson has given up a promising legal career in the financial district to enter the field of motion pictures. Born in New York City on May 1, 1889, he is a son of John C. Tomlinson, one of the foremost members of the bar. He attended Hotchkiss in 1907, and was graduated from Yale in 1912, with the degree of A. B. In 1910 and 1911 he played on the Yale football team and also was on the wrestling team. He edited the Yale Record in 1911, was a member of the Yale Glee Club in the same year, and in 1910-11, belonged to the Yale Dramatic Association. He is a member of the Alpha Delta Phi Fraternity and the Elizabethan Club.

In 1915 he was graduated from Columbia Law School with the degree of LL.B. and was admitted to the State Bar in the same year. He then became associated with Douglas, Armitage & McCann and in 1916-17 was with Tomlinson, Coxe & Tomlinson. He attended the first Plattsburg camp in 1917, and was commisioned a lieutenant and asigned to the 304th Field Artillery, Seventy-seventh Division. With this regiment he went to France, and on June 20, 1918, was detailed with the 32d French Division as liaison officer.

Jack Holt Signs to Play Leads for Famous Players

JACK HOLT, one of the best known leading men in the motion picture fraternity, has signed a long term contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to appear in leading roles in Paramount-Artcraft pictures. His first work under the new contract will be in a leading characterization in the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "Held by the Enemy," which is to be directed by Donald Crisp.

Mr. Holt has appeared in many notable productions and will be recalled for his work in "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" and "The Life Line." He is considered a genuine acquisition to the regular forces of the Lasky studio.

Not so many years ago, Jack Holt was engaged in driving a dog team from Fairbanks to Valdez and back again, as mail carrier in the frozen regions of Alaska. Later, he punched cattle and ran a cattle ranch; was a surveyor of ability and finally entered the screen life.

Holt admits that there has been nothing in pictures harder than he has encountered in real life. Versatility is his long suit. He can play villains or respectable heroes with equal facility. He looks fine in a dress suit or in chaps. His knowledge is as largely gained from real experience and so his portrayals gain in verisimilitude.

Wyatt and Morris Play for Washburn.

With "The Six Best Cellars" completed and in the cutting room, Bryant Washburn has started the production, under direction of James Cruze, of "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," at the Lasky studio. The picture rights to this farce-comedy were recently purchased by Famous Players-Lasky for Mr. Washburn.

Alperstein, of Allgood, Says 1920 Will Be a Big Year for Serials

IF the field of feature productions looks forward to a prosperous year in 1920 serial pictures can expect as big a season, perhaps bigger, for at no time since the inception of the industry have good serials been in such demand as now," says A. Alperstein. "Since the insertion of our two-page display ads in trade papers we have experienced a flood of inquiries, not alone from the United States and Canada, but from foreign countries as well.

"No doubt the reputation of Joseph A. Golden's brilliant serial success, 'The Great Gamble,' released through Pathe, has had much to do with the present flood of inquiries for 'The Whirlwind.'"

Written and produced by Mr. Golden, this serial shows his versatility in providing thrills that keep the interest in the story at high pitch.

One of the earliest serial directors, Mr. Golden is reputed to be responsible for the "hang-over" suspense at the end of every episode to tie up the entire series of instalments into a continuous chain. In "The Whirlwind" particular attention has been paid to the ending of every episode and it is claimed no serial surpasses the punch tie up ending of the different instalments, and at a private showing it brought forth great praise from exhibitors who reviewed the first episodes.

Just when "The Whirlwind" will be released was not stated by Mr. Alperstein. In the meantime an elaborate advertising and publicity campaign book is being prepared for the trade.

It is promised that it will contain more new and novel stunts, and publicity and display advertising ideas than any serial campaign book yet published, and is designed to help bring big returns to exhibitors.

C. B. Price Co. to Move to More Spacious Quarters

HAVING grown to such an extent as to necessitate more spacious quarters C. B. Price, Inc., have decided to move from their present quarters in the Times building, and are making arrangements to occupy greatly enlarged offices elsewhere at an early date.

The growth of this company since its inception only a few months ago, as chronicled in this publication, has been rapid. Mr. Price has gathered around him a corps of competent assistants, and is forging forward as a prominent handler both of domestic and foreign films.

C. B. Price, president of the company, is a man of wide experience in the film field. He has been successively representative and manager of the New York Triangle exchange, Pacific Coast manager of V. L. S. E., and Western representative of Mutual, and McClures. He resigned as one of the eastern representatives of Fox Film Corporation during 1919 to begin business for himself.

The new offices will be modeled on new and improved ideas, and will have every convenience for buyers, including private offices and reception rooms.

New Company Will Make Six Specials in a Year

A NEW motion picture company, the Character Pictures Corporation, announces ambitious plans. The company, which has taken temporary offices at 17 West Forty-second street, is to be an independent producer and is to make six special productions the first year.

This does not mean that the company will not also feature stars, as negotiations already have been entered into with several screen favorites with the intention of signing them on the Character program.

Among the incorporators of the company are Albert W. Plummer, a New England exhibitor, who has been connected in various branches of the film business for several years; Charles W. Buck, importer and manufacturer, 15 West Thirty-eighth street, and David Shapiro, lawyer and real estate owner.

The Double-Cross.
In a moment from L. L. Hiller's feature, "Who's Your Servant?"

The rights to several successful novels have been purchased. The director and cast for the first picture will be engaged in a few days and production begins immediately.

"It was only after quite some thought that it was decided to give the name of Character Pictures to our productions," said Mr. Plummer in speaking of the plans of the company. "We hope and intend to have them live up to this title."

Six Hundred Percent Was Pioneer's 1919 Increase

WITH fourteen exchanges in the United States and Canada, four of which are under direct control and the remainder on co-operative basis, handling its pictures, with four companies producing exclusively for it, the Pioneer Film Corporation starts out the New Year as one of the biggest independent film organizations in America.

The year 1919 saw the Pioneer business increase six fold.

In all the larger independent theatres Pioneer pictures are regular offerings.

In all parts of the country Pioneer attractions are said to be more than holding their own on the best screens, with every week setting new records.

The annual meeting of the Pioneer official board will soon take place and the plans for further expansion which have been mapped out will be considered in detail, and a definite policy for the coming year will be decided upon.

Sol Lesser's Plans Progressing Rapidly

ABOUT a month ago Sol Lesser announced that he would enter the producing field, and would begin work within sixty days. Mr. Lesser has consummated many deals in much quicker time than anticipated and announces that his first unit, the George Beban Producing Corporation, is now well under way on the first picture, "One Man in a Million." Mr. Lesser plans to produce a series of six pictures with this famous star, all directorial and story details to be left to the exclusive selection of Mr. Beban. In his first picture Mr. Beban appears in his popular characterization of the sympathetic Italian. Mr. Lesser plans to conduct a personal tour with Mr. Beban, in which the famous star will appear in a spoken prologue to the picture.

Mr. Lesser's second producing unit is with Annette Kellerman, the famous mermaid. She will head her own company, with full charge of production, and it is planned to have this picture exceed her former ones in splendor and expense. The locale is to be laid in Hawaii and Australia. He also plans to have Miss Kellerman go out on a personal tour with her picture.

James Morrison Is Signed by Jans to Appear in Support of Olive Tell

JAMES MORRISON, who has been associated with some of the most noted film successes of the past, has been signed by Jans Pictures, Inc., to support Olive Tell in the picturization of C. Wadsworth Camp's "The Abandoned Room," which will be known to exhibitors as "Love Without Question," the initial release of this producing company.

Mr. Morrison's experience as a film star has covered a wide field. After a number of years on the legitimate stage, in vaudeville and stock, Mr. Morrison made his debut before the motion picture camera with the Vitagraph Company, with whom he spent six years. During this time he was starred in such well-known successes as "The Redemption of Dave Darcey," "The Alibi" and "The Enemy." After this he appeared in a number of independent productions, including "Enlighten Thy Daughter."

Herman F. Jans, president of the Jans Pictures, Inc., feels that in the acquisition of "Jimmie" Morrison for an important role in "Love Without Question" he has supplied the new feature with a strong asset, and he is in accordance with his plan to place the very best at the disposal of his associates in making this premier production a strong box office attraction for the exhibitor.

It is understood that Mr. Morrison has been given a role particularly adaptable to his own style of acting and one that will add strength to the cast.

Foreign Sales Reported on "House Without Children"

E. WERTHEIMER, of London, has bought Robert McLaughlin's big special, "The House Without Children," for the British Isles. Mr. Wertheimer purposes giving special presentations of the picture in the principal cities of the United Kingdom and in order to obtain the spectacular American theatrical effect he has ordered a large supply of oil paintings.

London will see both stage and screen productions of Robert McLaughlin this Spring as Mr. Alfred Butts and Mr. J. H. Sacks are making stage productions there from original manuscripts and Mr. E. Wertheimer will present his latest big cinera creation, "The House Without Children."

Max Glucksman, of Buenos Ayres, has purchased the South American rights to "The House Without Children," and other big exploiters of special productions are negotiating for rights to the McLaughlin feature.

Excellent Cast Portrays "The Whirlwind" Serial

JOSEPH A. GOLDEN, author and producer of "The Whirlwind" serial, announces he has one of the strongest casts ever assembled for a serial. "I picked my players," says Mr. Golden, "for their ability to portray the story, for their daring in the performance of stunts, and for their knowledge of what the public wants.

"In Charles Hutchinson we have not only a popular star, but one whose recklessness and daring have never been equalled on a screen. He performs every hazardous stunt himself, and scorns a double; and has injected thrills that make this serial a superthriller. Likewise pretty Edith Thornton, playing opposite him, runs through the thrill scenes as though dangerous feats were child's play.

"We boast of new ideas and risks in hazardous exploits in 'The Whirlwind,' and the fact that every member of the cast has done his or her work in such a manner as to make any director feel that he had an all-star cast, and we believe we have accomplished something bigger in serials than has ever gone before."

State rights are being allotted through Allgood Pictures Corporation, 815 Longacre Building, while foreign rights are handled by E. S. Manheimer, 126 West Forty-sixth street.

Types Fit Characters in "The Kentucky Colonel"

DIRECTOR WILLIAM SEITER, in charge of the productions of "The Kentucky Colonel," for the National Film Corporation of America, is watching with interest the manner in which the picture is received by the public. The scene of the picture is in old Kentucky—the Kentucky of Civil War days. Many of the characters were so finely drawn it was necessary to locate the actors whose physical qualifications kept pace with their histrionic. Mr. Setier scouted high and low for those who are now in the cast, insisting that together with their personal appearance, they must, in talent as well, be fitted for the roles to which they were assigned.

"The Kentucky Colonel" features the work of Elinor Field, Francis MacDonald, Joseph J. Dowling and Lloyd Bacon. The film play will be given its first Eastern showing within a short time, according to Joe Brandt, general representative of National, in charge of the New York office.

"It Happened in Paris" Presented by Bernhardt

"It Happened in Paris," released by the Tyrad Pictures, Inc., according to a statement by officials of that company, bids fair to become one of the most successful pictures of the period. Of additional interest is the fact that the picture is presented by Sarah Bernhardt who wrote the story and sent her protege, Madame Yorska, to America to produce it.

W. Lawson Butt, who played one of the roles in "The Miracle Mann," is co-starred. The picture was filmed at the Brunton studios under the direction of David Hartford.

The story is unique, dealing with both society and the underworld of Paris. To Madame Yorska, playing a dual role, is given an opportunity of displaying her versatility, the parts being entirely dissimilar. One is that of a fiery, untamable girl of the slums and the other a girl born of wealth. The supporting cast includes Hayward Mack, Charles Gunn and Mme. Dione, late of the Comedie Francise.

Arrow Ready With Art-O-Grafs.

Art-O-Graf Film Corporation, of Denver, have just delivered the first of a series of productions which are being made by Director Otis B. Thayer for release through Arrow. The first subject is a western starring Edmund Cobb, a rising young actor who will also be featured in the other pictures of the series.

"The Desert Scorpion" is the name of the initial release which is scheduled for January 15. Production has also been started by Director Thayer on "Wolves of the Street," scheduled for release early in February.

New Players for Hank Mann.

Madge Kirby, Vernon Dent, Jack Richardson and Jess Weldon have all signed contracts with Morris R. Schlank, whereby they agree to appear exclusively in the new series of twenty-six two-reel comedies starring Hank Mann.

Wild Animals Vie With the Human Actor in "Lost City"

THE dangers of picture-making with wild animals among the principal "actors," is exploited by Warner Brothers in publicity concerning "The Lost City," a serial in which Juanita Hansen and George Chesebro are the leading humans. Without specifying the exact location of the "jungles" into which the actors went to stir up the animals, we are told of the dangers encountered in making scenes with wild beasts to contend with.

It is promised that "The Lost City" will rival the circus in its display of jungle inhabitants, and there will be enough real danger indicated by the photographed scenes to satisfy the lovers of thrills and excitement. Warner Brothers are exploiting the serial to the fullest degree, preparing the state rights market for its reception with skill and cleverness that denotes the best showmanship.

"The Lost City" will be complete in fifteen episodes. Juanita Hansen, in the role of the Lost Princess, will display beauty and talent in many exciting episodes, while a strong supporting company will keep the fast-moving scenes at the height of entertainment value continually.

Spiritualism Is Theme of New Ebony Feature

THE Ebony Film Corporation, Chicago, announces a special feature, "Do the Dead Talk?" produced by Jack McCullough from a story by himself and Dr. H. A. Cross. While it treats with spiritualism, it is said to be by no means a dry treatise, nor is it a sensational expose, the writers and producers having handled it in such a way as to provide food for thought, as well as unusual entertainment.

The materialization of a departed spirit has important bearing on the plot and suspense of the story. Speaking on this subject, Mr. Pollard, of Ebony, says:

"I am aware that there are millions of people who will declare that such a thing is utterly impossible, but at the same time there are as many who will not.

"Dr. Cross, who handled the psyhic detail of the feature, a man who has made a deep study of spiritualism in all its phases, says that spirit materialization is a function by which the spirit has the power to gather about itself material substance in the form of a mortal body which it occupied while upon the mortal plane. The source from which it draws this substance is the materializing medium and those who are gathered to witness the phenomena."

Aside from the timeliness of the subject, "Do the Dead Talk?" marks the first appearance on the screen of Hermina France, a European dancer and actress, who is said to show unusual ability.

Frohman's "Invisible Ray" Serial Now Rapidly Nearing Completion

THE fifteen episode serial, "The Invisible Ray," being produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, is rapidly nearing completion. The first five episodes are being titled and cut, after sixteen weeks of work. While this length of time on five episodes is unusual, it is explained by the fact that the subject required the building of forty-seven massive sets and the employment of numerous mechanical devices, as well as unusual forms of trick photography.

Guy McConnell, the author, is of the opinion that the popularity of serials will have an added impetus when this chapter story is shown, and will demonstrate that there is a broader scope to serial photoplays.

Jesse J. Goldberg, general manager, states: "In 'The Invisible Ray' we first acquired the screen rights to a manuscript written for publication in a magazine. Then we secured the services of a physician of note to collaborate in reducing to the level of the lay mind scientific matters that form a part of the plot.

"Every device used in the production is practical. Nothing is faked and no attempt to deceive the eye employed. We leased two structures and a private street. It took the entire electrical staff thirty-six hours to wire one set, a secret chamber with nine passageways. In addition to secret passages, tunnels, towers, laboratories, parlors, etc., there were used in the first five episodes two yachts, three launches, two aeroplanes, racing autos, rowboats, vans, hearses and coaling cranes.

"To have a real story that retains the elements of sensationalism but carries a tale that will interest aside from the death-defying stunts, and expect to give a trade showing in about four weeks at a large New York theatre.

"The same care and attention was observed in securing the cast. Jack Sherrill and Ruth Clifford are starred, while Sydney Bracey, Edward Davis and Corinne Uzzell complete the leads."

Osborne's "Gray Brother" a Timely Underworld Film

THE timeliness of Edward A. MacManus' production of "The Gray Brother," a human story of underworld romance written by Thomas Mott Osborne, and directed by Sidney Olcott, is apparent by the publicity given the action of the management of an Illinois prison in compelling two hundred prisoners to witness a hanging in the jail corridor.

While Mr. MacManus reveals some of the brutalities that inmates endured in confinement under the "old system" of prison management, his picture is one that presents the romantic side of criminal life, the outcome of that code of "honor" which the criminal classes have made to govern themselves and protect them from the law.

It is said to be a new revelation of "that life of which the other half knows little about," and a picturization of romance that follows the urchin of the gutter and the tenement lot through manifold vicissitudes of reformatory and prison life, and that in spite of all his criminality there follows him to even the end a loyalty and animal love that is tigerish in the intensity of its devotion. The story of "The Gray Brother" brings Mr. Osborne into the light as a writer of strong dramatic force.

Vincent MacDermott Joins Hank Mann.

Vincent MacDermott has been appointed technical director for the Hank Mann comedies by Morris R. Schlank, producer.

You've Guessed It: It's the Allgood Serial, "The Whirlwind."

Active Preparation for Revival of "Tillie's Punctured Romance"

FROM W. H. Productions comes information that "Tillie's Punctured Romance" is being revived by Tower Film Corporation. This Mack Sennett favorite, featuring Charlie Chaplin, Marie Dressler, Mabel Normand, Mack Swain and Chester Conklin, has a great reputation to be revived with the showings.

It early accomplished what the "glooms" argued couldn't be done—that the screen could make people laugh. Yet thousands laughed at "Tillie's Punctured Romance." This production made history for screen comedy and records for exhibitors and exchangemen.

A special exploitation campaign, unique in character and destined to put the picture over in an even bigger way than heretofore, is being planned. This will include new advertising material of every description, new posters, lobby photos and displays.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance" is one of the pictures which serves as a sort of "high water mark" in box office receipts by which others are measured. "As big a winner as 'Tillie,'" or "As good as 'Tillie,'" are expressions of motion picture exchangemen and exhibitors. Seldom does the independent market get unusual money-makers, and when they do they are not soon forgotten.

A special exploitation and press sheet is now being prepared for "Tillie," containing copies of newspaper cuts, special advertisements, press stories, catch phrases, exploitation ideas, suggestions and special "stunts." Every aid that can be given the exhibitor to help him put this picture over will be provided.

Jans Signs Peggy Parr.

Herman J. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., announces another strong addition to the cast engaged to support Olive Tell in a picturization of C. Wadsworth Camp's "The Abandoned Room," under the title of "Love Without Question," directed under the personal supervision of B. A. Wolfe. This is Peggy Parr, who played leads in the George Ade Fables.

Miss Parr has had wide experience in the realm of the silent drama for the last five or six years. She played for the Metro Company, appearing in "Sowers and Reapers" and "The Duchess of Doubt." She also played a prominent part in "Stolen Triumph."

Swedish Actor-Director Adopts "Proxy Playing"

VICTOR SEASTROM, the actor-director of the Swedish Biograph Company, employs a double in his own role during rehearsals of film plays, only portraying the part himself when the actual photographing of the scenes is going on.

"By viewing his own role from behind the camera Seastrom derives a better understanding of the character," declared Ernest Mattsson, American manager of the Swedish Biograph.

"Of course, he originates his characterization with understanding gained by experience on the stage. But he believes that by the 'proxy playing' method he secures an accurate impression of his character's relation to the rest of the dramatis personae. Thus avoiding any tendency to give a stereotyped portrayal."

Advertising Tie-up for "A Burlesque on Carmen"

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed for publication of "Carmen," the special comedy song number, written by Wm. J. McKenna. A comprehensive tie-up will feature the publication.

The Victor Kremer organization has prepared a moving picture trailer incorporating the chorus to be used as an introduction to the presentation of the film, and thousands of small cards, carrying on one side a scene from "Carmen," and on the reverse side the chorus, will be distributed by the state right buyers and exhibitors.

Special slides have also been prepared, carrying verse and chorus of the McKenna number. The music publishers will pursue an intensive campaign, including the use of singers in the various houses, window displays and the use of the "Carmen" number by several vaudeville headliners.

Pauline's "Mystery Mind" Uses Craze for the Occult

THE new Reeve and Grey serial, "The Mystery Mind," now being produced at their Supreme Pictures, Inc., studio in Flushing, Long Island, deals with hypnotism as a science Arthur B. Reeve first made science popular on the screen and he and John W. Grey are the first to treat hypnotism from the scientific angle.

To do so, they secured the services of Dr. J. Robert Pauline, long known as a hypnotist in American theatres, Pauline, called the "Mystifier of Multitudes," discussed science and the screen in a recent interview.

"Hypnotism is not a black art," he stated, "nor is it any longer regarded as a mystery or a superhuman gift, for its action can be explained. Will power is the first requisite of concentration, though concentration of itself increases and develops will power."

"At least eighty per cent. of human beings can be influenced by hypnosis," says Pauline, "though it is utterly impossible to influence a subject who is actively combating the hypnotist. Every business man practices hypnotism more or less when he sways a man's mind to his own way of thinking by a convincing argument.

Hypnotism Serves Surgery.

"As an aid to modern surgery hypnosis is invaluable. I have often demonstrated the "blood test," now so closely associated with my name. Incidentally, we show it in Episode 1 of "Mystery Mind." For many minor operations, hypnosis is really the only thing that should be used to alleviate pain.

"Physicians decry hypnotism, yet all use it, unconsciously perhaps, when they give a hypochondriac a sugar- coated bread pill and convince him it is a powerful medicine. It is the suggestion that cures, and suggestion and hypnosis are convertible terms.

"My title of doctor is a legitimate one. I held the chair as 'doctor of psychology' in one of our recognized colleges.

"Unfortunately, college professors receive less in a year than I can earn in a week as an entertainer—and I have a family to support."

W. E. Shallenberger on the Coast.

W. E. Shallenberger, of the Arrow Film Corporation, has arrived in Los Angeles, where he will remain for the next two weeks, negotiating new releasing contracts with independent producers.

Upon his arrival at the Morris Schlank studios, Mr. Shallenberger screened the first three of the 1920 series of the Hank Mann Comedies. These three have been titled and the first subject, "Broken Bubbles," has been received at Arrow's New York office.

New Stars Begin Work.

Joe Ryan and Jean Paige, recently raised to stardom by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, have begun active work on the new serial by Mr. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, in which they will appear as co-stars. Miss Paige left the Brooklyn studio two weeks ago, after completing "The Fortune Hunter," in which she played opposite Earle Williams, has stopped over at Paris, Ill., for a few days' visit with her father before going on to California.

Complete Plans for Mayors' Parley on Film Regulation

WILLIAM P. CAPES, secretary of the (New York) State Conference of Mayors, spent one day in New York, the week of January 5, completing arrangements for the opening sessions on January 15 and 16 of the special committee of the Mayors Conference on the regulation of motion pictures, and which will be held at the Waldorf-Astoria. On his trip to New York, Mr. Capes made arrangements with one of the large producing companies to the end that the committee will visit the studios on the afternoon of January 15. Mr. Capes also saw members of the National Board of Review, so that that organization will be in operation on January 16, permitting members of the committee to see how pictures are censored.

The committee will be present in its entirety, according to Mr. Capes. Some efforts have been made during the last two or three days by certain interests to obtain a place on the committee, but this Mr. Capes has absolutely refused on the grounds that the committee has been announced by Mayor Walter Stone, and that there will be absolutely no changes in its personnel. Some of the producers thought that certain ends of the business, such as the industrial, should be represented, but Mr. Capes informed the gentlemen that once the producers were subdivided, the divisions would appear far too numerous and that the committee and its work during the next few months, would be encumbered to an extent not desired.

June Mathis Confers With Ibanez On "Four Horsemen of Apocalypse"

JUNE MATHIS has returned to Hollywood, Cal., and taken possession of her new suite of offices at the Metro studios, ending her visit in the East. The first work of the young scenario chief will be the adaptation of the sensational novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," to which she brings the inspiration of personal suggestions from Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the author, whom she met in Chicago while en route from New York to the Pacific Coast.

Her first day at the studios since she left a month ago was spent by Miss Mathis in consultation with Maxwell Karger, Screen Classics, Inc., director general. She told him how Metro officials in New York had arranged for her meeting with the internationally famous Spanish novelist before she left New York. Senor Ibanez at the time was on a speaking tour of the United States and part of Canada and was meeting with great popular acclaim.

A Pleasant Conversation.

"When I telephoned Senor Ibanez at the Auditorium Annex in Chicago," related Miss Mathis, "he seemed disappointed that I knew neither French nor Spanish, as he does not speak English. Possibly he was also doubtful as to the propriety of seeing me. Anyway I took my mother with me and he seemed relieved to see that I had a duenna.

"Vicente Blasco Ibanez is about 45 years old and wonderfully brilliant. We spoke, of course, through an interpreter. Talking that way is usually beastly slow, but strangely enough I found the novelist's face so expressive, his gestures so eloquent, that often I knew his meaning before the interpreter spoke. Sometimes it seemed that Blasco Ibanez was just as quick to understand me.

Had Knowledge of Production.

"Senor Ibanez evidently expected that I had a completed scenario for him to look over. I had, of course, discussed the production with Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, in New York, and I told Senor Ibanez that I had read the book carefully and had outlined my plans mentally, but that I wanted to talk them over with Mr. Karger before proceeding further with a working synopsis of the scenario.

"Senor Ibanez made several wonderfully inspirational suggestions, very clear and very valuable, for effects in the motion picture production. In fact he showed a remarkable knowledge of the making of motion pictures, at least from the European angle. He readily understood our technical terms, too.

"At the end of our talk, which lasted an hour and a half, he expressed his pleasure at our meeting and promised to see me again when he reaches Los Angeles the middle of January."

Goldwyn Officials View Print of "Cup of Fury"

SINCE a special showing of "The Cup of Fury" to the executives of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and Rupert Hughes, telegrams of congratulations and appreciation have been speeding across the wires from New York to the Culver City studios where this first production for Eminent Authors Pictures was made under the direction of T. Hayes Hunter. Rupert Hughes, who wrote the novel and spent five weeks at the West Coast on the cast and continuity, has sent a shower of telegrams to the members of the company responsible for the production.

Helene Chadwick, who plays the part of Mamise, is singled out for special praise. She had a wonderful acting opportunity and made the most of every scene in a series of picturesque situations. Rockliffe Fellowes plays opposite Miss Chadwick. Others in the cast are Herbert Standing, Sidney Ainsworth, Kate Lester, Frank Morgan, Florence Deshon, Clarissa Selwynne, Frank Leigh and Dwight Crittenden.

Goldwyn Names Pictures in Which His Stars Will Appear This Year

AS a result of carefully laid plans which have matured during the past six months, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is able to announce definitely what exhibitors will get during 1920. The element of chance is removed from the Goldwyn forecast, as most of the productions for the first half of the year have been completed and many of those to fill out the remaining weeks are underway.

With the Eminent Authors pictures, the Rex Beach productions, the contributions of Goldwyn's unexcelled list of stars, the Booth Tarkington "Edgar" comedies and the high class short subjects distributed by Goldwyn, including the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, the Ford Educational Weekly and the Capitol Comedies, the coming months will offer great opportunities to exhibitors.

Rupert Hughes' first contribution is "The Cup of Fury," an intensely vivid and dramatic story directed by T. Hayes Hunter. "The Street Called Straight" and "Earthbound" will be Basil King's initial offerings or the coming season. Two briliant and penetrating studies of life are contributed by Mary Roberts Rinehart in "Dangerous Days" and "The Amazing Interlude." Equally significant are the two great novels by Gertrude Atherton, "The Tower of Ivory" and "Perch of the Devil." "Partners of the Night," recently completed in the East by Paul Scardon, is Leroy Scott's initial photoplay. Another story that proved a tremendous success is Gouverneur Morris' "The Penalty."

New Rex Beach Comedy.

Every exhibitor has come to know the box office value of Rex Beach productions. "The Girl From Outside," although it was released last fall, is still holding up as one of the strongest attractions on the market. Mr. Beach has followed this with another powerful drama of the great out-of-doors, called "The Silver Horde." His bright comedy, "Going Some," has been selected to follow "The Silver Horde."

Goldwyn stars never have had such an attractive list of pictures as that compiled for 1920. Geraldine Farrar in "Flame of the Desert" surpasses anything she has heretofore done on the screen, and her next release, "The Woman and the Puppet," promises to be a worthy successor to the spectacular story of Egypt. Pauline Frederick starts the year with "The Loves of Letty." Next comes "The Paliser Case," "The Woman in Room 13" and "Roads of Destiny." Mabel Normand's "Pinto" is now ready for distribution and subsequent months will bring more comedies of an equally high caliber.

"The Blooming Angel" is the first of the Madge Kennedy starring vehicles made for 1920. It was recently finished at Culver City and the Goldwyn comedienne is now working on "Two Cents Worth of Humaneness." Tom Moore has an exceptional mystery story in "Duds." The coming season bids fair to find Will Rogers firmly established as one of the greatest of all screen comedians. His next release is "Water, Water, Everywhere."

Jack Pickford's first Goldwyn picture, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," is ready for distribution, and as soon as the youthful star returns to the Coast he will start on "A Double-Dyed Deceiver," an O. Henry story. Other material has been selected for Pickford and will be utilized for subsequent 1920 productions.

"Mr. Smith's" Identity To Be Made Known Soon

THE identity of "The Mysterious Mr. Smith" who has given $7,000,000 to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and who pledged $4,000,000 more under certain conditions will be made known on January 10. It is confidently expected by those in a position to know that when the unknown is stripped of his mask he will be revealed as George Eastman.

During past years the unknown donor —that is unknown to all except a few men at the head of the institute—has from time to time contributed generous sums for various purposes, the total of these being more than $7,000,000. A few months ago it was announced that the unknown had come forward with an offer to chip in another $4,000,000 if the other friends of the institute would match this gift. The time stipulated for the raising of the money was to end on June 1, 1919.

It had not been planned to reveal the identity of the unknown, but so great was the curiosity of friends, graduates and undergraduates of the institute that Dr. Robert Cockburn Maclaurin, president of the institute, after consultation with him, said that "The Mysterious Mr. Smith" had consented to be identified when the $4,000,000 that would match his was raised. Recent developments in the campaign have shown that this amount will soon be all in, so the denouement is officially slated for January 10.

Robert Ellis Will Direct Next Eugene O'Brien Film

MYRON SELZNICK announces that "A Fool and His Money," by George Barr McCutcheon, will be Eugene O'Brien's next picture and that Robert Ellis will be his director. Mr. Ellis has had a varied experience in the motion picture world, and also has gained popularity as an actor. He played opposite Olive Thomas in two of her Selznick pictures, "Upstairs and Down" and "The Spite Bride.

"A Fool and His Money" is the story of a ne'er-do-well, told with brilliancy and incident characteristic of McCutcheon at his best. The leading role will give Eugene O'Brien opportunity for varied and unusual work.

Mr. O'Brien is taking a rest while Director Ellis is going over the script, making preparations for the production. Work is scheduled to begin soon.

"Natural" Exterior Built Indoors.

An unusual set has been built in the Selznick Bronx studio that is attracting considerable attention for its naturalness and unusually fine detail of outdoor life. Exteriors built in interiors are one of the hardest things the directors have to contend with.

In this set with its river in perspective and low lying marshes in which one can almost hear the frogs croak, with the dark and mystic hillside glimmering in the moonlight, Director Wesley Ruggles has accomplished something worth while. The set was built for Owen Moore's latest which will soon be released by Select Pictures.

"I'm Not So Bad As I'm Painted," Says Dolores Cassinelli, Model in "The Web of Deceit."

Prints of Wilson Serial Arrive.

Prints of the first three episodes of the second Ben Wilson serial, "The Screaming Shadow," have arrived from the Coast. The three episodes are titled, "The Scream in the Dark;" "The Virgin of Death;" and "The Fang of the Beast." Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber are co-starred with a supporting cast including William Carroll, William Deyer, Fred Gamble, Howard Crampton, Joseph Girard, Frances Terry, Pancy Porter, Clara Miller and Joseph Manning.

Rawlinson to Play Lead in New Blackton Picture

J. STUART BLACKTON, whose productions are distributed by Pathe, has just purchased through Edgar Selden "The Passers-By." Herbert Rawlinson has been engaged to play the leading male role. When "The Passers-By" was first produced in London, Gerald DuMaurier, son of the author of Trilby," created the character of Waverton. Richard Bennet enacted the part when the play was staged in New York.

"The Passers-By" will not be released by Pathe until after "My Husband's Other Wife," "Respectable by Proxy" and "The Blood Barrier," all of which have been completed.

Mr. Blackton has tried for years to obtain film rights to "The Passers-By," but something always hindered the sale of the film. It is a play which will permit of a big production, as well as an artistic offering. Elaborate preparations have been made for the filming in the Blackton studio in Brooklyn.

Mr. Blackton is thoroughly familiar with the locale of the story, which is laid largely in London, having lived there for years. He will be obliged to reproduce the dense fog which engulfs the English metropolis every fall.

O'Brien Begins New Picture.

Eugene O'Brien, Selznick star, who has been taking advantage of a short rest in New York following the completion of his latest Selznick picture, has began work in the Selznick Fort Lee studios on a production called "A Fool and His Money." George Barr McCutcheon is the author.

Augustus Thomas Is Pleased With Picturization of "The Copperhead"

AMONG those present at the first private showing of "The Copperhead," the Paramount-Artcraft Super-Special in which Lionel Barrymore is starred and which is to be released January 25, was Augustus Thomas, author of the play of the same name in which Mr. Barrymore scored his great stage success. At the conclusion of the showing, Mr. Thomas's opinion of the screen production was eagerly sought. Indeed, it was evident that he had thoroughly enjoyed the picture and it was not difficult for him to talk about it.

"In the first place," said Mr. Thomas, "Frederick Lendis's story, 'The Glory of His Country,' on which I based my drama, was an excellent one. Add to the fact that I always have been what might be called a Lincoln fanatic and you will see that my task of writing 'The Copperhead' was not exactly drudgery."

Schroell Impressed Him.

Mr. Thomas was much impressed with the work of Nicholas Schroell, who plays the role of Lincoln. Schroell was selected from among 300 applicants who answered an advertisement placed in the New York newspapers.

"He was very good," said the playwright, "considering that it was his first motion picture, he was remarkable. His resemblance, both in face and physique, to the Great Emancipator is striking and he acts like a veteran.

"As for Lionel Barrymore, I have always been one of his keenest admirers. He is an artist as well as an actor, a combination necessary in the portrayal of Milt Shanks. We realized this when we first started laying our plans for 'The Copperhead' and held up the production quite a while until arrangements could be made to procure him. He can play the part of a very young man and then a very old man, both convincingly, and has the facial formation which permits him to make up splendidly for both. Another point is that he never does anything 'out of key.' All these things together make his interpretation, both on the stage and in the motion picture, excellent."

Speaking of the work of Charles Maigne in adapting and directing the screen version he said: "I enjoyed the picture, judging it merely from the usual photoplay standards, more than any other I have ever seen. Moreover, the big thing about 'The Copperhead' is the sympathy one holds for this man who is making a sacrifice for his country—a sacrifice as great as anyone could be called upon to make. In the picture it is excellently done. By avoiding the showing of big, spectacular battle scenes Mr. Maigne displayed excellent judgment."

Novel Experiment Suggested.

Showing the stage version of a play at the same time as the motion picture has never been done and would make a novel experiment. When this was suggested to Mr. Thomas he said, "I think the two versions would be about equal in interest and could be seen and enjoyed one immediately following the other. The motion picture has of course greater scenic scope and a wider range. It begins at the very beginning, whereas on the stage the effect of the voice and the living presence would make up for this lack of range. I think it could be done, and successfully."

Mary Helps Raise Mortgage.

Proving that mortgages happen in real life, and that occasionally the heroine helps to raise them, Mary Miles Minter, the Realart star, spoke at the big benefit held in Clunc's Auditorium, Los Angeles, for the Lark Ellen Home for Boys. Through the good work of the performers and speakers more than half of the $800 mortgage was realized in the form of contributions.

Neilan Engages West.

Charles West, one of the most expert portrayers of dope fiend parts in the country, has been selected by Marshall Neilan for the role of Peter Kirkstone, the opium smoking son of Judge Kirkstone, in "The River's End," Mr. Neilan's first independent production, released through First National.

American Films Gain in Popularity in Scandinavian Theatres, Says Oes

IN few countries in the world have American pictures gained greater prestige than in the Scandinavian nations, according to Ingvald C. Oes, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Scandinavian offices at Copenhagen, who arrived in New York on December 23 for a stay of several weeks. This is Mr. Oes' first visit to America since his departure for Copenhagen three years ago to take charge of the interests of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Fully 75 per cent. of the pictures shown in Scandinavian theatres today are American made, Mr. Oes declared. The return of peace and the elimination of the hazards of war-time shipping have brought about an even greater interest in American pictures, with the result that photoplays from this side of the Atlantic are so solidly entrenched in Scandinavia today that they can never be dislodged from the high position they hold in the estimation of the general public.

Exhibitors Are Prosperous.

"The motion picture business in Scandinavia has been very prosperous," said Mr. Oes, "and the exhibitors are reaping a harvest with high-grade American pictures. Paramount-Artcraft productions are immensely popular and there is scarcely a theatre of any size in Denmark, Sweden and Norway in which they are not shown all or part of the time. Interest in the latest Paramount-Artcraft pictures is at a high pitch and the release of each new production is followed by record-breaking crowds at all of the theatres. The removal of war-time restrictions upon shipping has helped greatly to stimulate the motion picture business.

"The return of peace has brought about a revival of interest in theatre building throughout all Scandinavia and most especially in Sweden. This country has about 700 motion picture theatres, many of which compare favorably with the finest theatres in this country. The Roda Kyarn, in Stockholm, owned by the Swedish Biograph Company, Inc., one of our principal exhibitors, is declared by many to be one of the finest motion picture houses in Europe. It has every modern device and convenience for the proper presentation of high grade motion pictures and for the comfort of its patrons. The Palladium Theatres in Stockholm, owned by Scandinavish Film Central, is also one of the finest houses in Europe.

Revival in Norway and Denmark.

"Swedish Biograph, which is also a producing organization, now owns and controls about 100 motion picture houses and is building a number of new ones. Skandia Film Industry, now merged with Swedish Biograph, has many high grade theatres, and there are other companies which own and control strings of theatres. It is much easier to build theatres in Sweden because licenses are more easily obtained. Locations are more difficult to obtain in Norway and Denmark, but they, too, are enjoying a revival of interest in theatre building. The three countries have about 1,300 theatres, and this number will be increased considerably within the next few years, as the exhibitors are enjoying great prosperity.

"We are making ready to open the Central European trerritory, a contract having been signed with the Danish-American Film Company of Copenhagen for the distribution of Paramount Artcraft productions in Germany, Austria, Hungary, Poland, the Ukraine, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slovakia, Rumania and Bulgaria. This company is composed of Danish and American capitalists and expects to put the contract in operation in March, 1920."

"The Valley of Tomorrow" Shows Wonders of Sierras

THERE was unprecedented activity in the Lake Tahoe country for many weeks when the "Flying A" company invaded its solitude for the filming of "The Valley of Tomorrow." It has been said that there in the High Sierra is "more geography to the square mile than can be found in equal area anywhere else on the round earth." The infinite variety of scene was an endless source of inspiration to the whole cast, as well as to Emmett J. Flynn who wielded the megaphone.

Practically all the action in the drama called for exteriors and a constant change of scene. The beautiful Lake Tahoe, surrounded by majestic mountains and pine-fringed and indented shores, and the everchanging banks of the Truckee River with all sorts of photographic possibilities, gladdened the hearts of director and cameraman.

A sunlit vista on the shore of the lake provided an ideal setting for the love scenes between Pauline Curley and Fred M. Malatesta—appealing little "Sissy May" and the seductive Italian singer, respectively, of the story. The dense pine woods which followed the shore of the Truckee River afforded a fine panoramic background for the exciting midnight search, when the whole Morgan clan turned out in pursuit of the culprit.

The story was written for William Russell by Stephen Fox, a well known novelist, and the cast includes William Russell, Mary Thurman, Harvey Clark, Fred M. Malatesta, Frank Brownlee, Pauline Curley, Frank Clark, Jeffrey Sloan and Lewis King.

Suggested Name for His Academy Pleased Eastman

PERHAPS the most significant announcement in connection with the great endowed motion picture theatre and music school which George Eastman is building at Rochester is the fact that it will be known as the "National Academy of Motion Pictures." Hitherto the only official name attached to the enterprise was "Eastman School of Music."

Mr. Eastman says that the name was suggested to him and seemed appropriate. The aim of the institution is to promote art in motion pictures by presenting them under most ideal conditions, yet the National Academy is in a most nebulous state. He says that present plans do not go any further than to have motion pictures of supreme quality in sympathetic surroundings, the showing of which will be for the advancement of art, as well as the choice entertainment of lovers of music.

To the concert hall, which will be in the same building, but separate from the great motion picture auditorium, will be brought the leading vocal and instrumental artists of the country. It is planned that the music school proper, the concert hall and the motion picture theatre with its 100-piece symphony orchestra, shall be a perfect kneading place for the moulding of genius of the first quality.

The selection of the name, "National Academy of Motion Pictures," and its approval by Mr. Eastman, may recall the fact that a name almost synonymous was first mentioned in Moving Picture World. The World man used at first what seemed to be the most appropriate name, "National Academy of Motion Picture Art." The name which has now been finally selected corresponds very closely to the name he originated.

Washington Association Expands.

Activities of the Washington, D. C., Exchange Managers Association are to be greatly expanded, and an office is shortly to be opened in Baltimore for the conduct of its affairs in that city. The local quarters at Room 901, Mather Building, will be under the management of Miss Woolley, formerly of the American Red Cross.

The organization is now negotiating for quarters on Calvert street near Lexington, in Baltimore, which will probably be under the management of Edward Fowler, brother of W. H. Fowler, of the National Theatre in Washington. The Baltimore office will handle the films of all companies for censoring and will also act as a shipping and receiving station and for the inspection of intershipments in that city. A complete service station will be provided.

Leah Baird Appears at the Strand.

Leah Baird recently appeared in person before the curtain of Tom Moore's Strand Theatre, Washington, D. C., the occasion being the opening at that house of her new W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Capitol," photodramatized from Augustus Thomas' play. The star was greeted by a crowded house, the attendance being so large that hundreds failed to gain admittance. "The Capitol" was received with unstinted approval.

Many Events Are Shown In Universal News Reels

IN the three news reels released the week of January 5 by Universal, series 53, the cameraman takes spectators to many places of interest. In Hearst News, General Pershing's visit to his home town of Laclede, Mo., is pictured.

The film presentation of "The Wayfarer," the religious spectacle staged at Madison Square Garden, N. Y., gives everybody a chance to witness this unusual performance. The Hearst reel also contains scenes of activities along the Mexican border, airplane views of San Francisco, the homecoming of the last American soldiers from Siberia and several other subjects.

International News Reel contains the first filmed review of aviation for 1919, showing the Trans-Atlantic flight, with Commander Read landing at Lisbon, Portugal; the giant R-34 landing at Mineola; London's reception to Sir Alcock and Lieutenant Brown; Lieutenant Maynard's finish of the trans-continental race, etc. In this reel tests are also shown for detecting wood alcohol in whiskey. Coasting on the ice, pulled by a taxi-ing airplane as a new sport at Red Bank, N. J.; the annual cat show in New York, and laugh-provoking bits of the new Daffy News go to complete this reel.

In Universal Current Events, Aviator Locklear, who has just starred in the aerial production, "The Great Air Robbery," is seen doing some of his nerve-trying stunts. The Mummies March in Philadelphia presents the sorrowful scenes of the demise of John Barleycorn. Scenes in the Philadelphia Zoo when Jack Frost pays a visit; giant snow-plows clearing the white blanket from the roads; a life-saving crew in action on the Atlantic Coast, and some aesthetic dancing by a sylvan queen at San Diego, fill this reel with topics of picturesqueness and interest.

"Hearts and Diamonds."

"Hearts and Diamonds," the current Supreme Comedy released by Robertson-Cole, is hailed as one of the best turned out by the Southern California Producing Company. The story is from the pen of W. Scott Darling and was directed by William Beauding. Katherine Lewis and James Liddy are featured.

In speaking of "Hearts and Diamonds," Mr. Beauding commented: "We are doing our very best to give clean, wholesome comedy and I believe our policy has been vindicated by the manner in which Supreme Comedies have gone over during the past three months. We have the stars and the best comedy scenario writers that money could assemble are with us."

Hall Announces "The Evil Eye" as Title of Benny Leonard's Serial

THE EVIL EYE" is announced by Frank G. Hall, and Ascher Enterprises, Inc., as the title for the fifteen episode serial production in which Benny Leonard, lightweight champion of the world, is to star. The title, suggested by the author of the serial, Roy L. McCardell, was selected from more than one hundred submitted and was chosen for its briefness, its adaptability to advertising and its melodramatic possibilities.

In charge of the production of the serial, Mr. Hall announces that Wally Van will supervise, with J. Gordon Cooper, director. Mr. Van recently completed the supervision of Hallmark's first Ben Wilson serial "The Trail of the Octopus."

Mr. Cooper, who will direct Benny Leonard, has for a number of years acted in the capacity of assistant director to Raoul Walsh, who directed some of the biggest successes on the screen.

To Take Scenes in Many Cities.

Mr. Hall announces that the actual production of the Benny Leonard serial will commence immediately following Benny Leonard's fight with Johnny Dundee in New Haven, January 16. Hallmark's Thirty-eighth Street studio will be used for the interiors, after which the company, accompanied by Supervisor Van and Director Cooper and a publicity man, will leave for the Coast, stopping off in every big city between New York and there to take exteriors. The company expects to be en route most of the winter.

In following this method of production, Mr. Hall is following a scheme probably never before attempted by the producers of a serial, and in doing so he believes that he is popularizing the serial to the advantage of all exhibitors.

Supervising Director Van is now completing arrangements for the casting of Leonard's support and expects to be able to announce the names of the supporting members within the next week. He expects to have the first episode of the serial started by the third week in January.

Miss Hallor Becomes Star of Lawrence Weber Series

DURING this year the Select exchanges will release six productions starring the well known stage actress, Edith Hallor. This announcement was made this week by Myron Selznick, head of the Selznick Pictures Corporation.

The six productions will be made by the Lawrence Weber Photoplays Company under the supervision of Bobby North, as Select releases. This is among the first announcements of the enlarged plans of Selznick enterprises made this year, and although it will be followed by additional interesting ones, it should prove of much interest to exhibitors in that it will give them a new star for the screen.

Edith Hallor has left New York to start work at the Selznick West Coast studios where the productions will be made. Miss Hallor, although practically new to the screen, has long been known as a stage star. She was at one time in the "Follies," had a prominent part in the stage production, "Experience," and later played the title role in George Ade's comedy, "Leave It to Jane." One of her recent stage successes was as co-star with William Collier in "Nothing But Lies."

The first production in which she will star is "Children of Destiny," a former stage success. The screen version of the story was adapted by Cyrus Townsend Brady and will be directed by George Irving. Work on this production has been started at the West Coast studios of Selznick and the announcement of the second of the six productions will be made within the near future.

General Wood Sees Miss Binney.

General and Mrs. Leonard Wood were recent visitors at the Essanay studios in Chicago where Constance Binney, the Realart star, is making her second picture for the producing company. In the evening the guests attended the Princess Theatre where Miss Binney is continuing an indefinite Chicago run in her stage success, "39 East."

In the party that visited the studios with General Wood and Mrs. Wood were Brig. Gen. Frank R. McCoy and Col. Halstead Dorey.

"The Garage" Is Arbuckle's Latest.

Fatty Arbuckle's newest Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "The Garage," is scheduled for release January 11 and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation vouches for the statement that it is just about a city block ahead of any previous Arbuckle picture.

Fatty plays the role of a helper in a garage, which, by the way, is also the town jail and firehouse.

Universal Announces Its Releases for January 12

UNIVERSAL releases for the week of January 12 include one special attraction, "The Triflers," a photoplay showing the fictional contrast in the lives of the middle class and the butterfly existence of others, with Edith Roberts and David Butler featured.

A Lyons-Moran one reel comedy, "Some Shimmiers"; a one-reel Okeh Komedy, "Bill's Wife," featuring Ben Wilson; Jewel, "A Baby Doll Bandit," in which Mrs. Joe Martin cavorts with Jimmy Adams while the Hon. Joe is not looking, and which has been booked by the Loew Theatres; another Century Animal Comedy, "Naughty Lions & Wild Men," and one Western, "West is Best," with Hoot Gibson and Josephine Hill present an array of laugh-provokers.

The serial is twice represented in "Hemmed In," the fourteenth episode of "The Great Radium Mystery," featuring Eileen Sedgwick, Cleo Madison and Bob Reeves, and in "The Kidnappers," the third episode of "The Lion Man," in which Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin have stellar roles. International, Hearst, New Screen Magazine and Universal Current Events news reels complete the program.

"12:10" Ties Up Broadway in Bookings.

One form of new year celebration in the Republic Distributing Corporation, in Forty-sixth street, New York, was unusual elation over the fact that Marie Doro's production, "12:10," which was directed by Herbert Brenon, has been booked by every theatre on Broadway from Fiftieth street as far north as 110th street with the exception of two.

Republic believes this to be a significant New Year's message to exhibitors.

Luck Gets New Post.

Norbert Lusk, formerly West Coast publicity director for Goldwyn, has been appointed Eastern press representative of the Thomas H. Ince Studios by Hunt Stromberg, director of publicity and advertising. He will make his headquarters in New York.

Goldwyn Obtains Screen Rights for "Milestones," a Stage Success

"MILESTONES," by Arnold Bennett and Edward Knoblock, one of the successes that lives in the annals of the theatre as a classic contribution to the English-speaking stage, has been purchased by Goldwyn Picture Corporation. It will be given an elaborate production in keeping with its importance. For a long while producers have recognized the great picture possibilities offered in "Milestones." Bids for the screen rights have been insistent and high and Goldwyn is to be congratulated on securing it.

The play created an artistic and popular sensation when it was presented by Klaw & Erlanger at the Liberty Theatre, New York, September 17, 1912. Its boldness and novelty were widely commented upon and the run at the Liberty, lasting until March 22, 1913, was one of the successes of that season. The play later visited the leading cities throughout the country and was welcomed, with equal acclaim on one and two night stands. The broad publicity which "Milestones" has received over a long period both in this country and in England, assures the interest of the public in the screen production.

Great Artistic Possibilities.

Unusual acting opportunities are afforded by the nature of the story, which contrasts three generations and offers a significant study of the clash ever in progress between the audacities of youth and the cautious of old age. It passes in rapid survey the conquering ideals of the last half-century which have resulted in many changes and greater freedom.

Some have called "Milestones" a satire, others have termed it a comedy; but as a matter of fact it is neither exclusively, for it clings too closely to life to be placed in a definite category. The urgency of love to possess what it has claimed, the ferment and struggle for liberation, the inevitable tendency for the emancipators of today to become the tyrants of tomorrow—these are the thoughts that give the play vitality.

Neilan Starts on Second Independent Production

IMMEDIATELY after completing "The River's End," which marked his initial effort as an independent producer, Marshall Neilan started work on his second personally directed feature at the Douglas Fairbanks studio in Hollywood.

While Mr. Neilan is putting in most of his evenings cutting "The River's End," he is hard at work through the day directing the second feature, which is an adaptation from a popular novel, and for which he paid a large sum of money for the screen rights. The title of the picture has not been announced. The story is a clever comedy. Marion Fairfax wrote the scenario.

Marjorie Daw, who is under a long term contract with Mr. Neilan, will have the leading feminine role, and Matt Moore, brother of Owen and Tom, will play the male lead opposite Miss Daw. A special part has been created for Wesley Barry, the 12-year-old boy star, who gained wide recognition by his performances in "Dady Long Legs," "The Unpardonable Sin" and other Marshall Neilan pictures. Others in the all-star cast are Betty Bouton, Tom Guise, Adele Farrington and Thomas Jefferson. Victor Heerman is co-directing with Mr. Neilan, and Tom Held is assisting.

Robertson-Cole Pictures Suit Sunday Showings

JEROME SAFRON, manager of the Albany, N. Y., branch office of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, has informed A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager, that Robertson-Cole productions played an important part in the Schenectady Sunday opening. Recently the common council granted permission for Sunday openings of film houses, and on the first Sunday two of the Robertson-Cole productions occupied places of prominence on the list of entertainments.

"Dangerous Waters," with William Desmond as star, was the attraction at the Happy Hour Theatre The picture went over with a bang and so successful was the attraction that return dates are being arranged

At the Albany Theatre, Sessue Hayakawa entertained capacity audiences with his work in "The Illustrious Prince." This picture, which was popular in first-run houses, has been rebooked and reports show that with the announcement that Hayakawa is to be there, the theatre displays the well-known "Standing Room Only"

Two Vitagraph Serials Under Way.

Both of Vitagraph's new serials are now well under way at the West Coast studio, the one with William Duncan as the star and the other with Joe Ryan and Jean Paige sharing the stellar honors. No name has yet been selected for the new Duncan serial, which is his first picture since his successful "Smashing Barriers," but "The Black Circle" has been chosen as the title of the Ryan-Paige serial.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has not yet decided which of the two new serials will follow "The Invisible Hand," the current serial with Antonio Moreno, which is breaking records. The decision will rest on the progress made by the separate companies.

Character Reading in Screen Magazine.

Alon Bement, professor at Columbia University, New York City, and an artist who reads character from the hands, has been engaged by the New Screen Magazine, distributed by Universal, to make a series of moving pictures in which he will reveal how character and personality are exposed by the hands. Professor Bement has a large collection of painted hands of noted men and women. Some of the most interesting of these are of Ada Sassoli, the Italian harpist, Lady Forbes-Robertson, Helen Smith Woodruff and Sarah Bernhardt.

Guy Empey Is Chauffeur, Sport and Bell Boy in "Oil," His Next Film

"OIL," Guy Empey's next picture, will come as a great surprise both to the exhibitors and photoplay patrons, according to those who have been privileged to see results of the three weeks' filming at the Paragon studio in Fort Lee. The next Empey photoplay will be presented as a big special production in not less than six reels and its nature will be totally different from either of Mr. Empey's previous screen offerings, "Over the Top" and "The Undercurrent."

With the addition of "Oil" to his repertoire, Mr. Empey will be shown to be an actor with a wide scope of versatility, since this picture is a straight American drama dealing with business life, but so punctuated with humorous action that at times it partakes of high-class comedy. Empey's role is that of a taxicab driver who blunders on to $15,000 and acts as if he were a millionaire. Subsequently the young man finds himself dead broke and is forced to secure a position as a bellboy in a large hotel.

Florence Martin Co-Star.

Florence Evelyn Martin is another one of the pleasant things of life which "Oil" has to offer. Miss Martin, who co-stars opposite Mr. Empey, is also provided with a part which at times is light and airy and gives scope to her talent for comedy. The end of the picture, however, will show her as a central figure in a bit of real drama. It is a fighting finish.

There have been added to the company Denton Vane, who is cast in the role of a slick oil stock promoter; Maggie Weston, Evelyn Sherman, Chester Bishop and Emily Fitzroy, all seasoned screen players. Kathleen McIvor, a well-known film cutter, has been added to Mr. Empey's permanent producing organization and is at present engaged in the rough cutting and assembling of the picture under the personal supervision of Director Wilfred North and Mr. Empey himself.

"The Copperhead" Helps to Commemorate Lincoln

THE unusual interest being shown in Abraham Lincoln and his life and works this year is being watched closely by officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the assistance which it is expected to contribute toward the success of "The Copperhead," starring Lionel Barrymore, which has just been finished and is to be released this month as a Paramount-Artcraft super-special. Since the war, and the subsequent increase in social unrest, leaders of affairs have been trying to turn the people's attention to Lincoln and the things he stood for, and this Lincoln's birthday is expected to see the memory of the Great Emancipator honored as never before.

In this connection, Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane said on New Year's Day: "I wish that 1920 may be a Lincoln year, a Lincoln year in which our people will learn to look at things through Lincoln's eyes—those kind, wise, steadfast, honest eyes—in which there was neither malice nor envy, but a great sympathy in a noble common sense. Why can't we make this 1920 a Lincoln year?"

As the spirit of Lincoln is one of the most moving factors in the story of "The Copperhead," it is expected that exhibitors everywhere will time their bookings of this picture for the week of Lincoln's birthday, when great public discussion of Lincoln and his work will be most widespread.

His Supply of Christmas Books Exhausted Too Soon

HARRY SUDEKUM, of the Princess and Knickerbocker, Nashville, Tenn., was one of the many exhibitors to use the Christmas Gift Admission Books suggested in this periodical last month. Twenty tickets were sold at a slight reduction, the cover being a holly design with an appropriate greeting. The idea caught on so well that the supply was exhausted before the demand was filled, and next year he will try it again with a larger supply.

Constance Talmadge in "The Virtuous Vamp" was his Christmas week attraction and he used cut-outs of this star with a legend, "A Christmas invitation from the Virtuous Vamp," to advertise the sale of the books. The idea, which was originated by George A. Bleich some years ago, has regularly cleaned up each Christmas wherever tried.

Goes Off by His Lonesome to Plot Out Future Work

R. A. WALSH, now directing for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, has completed his last picture for William Fox and has left New York City for upstate, where he will devote the next fortnight to working out production ideas with which he expects to create a new standard of super-features for Realart Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Walsh was accompanied by an assistant director and a scenario writer. When he returns to New York it is expected that he will make a complete statement of his future plans in the producing of motion pictures. The purpose of Mr. Walsh's trip, the destination of which was not named, is solely to perfect his future production plans and not to begin work on his first pictures for Mayflower.

Under the director's contract, he is to be absolutely unhampered in the making of his productions. The wide directorial opportunities which are given to Mr. Walsh by Mayflower are declared by President Morris Kohn, of Realart, to have been one of the deciding factors in the acquisition of Director Walsh's forthcoming productions.

Mr. Walsh is said to be planning to cast Miriam Cooper, star of "Evangeline," in the leading feminine role.

"Deadline at Eleven" Completed.

Corinne Griffith has completed "Deadline at Eleven," the newspaper story, which will be her Vitagraph feature to follow "Human Collateral," released this month. This is her first picture made under the direction of George Fawcett, her new director. The story was written by Ruth Byers, a newspaper woman, and adapted to the screen by Lucien Hubbard, for many years a newspaper editor.

Republic Announces Six All-Star Cast Subjects

SIX high class productions, not featuring any one star but having all-star casts, are scheduled among the unusual features of the releases for the Republic distributing exchanges during this year.

One of the six pictures, which are being made by the Weber Productions Company for Republic release, has already been completed. It is the Anna Crawford Flexner story, "The Blue Pearl," and has in its cast such well known screen personages as Edith Hallor, Faire Binney, Florence Billings, Lundsen Hare and H. Cooper Clisse. Edith Hallor is to be the star of six productions for Select release.

The Republic announcement states that each of these productions will be produced with the utmost care and that famous stage successes and stories will comprise the vehicles for the all star casts. Time and hurry is to be unknown in the producing of this group of six pictures. Only the best stories obtainable will be used and if necessary an entire year will be given over to the producing of the six pictures.

Eddie Barry in Cannibal Role.

A cannibal in polite society is the theme of the latest Christie Special comedy which will be released through independent exchanges early this month by the Christie Film Company. The picture features Eddie Barry in the role of the cannibal, the title being "Save Me, Sadie." William Beaudine directed the comedy, which was written by W. Scott Darling.

In the cast are Eddie Barry, Helen Darling, Earl Rodney, Gene Corey, Ward Caulfield, Fay Lemporte and Jack Henderson.

Looking for the Oasis.
Will Rogers has the molars taken from quarantine in Goldwyn's "Water, Water, Everywhere."

Giegerich Leaves Vitagraph.

After completing a year of educational publicity work at Vitagraph's West Coast studio, Charles J. Giegerich severed his connections with that company on January 4. Mr. Giegerich managed the campaign that put Sergt. Arthur Guy Empey before the public and made the phrase, "Over the Top" famous. He also conducted the publicity campaigns of several noted lecturers, among them Shackleton, Steffanson, Sir Douglas Mawson, the arctic and antarctic explorers, and Lieut. Pat O'Brien, the aviator who made so sensational an escape from Germany.

Californian Doughboys Help "A Regular Girl"

THE popularity of Elsie Janis among the American doughboys is being evidenced by the manner in which 15,000 members of the American Legion in San Francisco are working to make the showing of her Select picture, "A Regular Girl," at the Portola Theatre a success out of the ordinary. They are giving the engagement wide publicity and a whole fleet of airplanes lent their service to the cause, doing an aerial dance over Market street. An Elsie Janis cup was awarded the best woman waltzer at an American Legion ball held at the Auditorium, and in other ways the public interest was awakened.

The airplane stunt of advertising was also used to advantage at Fresno, recently to introduce another Select star, Elaine Hammerstein, who was featured at the Liberty Theatre in "The Country Cousin." Dodgers and tickets were distributed from the air, and the plan proved more effective than many other costly schemes of publicity.

High Price for Theatre Property.

What is believed to be a record price for moving picture theatre property was paid recently in Winnipeg, Manitoba, when $5,000 a foot was paid for the frontage on Portage Avenue for the new Regal Theatre.

Bob Bartley, Canadian Flying Ace Joins Pathé Feature Sales Force

LIEUT. BOB BARTLEY, of the Royal Flying Corps of Canada, whose toll of Germans in the war mounted above fifty and ranked him as second Canadian ace, has just been engaged by Pathe Exchange, Inc., as a special feature representative. Within a few days, announcement will be made of the territory he will cover.

Bartley has just been released from the Allied Flying Corps to which he became attached soon after his return to Canada from France. He has recently toured the United States with this aggregation of flyers, which includes some of the most famous airmen in the world. He did all sorts of stunts over many big cities, not the least daring of which was his wing-walking exhibition and his death-defying leap from one plane to another.

Bartley is a Los Angeles boy, whose desire for adventure led him to join the Canadian forces two days after Britain's declaration of war against Germany. Throughout the entire war, Bartley served where the action was warmest, and it was but a few days ago, after being in uniform since August 13, 1914, that he finally obtained his release from the British army.

Punctures Balloon with Plane.

Bartley's four brothers were killed in the war, all fighting with the British forces. He nearly lost his own life and is one of the few soldiers who has had the doubtful pleasure of reading his own death notice. In an action in Flanders, when the British were being hard pressed by the enemy Bartley lost control of his machine while engaged in combat with a Hun dirigible, manned by a crew of nine. Realizing he was about to fall, Bartley, with all the daredevil spirit characteristic of him, headed his machine straight for the blimp. He drove the nose of it through the gas bag of the German aircraft, ripped its gas tank open, and then plunged to the ground, followed by the nine men of the German craft.

His flying partner was killed and Bartley had both arms and legs broken. A gash across the stomach necessitated the taking of ninety-eight stitches. It was at this time that word was scattered broadcast that Bartley had been killed in action. It was months before he was able to move in bed, but after being discharged from the hospital he went right back for more and ran his total of victims beyond the half century mark.

Fox Buys Six Stories for Gladys Brockwell

FROM the Pacific Coast comes the announcement that William Fox has placed Barbara La Marr Deely under contract with Fox Film Corporation to write screen vehicles for Gladys Brockwell for the coming year. Mrs. Deely is to supply Miss Brockwell with six original stories, the first one to be started in production at the Hollywood studios in January.

It is further understood in connection with the signing of this contract between the author and William Fox that this first picture will mark a distinct change in the type of role essayed by the star, yet fitting perfectly her peculiar dramatic talents.

The first of the six stories has already been completed by the author. It is now known by the title, "The Mothe of His Children," and is based on an Oriental theme. This play will go into production shortly, and according to the present understanding, Edward J. Le-Saint, who is directing the star in the Charles Reade story, "White Lies," will wield the megaphone.

William Farnum Calendar Is Promised Exhibitors

ALTHOUGH there are but six William Farnum series screen productions released from the Fox studios during the calendar year, there is a Farnum production for each month published by Fox Film Corporation for 1920.

This calendar, designed and published by the advertising and publicity departments of the Fox company, is said to be one of the most attractive advertising mediums of the season. Beginning with January, each month is represented in conjunction with a character photograph of Mr. Farnum is one of his successful screen vehicles.

William Fox has published 15,000 of these calendars and they have already been shipped to every Fox exchange in the United States and Canada. From these points they are being distributed to exhibitors throughout the country either by mail or through the sales forces of the various branch offices.

This calendar is of unique design. Each month is shown separately with the various phases of the moon during that month. All of these are arranged on a single sheet of heavy coated paper nineteen by twenty-four inches in size, while above and below the center panel photograph of the star are the words "Season's Greetings and Best Wishes—William Farnum" in enlarged reproduction of the star's own handwriting.

Selznick Begins Zena Keefe Picture.

It has been announced from the offices of Myron Selznick, of Selznick Pictures, that production work has begun on "The Women God Sent," written by Sophie Irene Loeb.

The feature is to present Zena Keefe in the principal role, with Joe King opposite. The screen adaptation was made by Larry Trimble, who is directing the picture, with William Shilling assisting.

Co-incidental with the beginning of the new Zena Keefe picture, Myron Selznick announced that Owen Moore's latest, "Sooner or Later," has been completed and is on its screenward journey via the cutting room. Wesley Ruggles directed this feature.

Universal Finishes Industrial.

The industrial department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has just completed "The Candy Courtship," a five-reel picture in which Helen Weer has the leading role. It was produced under the personal supervision of Harry Levey, managing director of Universal's industrial and educational departments.

Hall to Write Moore Story.

Walter Richard Hall has been engaged by Myron Selznick to write the screen version of "Bucking the Tiger," which is to be Owen Moore's next feature under the Selznick banner.

"Bucking the Tiger," a comedy drama from the pens of May Tully and Achmed Abdullah, is also to serve as the initial stage production to go out under the Selznick management and will shortly have its premier at one of the leading Broadway theatres.

"The Valley of Tomorrow" Shows New American Policy

THE story of "The Valley of Tomorrow" points to the evolution of a race through the experience of one member of one family: a growth out of the pagan "eye for an eye" into the compassion and humanity which Christianity teaches.

This photonovel embodies Samuel S. Hutchinson's new policy: a powerful story of high moral value overshadowing the prestige of the star, with each actor chosen because of his special fitness to strengthen the main idea of the picture. One of Mr. Hutchinson's ambitions has been accomplished in the production namely, to make the "Flying A" trademark a dependable stamp of pictures which, through the sheer force of an idea and by artistic suggestion, impart the "feel" of the situation and environment without actual labels. No detail of location, acting, photography, titling, toning, or art embellishment to carry the spirit of the story, has been overlooked. At the end of the sixth reel the spectators are moved with an intensity of emotion which they do not easily put into words. They have been reading, studying, the innermost struggles of the human mind, while looking at scenes of action and beauty.

Stephen Fox was the author and scenarist. Emmett J. Flynn directed.

Warm Praise for War Film.

That the W. H. Productions Company feature, "The Lost Battalion," is meeting with unprecedented success is illustrated by the numerous telegrams, letters and critical reviews following each showing and lauding this unique production. Re-enacted by the survivors themselves of one of the bravest exploits of the American doughboy in the Argonne, this is a picture of marked originality that is being demanded by people who look daily to motion pictures for entertainment. It contains the intimate touch that the public demands in new film productions, of genuineness, originality and entertainment value.

Building Big Cafe Set for Artcraft Film.

Cabaret life in all its glory was brought back at the West Coast studio of Famous Players-Lasky the other day. The occasion was the filming of some scenes of Wallace Reid's "The Dancing Fool."

A monster cafe set was built on one of the big stages of the Lasky studio and several hundred men and women proceeded to make merry under the guidance of Sam Wood, the director. The merriest of the merrymakers, as ordered by the script, were Reid and his leading woman, Bebe Daniels.

New Contracts Place Realart Films in Twenty-two Big Eastern Theatres

TWENTY-TWO o fthe biggest picture houses in the East will give Realart features an adequate introduction to their audiences, following the contract signed last week with the Keith & Proctor and B. S. Moss Circuits. Deals were closed with E. M. Hart, booking manager for the Keith and Proctor interests, and with B. S. Moss, representing his chain, by Lester W. Adler, manager of Realart's New York exchange.

This announcement by General Sales Manager J. C. Ragland follows closely the tie-up he concluded a week ago with the Saenger chain in the South. Realart's theatre connections now embrace all of the biggest amusement circuits in the country.

"This matter of circuit contracts is one on which Realart has occasion to congratulate itself," says Mr. Ragland. "In the New York territory we have the Marcus Loew chain of twenty-six houses, the Keith and Proctor chain and the B. S. Moss circuit. This is a total of about fifty theatres.

"In Chicago we have signed Ascher Brothers, Lubliner & Trinz and Balaban & Katz with a total of some forty houses. In California we have Turner & Dahnken and Kahn & Greenfield. In the South we are represented in all three of the big circuits—E. H. Hulsey, Texas; Saenger Amusement Company, Louisiana and Mississippi, and the S. A. Lynch Enterprises.

Not a Complete List.

"Do not imagine, however, that I have given a complete list. For instance, we have many of the Stanley houses in the Philadelphia territory, the Frank Thielen theatres in Illinois, Jake Wells' Virginia chain, Jensen and Von Herberg in the Pacific Northwest, Baker and Grubel in Kansas and Missouri, J. C. Hostettler in Iowa and probably other circuits which I do not recall at this moment.

"The contract signed by Mr. Hart for the U. B. O. chain of houses is the outcome of the historic policy of the Keith and Proctor management to take on the product that has proved its value both as entertaining feature and as box office attraction. 'Soldiers of Fortune' has been on Broadway twice and each time it was a cleanup. 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room' is proving to be the type of mystery drama that is taking the popular imagination by storm today. The first two Realart superfeatures combine the two vitally necessary picture play attributes—fan popularity and money patronage."

"The Sporting Duchess" Is Nearing Completion

ALICE JOYCE and some twenty members of her supporting company who have been in New Orleans for a few weeks taking the racing scenes for Miss Joyce's next Vitagraph special production, "The Sporting Duchess," will return shortly. All the other scenes for the screen version of this Drury Lane melodrama have been made and with the completion of the race, club house and paddock scenes in New Orleans the picture will be finished. George Terwilliger directed the picture.

The Villainesses Still Pursue Him.

A quiet "sanitarium" moment from Paramount-Ring Lardner's "So This Is America!" series, directed by Arvid E. Gillstrom.

"Slaves of Pride," another of Miss Joyce's special productions, will be shown before "The Sporting Duchess." This is a modern play of social life, in which Miss Joyce is seen in the type of role which so well fits her, that of a daughter of wealthy parents. The play is founded on a popular novel and was adapted to the screen by William B. Courtney. Among others in the cast are Percy Marmont, G. V. Seyffertitz, Templer Saxe and Louise Beaudet. George Terwilliger is also the director.

Ruth Chatterton Has Not Signed with Louis Mayer

RUTH CHATTERTON will not be a Louis B. Mayer star despite a report which got into circulation to the effect that the star has been signed. Louis B. Mayer has issued a denial that he had a contract with Miss Chatterton and declared that he did not know how the story started or who reported it to various theatrical mazazines.

The article, as published concerning the alleged contract, said Miss Chatterton had been engaged for a year's work to produce six pictures for a consideration of $100,000.

Mayer admitted negotiations with several popular stars and the fact that he has built studios large enough to accommodate fifteen or twenty companies tends to show that he plans to engage a number of additional stars. Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin are the only Mayer-First National stars producing at present.

Selznick's Publicity Department Is Expanding Under Guidance of Kugel

A BROADSIDE campaign of publicity, advertising, exploitation and service to back up the exhibitors of Selznick pictures is announced this week by Sam E. Morris, general manager of the Selznick Enterprises. Each of these branches has not only been expanded and departmentized at the home office, but a chain has been thrown across the country, designed to assist materially in building up the box office value and drawing power of any picture bearing the Selznick stamp.

The building-up process in New York began with the appointment of Lee Kugel, recently of the Republic Distributing Corporation, as general publicity director, with supervision over advertising, exploitation and service. Mr. Kugel at once, besides retaining the experts attached to Select, added several skilled writers, exploitation and advertising men to his staff, and so apportioned and systematized the departments that the scope of Selznick publicity is greater now than at any time in the history of the organization.

Kugel's Experience Extensive.

Mr. Kugel has had a wide experience in general all-around publicity. Besides being business manager for Ermeti Novelli, Sir Henry Irving and Ellen Terry, he was the first man to do publicity for Nazimova, bringing her to the English speaking stage. He also has been with Sothern, Marlowe, Ada Rehan and was with Henry B. Harris during some of his greatest successes. He produced Shaw's "Widower's Houses," "Old Lady Thirty One" and "The Net," and has handled publicity for over two hundred plays that were produced on Broadway, beside circus, opera and commercial work.

Ferguson Heads Writing End.

In direct charge of the writing staff and as right hand man to Mr. Kugel is Lee S. Ferguson, for two years associate editor of "Motion Picture News" and four years on the staff of the "Billboard." Before that Mr. Ferguson was in the circulation, advertising and editorial departments of leading newspapers of the country.

Lowell Cash, who joined the Selznick staff from Universal, will do most of the writing for the trade journals. Mr. Kugel also has garnered two prolific all-around writers in Will C. Murphy and Stanley Bayer. The women's angle will be looked after by Miss Hortense Saunders and Miss Katherine Anne Porter. Miss Saunders was for nearly five years on Cleveland newspapers. Miss Porter, who has been writing feature stories and doing general all-around newspaper work, comes from the west, and her principal line will be in the studios, where she will dig up facts about productions and players.

Grimm Heads Advertising.

In connection with the general expansion of the work, Charles McClintock, an old time theatrical man, is named exploitation director and Ben H. Grimm is made advertising manager. Watt L. Parker remains in charge of press books, James G. Solomon is in charge of the service department and Randall White steps in as editor of the Motion Picture Times.

Mr. Kugel has also engaged Charles Duprez, the widely known trick photographer, whose pictures and stories have appeared in the leading magazines of the country, to supply the trade journals and magazines with photographs which will have a special appeal to the readers.

As in all departments of Selznick, cooperation in the publicity department has already begun to show results from which the exhibitors will surely profit greatly.

Who Said "Home?"

Zena Keefe, all set for Good Time Highway and a stellar career in Selznick pictures.

Virginia Faire in "Runnin' Straight."

Virginia Faire, winner of the Motion Picture Classic "Fame and Fortune" contest, is finishing her work in support of Hoot Gibson in "Runnin' Straight," in which photoplay she makes her first professional bow.

For several weeks after her arrival in California, Miss Faire was permitted to wander about the studios, imbibing the atmosphere of the film world and getting accustomed to her new surroundings.

"Runnin' Straight" is screened from the short story by Philip Hubbard and is directed by Arthur Flaven.

Springfield, Mass., Awaits $1,000,000 Fox Theatre

ANNOUNCEMENT has just been made by William Fox through A. S. Kempner, real estate representative of the Fox Theatrical Enterprises, that the Fox interests are to build in Springfield, Mass., one of the largest, handsomest and most complete theatres in New England. The structure will be erected on the site of the present Fox Theatre at Main and Hampden streets.

Representing an expenditure of $1,000,000, the new theatre will have a seating capacity of 3,500, thus being larger than most of the Broadway playhouses in New York. Besides including the site of the present playhouse, the plans for the new theatre call for a large additional plot of ground. The present entrance is to be replaced by a large lobby with marble columns. This will be specially illuminated.

The lobby and interior will be in the Italian Renaissance style, with marble pilasters and columns and vaulted ceilings. In the theatre proper will be handsome marble decorations and special lighting fixtures and color effects. There also will be a new ventilating system. The main entrance will be at No. 254 Main street. The auditorium will have a frontage on Hampden street. The new playhouse will have special sloping entrances leading from the ground direct to the balcony. It will be possible to empty the theatre within three minutes.

"The Hellion" Going Strong.

The Majestic of Louisville is about to cash in on the well-proven pulling power of this second "Flying A Special." The unusual in the plot, with a name one can't get by, seem destined to hold for some time to come the place it has made in the first run theatres. The Archer, Hatfield, Boulevard, Triangle, and Pickford of Chicago appear on the list of contracts for this super-feature.

"Our patrons are still talking about 'The Hellion,'" is the word that comes from Manager D. Kemp of the Century Theatre of Chicago. "Wish to compliment you on it and hope we can have more like it."

"Her Elephant Man" Completed.

Fox Film Corporation announces that Pearl Doles Bell's story of circus life, "Her Elephant Man," in which Shirley Mason makes her debut as a star on the Fox program, has been completed at the Hollywood studios. Scott Dunlap directed the production. It is a story of strong human appeal, with an attractive love story running through it.

Exhibitor Thanks Selznick for Help

Fred G. Wright, proprietor of the Dreamland Theatre, Linton, Indiana, recognized as one of the live wire exhibitors of the Hoosier State, has mailed to the Indianapolis branch office of Select Pictures a letter of appreciation for service rendered him when he booked "Upstairs and Down," with Olive Thomas as the star.

The letter is added to the many letters and messages of thanks which exhibitors have sent the Selznick organization from time to time in appreciation of aid forthcoming in putting over pictures to the best advantage.

Goldwyn Sends Exhibitors Convenient Booking Chart

DURING the past week Goldwyn has distributed to exhibitors a most attractive and practical booking chart. It is cut to a measurement that fits conveniently into the pocket; the paper is of durable quality, and without any wasted space ample room is allowed on the pages for all the notes that an exhibitor may wish to make in connection with the booking of pictures.

On the inside cover there is a complete calendar for 1920; facing this comes a concise statement about Goldwyn's "Promise and Performance," and then about twenty neatly prepared pages telling the exhibitor just what he is going to receive from the Goldwyn stars, Rex Beach, Booth Tarkington and the Eminent Authors. One page is devoted to each star and each author. The forthcoming productions are listed, followed by a few lines of descriptive matter.

After the production announcements there is a booking calendar marked off by weeks to cover the entire year, followed by blank pages set aside for miscellaneous notes. The closing leaves of the chart contain the Goldwyn Star Series schedule for 1918-19, a page for the listing of coming releases in which the exhibitor is interested, and a tabulation of the accessories supplied by Goldwyn in connection with every picture. The back cover presents the addresses of the twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges.

Real Forest Fire Scenes in Hodkinson Film.

One of the most terrible and destructive forest fires of recent times, that which swept the Sierra Madre and San Bernardino Mountain Ranges north and east of Los Angeles, raging unchecked for nearly two weeks last September, is seen in some of the most awesome phases in Benjamin B. Hampton's second Great Author's production, "The Sagebrusher," the photoplay of Emerson Hough's novel. The forest fire scenes which constitute one of the thrilling episodes of the special W. W. Hodkinson release, were taken in the burning area at the risk of the lives of the entire company.

Lawrence Erbach Out for Himself.

After several years in the film trade newspaper game Lawrence Erbach has resigned from Trade Review to begin business for himself. It will be the film business, of course—for there is where all the money is and Mr. Erbach has excellent health. He went with Trade Review from Motion Picture News when Lesley Mason started the newer paper.

Universal Has Many Short Subjects In Production On the West Coast

REALIZING the great public demand for one and two reel pictures of different natures to lend variety to screen entertainment, Universal City continues to devote considerable attention to that department of its production. Within the last three weeks no less than a dozen tabloid productions have been produced or started there, including serials, westerns, comedies and two-reel playlets.

Edward Kull has just finished two short western features, "Blind Chance" and "Kaintuck's Ward." Robert Burns, the well known cowboy star, is featured in both productions, and assisting him are Peggy O'Dare, formerly leading lady with Eddie Polo; Natalie Warfield, Charles Dorian and Dick LaReno. "Blind Chance" is by Philip Hubbard and William Pigott, and "Kaintuck's Ward" is from the pen of J. G. Hawkes, author of many of Bill Hart's scenarios.

Phil Rosen, the man who photographed for Universal a two-reel rural melodrama called "Roarin' Dan," from the pen of Arthur H. Gooden. "Hoot" Gibson, the popular cowboy star, is featured in this story, with dainty little Ethel Shannon, Mrs. Kruge and Leo Pattee in his support. This is a novelty in western pictures, because while it permits "Hoot" to display his riding skill it lacks the accustomed atmosphere of the ordinary cowboy story.

Contest Winner Begins Work.

Reeves Eason has finished a two-reel picture of his own creation entitled "Back from the Dead." It is described as a feature in miniature, with the plot and situations of an ordinary five-reeler condensed into 2,000 feet. Mildred Moore, Pat O'Malley, George Field, Tote DuCrow, Charles Newton and Breezy Reeves appear in this picture.

Director Eason, immediately on the completion of "Back from the Dead," started production of "Who Wins," a melodrama in two parts by DeRochfort, with a stellar cast including "Hoot" Gibson, Mildred Moore and Beatrice Domiguezs.

Virginia Faire, the winner of the recent "Fame and Fortune" contest, has started in a two-reel playlet at Universal City, called "Runnin' Straight," "Hoot" Gibson is featured in this production, with Miss Faire in the leading feminine role. Others in the cast are Ted Brook, Rhea Haines, Louis M. Wells and Captain Anderson.

Edward Sowders, who assisted Von Stroheim in the production of his latest feature, "The Devil's Passkey," is now directing a two-reel story of the plains, "A Sagebrush Gentleman," by Karl Coolidge. Charlotte Merriam, formerly leading lady with Lyons and Moran, has the principal role.

West Has New Comedy.

John West, a new addition to Universal's directorial staff, is directing a new comedy, "Miss Fortune," with Chris Rub in the leading role, supported by the statuesque beauty, Bonnie Hill, as well as by Beatrice Burnham, Merta Sterling and Captain Anderson.

Al Santell, who is supervising the comedy productions at Universal City, has in preparation a number of one and two reel farces, which will be begun within the next few days. Lyons and Moran, under their new contract, have begun work on a number of short rib ticklers and several big comedy features.

Four serials are being filmed by Universal; "The Lion Man," featuring Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin; "The Moon Riders," with Art Accord and Mildred Moore; "The Vanishing Dagger," starring Eddie Polo, and "The Dragon's Net," with Marie Walcamp, which is being produced in the Orient.

National Picture Theatres, Inc., Announces More Vice Presidents

IN further advancing the interests of National Picture Theatres, Inc., Lewis J. Selznick announces the names of six more vice-presidents of the organization and states that several of the most important theatrical circuits have contracted to present National Pictures in their theatres.

The six men will bring an added strength and influence to the organization. They include Harry M. Crandall, of the Crandall interests in Washington; Charles Olson, of Indianapolis; Hector Pasmezoglu, of St. Louis; Ike Libson, of Cincinnati; John Harris, of Pittsburgh, and Jake Wells, of Richmond.

Harry M. Crandall controls six of the leading theatres in the District of Columbia, the Metropolitan, Knickerbocker, York, Savoy, Appolo and Avenue Grand.

Charles Olson is the largest individual theatre owner in Indianapolis and is also considered one of the most energetic and successful exhibitors in that section of the country.

An Expert Picker.

Hector Pasmezoglu is not only one of the largest theatre owners in the country but his judgment in the selection of pictures is followed closely by contemporary exhibitors.

Ike Libson is another successful and leading motion picture exhibitor and is associated in the ownership of practically all the downtown theatres in Cincinnati, Columbus and Dayton.

Jake Wells practically controls all of the theatre interests in the vicinity of Richmond and has long been an exhibitor whose judgment is recognized. In addition to the men mentioned, it is announced that J. A. Ackerman, of Cincinnati, has indorsed National Picture Theatres, Inc., and has taken a franchise for his string of houses. The Miami Valley Exhibitors League, a powerful organization in Florida, has indorsed the proposition and wires are being received daily inquiring about National Pictures and how to obtain franchises.

Murray Dies of Bright's Disease.

James D. Murray, one of the pioneers of the theatre business in Canada, passed away at his residence, 180 Patterson Avenue, Ottawa, Ontario, on December 30, from Bright's disease, after an illness of seven weeks. The deceased, who was born in Ottawa fifty years ago, grew up with the theatrical business in the Canadian Capital until several years ago he became manager of the Regent Theatre. He also operated the Britannia Auditorium, at a nearby summer resort, where he introduced the combination of moving pictures and dancing. He also conducted the Winter Garden in Ottawa, where a mixed program of pictures and public dancing was staged for a number of seasons. At one time he was the president of the Theatrical Stage Employes' Union of Ottawa. He is survived by a widow and two brothers, all of whom reside in Ottawa. The funeral took place on January 1 from Blessed Sacrament Church to Notre Dame Cemetery.

"Human Collateral" Nearing Release.

"Human Collateral," Corinne Griffith's new Vitagraph feature which is now nearing release, is based on an original magazine story by Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey called "The Last Woman." Mr. Dey is the originator of the Nick Carter stories, dear to every American boy, but there is nothing of the detective in "Human Collateral." It is a modern play with the action laid in social circles. Mr. Dey, however, has written a detective play for Vitagraph. It is called "Detective Jim" and is being screened with Harry Morey in the title role.

Capital Merges with Seaboard.

The Capital Film Service has been merged with the Seaboard Film Corporation, a $100,000 organization, and offices will be opened in the near future all along the Atlantic seaboard from Boston to Atlanta. The company was formed about four years ago by W. L. White, H. J. Coleman and W. E. Lewis, all of Washington, D. C., the local offices being at 414 Mather Building.

A New York office has been opened at 130 West Forty-sixth street, and offices will shortly be opened in Baltimore and Raleigh, to be followed later by branches in Boston, Philadelphia and Atlanta.

The concern will handle Hank Mann comedies and short subjects only.

Philadelphia Engineers Like Allan Dwan Feature

THE Engineers' Club of Philadelphia has officially endorsed "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production, following a private showing of the picture at its club house. This Realart film, which was adapted from the Richard Harding Davis story of pioneer mining men, was dedicated by Allan Dwan to the civil engineers of America.

The showing of a motion picture on a non-technical subject was an innovation in the club and received mention in the newspapers. Although this tie-up was something in the nature of a social event, the expression of the membership on the merits of the Mayflower photoplay is considered valuable as coming from a body of experts and professional men of high standing.

The letter of endorsement and appreciation of the society through its secretary, H. A. Stockly, to Realart says, in part: "It won our hearts in the introduction when we learned that it was dedicated to a branch of the engineering profession. It was chronologically perfect, was abundant with the spirit of adventure and was, without a doubt, a specimen of wonderful photography The showing of a motion picture film other than of a technical nature was an innovation and was most cordially received and very much appreciated."

Go to Florida for Outdoor Scenes for Vance Story

LEAH BAIRD, Arthur F. Beck, her producer, and her company of fourteen prominent players have arrived at Tampa, Fla., to enact some of the important outdoor scenes in her forthcoming W. W. Hodkinson release, "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," by Louis Joseph Vance, under the direction of Perry Vekroff.

Much that is strenuous is demanded of Miss Baird in the Vance story. Among other daring feats the star is required to swim a half-mile in stormy waters.

Stage and screen players of nation-wide repute were selected to support Leah Baird. As her leading man the star has Hugh Thompson. To Burr McIntosh is assigned one of the outstanding roles.

Alexander Gaden has a role commensurate with his ability. Another important role is entrusted to John Webb Dillion. Ruby Hoffman is well cast in support for Miss Baird. Matilda Brundage, William Welsh and Wallace Widdecombe complete the roster of "Cynthia-of-the-Minute."

G. P. Harleman Revisits Old Haunts.

New York has changed quite a bit in the past few years, in the opinion of G. P. Harleman, Los Angeles advertising representative of Moving Picture World and manager of the Pacific Coast office of this magazine. Mr. Harleman stopped off in Chicago for a few days en route to the home office, and there he also found changes in a field he had previously covered in the interest of the World. He will remain in New York for a brief sojourn and then go back to Los Angeles, liberating A. H. Giebler long enough to allow "Rubberneck" to pay the home office a visit. Mr. Harleman has been associated with the World since the first year of its publication.

"Other Men's Shoes" To Be Released on February 1

WITH the approach of the release date of "Other Men's Shoes," the first of the series of big photoplays produced by Edgar Lewis for release by Pathe, comes numerous letters from many exhibitors to the different Pathe exchanges congratulating Pathe on securing the Lewis productions. Release date has been set for February 1.

The story deals with the lives of twin brothers. One, a parson, is a weak, gentle character, who has not the strength to fight his own battles against the unscrupulous men who pit themselves against him and seek to bring about his disgrace. The other brother is a strong, stout-hearted character, who, through the fault of another, has undergone a short term in prison.

Crauford Kent plays the dual role of the brothers. Irene Boyle makes her return to the screen after a long absence in the leading feminine role. Harold Forshay, hitherto seen in juvenile and light comedy roles, appears as the "heavy." John P. Wade is his villianous accomplice.

Others prominent in the cast are Stephen Grattain, Bobby Connelly, the "kid actor"; Edna May Spurl, Phil Sanford, Jean Armous, Stephen Radmun and Jack Shankey.

Three Superior Pictures Have Albany First-Run

THREE of Robertson-Cole's Superior Pictures were first-run attractions at the leading motion picture temples in Albany during the first three days of the week of December 29. The first offerings for Proctor's Harmanus Bleeker Hall was "The Tong Man," the Sessue Hayakawa melodrama which has been successful throughout the country for the past several weeks. Albany critics acclaimed this Chinese melodrama as the best of all the Hayakawa features.

Proctor's Leland was a popular site with the showing of "The Blue Bandanna," starring William Desmond. Like "The Tong Man," Albany critics favored the work of William Desmond in his latest Robertson-Cole release.

"Beckoning Roads," the December Robertson-Cole release, starring Bessie Barriscale, went over big at the Albany Theatre. Jerome Safron, manager of the Albany exchange, claims that the placing of three pictures in three of the leading theatres in Albany is a new record.

Pathé Opens New Boston Exchange to Handle an Increasing Business

WITH business in the New England territory increasing rapidly and steadily for months past, Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been obliged to open new quarters in Boston. An entire three-story building on Stanhope street, in the heart of the Hub film district, has been taken over and equipped as a most modern and thoroughly efficient motion picture exchange building.

Every comfort has been provided. For the convenience of exhibitors who visit Boston to book their pictures, Pathe has provided a beautiful reception room, which any exhibitor can make his headquarters during his stay in the Hub. This room is finished in oak, with a cushioned lounge built into the walls. Tables and chairs of oak complete the furnishings and give a comfortable as well as businesslike atmosphere to the room.

Fine Projection Room.

Another noteworthy feature of the new Pathe home in Boston is the projection room, which is in reality a lilliputian motion picture theatre. It is equipped in the finest taste, with every safety device known to the industry. Fifty persons can be seated at a showing, and for the further comfort of exhibitors the front row seats are built far enough away from the screen to prevent eye strain. Special attention was paid to the ventilation of this room, which is accomplished by air cooling and purifying devices. The seats are all leather cushioned.

On entering the building on Stanhope street one will find himself in a labyrinth of offices. Much of the main floor is devoted to the offices of the executives and department heads. There is an open section for the stenography department, telephone operators, information and filing departments. The woodwork is all mahogany. At one end is a fire-proof wall which separates the offices from the combustible material. Twelve vaults, meeting every requirement of the Boston laws, are used for film storage, indicating the tremendous business handled out of the office.

Part of the main floor is devoted to the bookers and cashiers section. It is well lighted with large windows. The woodwork in this section is finished in oak. Spacious quarters were also granted the salesmen's rooms, which are made most attractive by simple, yet artistic decorations. The indirect lighting system is employed throughout the building. A. M. Holab is manager of the Boston branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Pathe Rooster Blazes Forth.

The Pathe Rooster has taken a bold place among the myriad electric signs advertising motion pictures and other product along Broadway. It has just been erected atop the Greenwich Bank building on the corner of Forty-fifth street and Broadway. There the crowing rooster, wings flapping brilliantly, will be seen nightly by hundreds of thousands of persons, calling attention to the principal Pathe attractions.

Part of the sign is painted and this will be changed each month. For this month the advertising space is devoted to Harold Lloyd's new series of $100,000 two-reel comedies, of which "Bumping Into Broadway," "Captain Kidd's Kids" and "From Hand to Mouth" have already been released.

Harry Day Joins International.

Among the recent changes in local filmdom is the retirement of Harry Day from Realart's publicity department to become director of publicity and advertising for International, the Hearst film organization. Mr. Day takes with him as assistant Arthur Brillant, who retired from Famous Players-Lasky publicity department to take the job.

Kansas City Exhibitor Boosts Johnson Series

MARTIN H. FELD, manager of the big Newman Theatre in Kansas City, is one of the firm boosters of Martin Johnson's series of productions, "On the Borderland of Civilization," released by Robertson-Cole. Exhibitors in the West use the Newman Theatre as an indicator, and if a production goes over big there it is sold in that territory. For this reason, officials of Robertson-Cole believe that the letter sent to them unsolicited from Mr. Feld carries all the more weight.

The letter follows:

"After screening the first two releases of the new Martin Johnson series 'On the Borderland of Civilization,' I decided that they would fill a long-felt want on the programs at the Newman. This type of picture is not only unique and unusual, but combines all of the elements of a scenic and magazine reel. The fact that they are out of the ordinary and entirely different from any other reel release make them most desirable.

"I look forward to this single-reel release adding considerable drawing power to our regular program, and it is my opinion that Martin Johnson has given us a single-reel release of genuine merit."

George Walsh Film Begun.

William Fox's visualization of the popular novel, "Find the Woman," from the pen of Gelett Burgess, with the athletic George Walsh as the star, is under way at the Fox studio in College Point, N. Y. The picture is being directed by George Beranger. Assisting the director is Andrew Culp, while the cameraman is Charles Gilson.

Playing opposite the star is Doris Reid. Pauline Garron, who is playing in the New York stage success, "Buddies," is in the cast, which includes also L. R. Wolheim, Will Dudd, Walter Mann, Jack Raymond, Warren Cook, Sedric Ellis and Jack Hopkins.

Mrs. Sidney Drew Finishes First of "After Thirty" Comedy Series

MRS. SIDNEY DREW has just completed "The Charming Mrs. Chase," first of her series of "After Thirty" comedies, adapted from the noted stories by Julian Street, in which John Cumberland of stage and screen fame is starred. Production of the initial two-reel Drew comedy was started more than a month ago and the care and attention lavished on it is quite apparent in the finished production.

Julian Street, author of the series of stories with which Mrs. Drew is working, is one of America's famous short story writers. Two of his "After Thirty" series appeared in McClure's magazine and the three ensuing subjects ran in the Saturday Evening Post. These stories met with such popular approval that they were published in book form by the Century Company.

A Prolific Writer.

In addition to his "After Thirty" series, Mr. Street is known to literary patrons through his contributions to the American, McClure's, Saturday Evening Post, Cosmopolitan, Collier's Weekly and other big magazines. He also collaborated with Booth Tarkington in the writing of the celebrated stage play, "The Country Cousin."

Street's contribution to Collier's of a series of articles entitled "Abroad at Home" won him national repute. He visited practically every big city in the United States and in his series "reached the heart" of these cities.

The author believes in taking his characters and developing them, rather than the plot, assuming that it is the unfolding of their lives that count most. He does, however, also inject sufficient plot into his articles to warrant a maintenance of interest and suspense.

One of the first persons to see "The Charming Mrs. Chase" was Mr. Street. Immediately after its completion, he was called into conference with Mrs. Drew, and in reality, not in the mind of a press representative, expressed his hearty approval of the way Mrs. Drew handled the first of his series.

It is the intention of Mrs. Drew to make each of the two reelers Pathe will distribute contain all the elements that won renown for the Drew comedies.

Milton Schwartz Joins Louis B. Mayer Forces

MILTON H. SCHWARTZ'S love for theatricals, which clung to him through eight years' study of the law and more than ten years' practice, has drawn him into the film game. Giving up a lucrative practice in Oakland and San Francisco, Schwartz has joined the Louis B. Mayer forces at the Los Angeles studio and is now assistant to the president.

Schwartz was graduated from the University of California with the degree of B. L. in 1901. The two years following were spent in post-graduate work at Columbia. Later he obtained an LL. B. degree from Hastings College of the Law. During the time spent at the University of California, Schwartz was classmate and chum of Richard Walton Tully, playwright. For four years they wrote and produced most of the plays at U. of C. and were known as the comedy team of "Schwartz and Tully."

For three years after leaving college, Schwartz coached university players and wrote plays. At college he was active in athletics and for three years was university yell leader.

Last year he spent a number of months in New York collaborating with Tully in the preparation of a new comedy, which he has just completed. His rich legal and business experience will make him especially valuable as an executive at the Mayer studios.

Two Varieties of Grins.

Extra people in New York and California are failing to find any sunshine in the smile of "Tarzan." Gene Pollar, who plays "Tarzan," possesses a broad grin. He also has a slender smile in his bag of talents. Prior to the departure of "The Return of Tarzan" company for the west coast three weeks ago, several of the big fight scenes in the picture were photographed at the Numa Pictures Corporation's Yonkers studio.

It was among the extra men, playing Arabs, that this distinction between Pollar's grin and his smile was first made. When Pollar grinned, he waded into his fight like a big cub and as long as he used cub-tactics, he grinned. But let his adversary get too tough, and the grin quickly turned to the glint of steel and there was the slender smile that had the punch of a young giant in back of it.

Expressions of Sympathy.

Tarkington Baker, general manager of Universal City, has just received a communication from the secretary of the Smithsonian Institute enclosing copies of letters sent by the Belgian ambassador and by Secretary of State Robert Lansing, extending sympathy to the Smithsonian Institute and the families of Dr. Armstrong and William Stowell, on the death of the explorers which occurred recently in the Belgian Congo.

Dr. Armstrong headed an expedition sent out jointly by the Smithsonian Institute and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to explore Africa with the camera. William Stowell, the widely known leading man, directed the photographic end of the expedition. Both men met death when a special car in which they were riding was telescoped on a down grade by a runaway tank car.

Two Standings Support Hope Hampton.

For her screen debut, which also marks the initial photoplay made by the company named after her, Hope Hampton has assembled a cast of merit. Opposite the star is Wyndham Standing. Others in the cast for "A Modern Salome" are Agnes Ayres, Arthur Donaldson, Percy Standing and Sydney L. Mason.

Hayakawa Has Dual Lover Role in His New Release, "Beggar Prince"

AFTER a year of unbroken success, Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese screen artist, makes his 1920 debut in the Robertson-Cole forthcoming release, "The Beggar Prince." William Worthington, who directed "The Beggar Prince," is unstinted in his praise of the production and the work of the Oriental actor and declares that in it he will mount to even greater success than he achieved in "The Bottle Imp," the screen production which first boosted Hayakawa's stock.

Scoring even greater achievements than dreamed of by the producers in "The Temple of Dusk," "Bonds of Honor," "His Birthright," A Heart in Pawn," "The Courageous Coward," "His Debt," "The Man Beneath," "The Grey Horizon," "The Dragon Painter," "The Illustrious Prince" and his latest release, "The Tong Man," all sent broadcast under the Robertson-Cole banner, a new Hayakawa is born to the film world in his 1920 debut, say Worthington.

Now Seen as a Lover.

Hayakawa, who has scored in light and heavy stellar roles, is now to be seen as a lover of the times. His character impersonations which reached their greatest height in "The Tong Man" have made him known as a finished artist. His director has given him a part in which he can display his original natural make-up and portrayal of difficult roles.

In order to obtain quaint effects for "The Beggar Prince," Worthington, with the aid of Hayakawa, had erected a fisher village and a palace overlooking it. A group of classical dancers are seen in a throne room ensemble, where the prince is entertained by their dance. One of the interesting tricks of the camera is an "eclipse" obtained by the use of certain cloud effects. Another trick of the camera enables Hayakawa to surpass the ancient Danish king who tried to halt the flow of the sea and failed. He not only halts the sea but makes it flow backwards.

Hayakawa Has Dual Role.

Sessue Hayakawa, in this picture, has a dual role. He plays the part of a proud arrogant prince and of a humble, kindly fisherman.

Beatrice La Plante is the leading woman. Thelma Percy, sister of Eileen Percy and late member of the "Forever After" company under Alice Brady, has the second feminine role. Others supporting are Bert Hadley, Robert Bolder, Joseph Swickard and Buddy Post.

Another Big Publicity Tie-Up.

By a special arrangement effected by the publicity department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the mid-winter number of The Pictorial Review, on the newsstands January 15, carries a full-page portrait of Billie Burke, Paramount-Artcraft star. The portrait is in four colors and is a reproduction of an original pastel by Haskell Coffin. More than two million copies of that will be in circulation.

The circulation manager of the publication is instructing his circulation agents throughout the country to get in touch with the Famous Players-Lasky branch managers in their respective territories and to obtain from them bookings on any Billie Burke pictures on and around January 15. The circulation agents then will arrange with the 45,000 news dealers handling the magazines to display the portrait of Miss Burke on their stands or in their windows, surrounding by stills from whatever Billie Burke production the local exhibitor is showing or has in early contemplation.

Announces Madge Kennedy Release

Judging from the number of inquiries received at the home office of Goldwyn as well as at the Goldwyn exchanges, exhibitors are impatiently awaiting the release of the next Madge Kennedy picture. It is nearly six months since "Strictly Confidential," the last of Miss Kennedy's starring vehicles, was distributed to first run theatres. During that time, the Goldwyn comedienne took a well earned vacation in the East and then devoted many weeks to the production of Wallace Irwin's delightful creation, "The Blooming Angel," which is to be issued shortly.

Every comic moment is emphasized in the production and the few pathetic scenes serve only to heighten the general comedy spirit. Victor L. Schertzinger directed.

Drew Comedy Completed.

"The Charming Mrs. Chase," first of a series of Mrs. Sidney Drew's screen adaptations to be based upon Julian Street's "After Thirty," has been cut and assembled and is now at the Pathe Exchange according to a recent report from Mrs. Drew's studio.

Immediately following the finishing of the first picture of her new series Mrs. Drew began work upon the second which will be known as "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton."

File Bill for Censor Board.

A bill to establish a state board of review to pass upon all motion picture films before they are allowed to be presented to the public was filed with the clerk of the Massachusetts House of Representatives by Representative-elect John W. McCormack of Boston for M. A. O'Brien of 2 Pleasant street, Dorchester.

Metro Repairs Home Used As "Old Lady 31" Location

MANY residents of Los Angeles and Hollywood refuse to allow picture companies to take pictures about their homes for fear of having them torn up and left in a state of devastation."

Edward J. Shulter, supervisor of the exterior art at the Metro studios in Hollywood made this statement in describing the improvement of certain grounds used as location for "Old Lady 31," by Rachel Crothers, the Screen-Classics, Inc., production in which Emma Dunn is starred.

"Mistakes made by small companies in earlier days of picture-taking deserve to be forgotten, for the location conduct of responsible producers nowadays is irreproachable.

"If persons who cannot forget the old errors should travel out the San Fernando Valley and look at the work that has been done on the grounds of the Sunland Hotel, they would doubtless change their opinion.

"Before the Metro technical department started work on this setting it was a real wreck. Now, however, the grounds have been laid out with large flower gardens, shrubbery has been planted and the old building repaired so it has the appearance of a well preserved, old-fashioned home."

The building is used as the exterior of the old women's home, an important setting in the story of "Old Lady 31."

Willis & Eckels & Mack Buy Neighborhood Paper

WILLIS & ECKELS & MACK, of Chicago, has added another department to its successful and rapidly growing service station by purchasing from Jacob Smith the Interstate Film Review, a paper devoted to the interests of the exhibitors and exchangemen of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Beatrice Barrett, who has been editor of the Interstate Film Review since its inception, has been retained.

Jack Willis, Eddy Eckels and Irving Mack started in partnership with the idea of establishing a real service station for the motion picture men in Chicago and vicinity. They first offered filmcraft, adcraft and printcraft — furnishing film trailers, handling advertising and publicity campaigns for theatres and exchanges and taking care of their printing. Then they found they broadened their activities by purchasing the Central Theatre Supply Company, which enabled them to supply all accessories.

With the purchasing of the Interstate Film Review they are still further expanding by furnishing the industry in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin with a paper devoted exclusively to the interests of these three states, teeming with news of the immediate vicinity.

Goldwyn Purchases Screen Rights to "Officer 666" a Stage Success

OFFICER 666," conceded to be one of the greatest farce successes in the history of the modern stage, has been purchased by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and will be given an elaborate production in keeping with the importance of the play that scored a sensational triumph on Broadway in 1912, and has not yet exhausted its popularity as a stock and road attraction.

Goldwyn has not announced who will play the characters originally interpreted on the stage by Wallace Eddinger and George Nash. It may be surmised, however, that "Officer 666" would be an ideal starring vehicle for Tom Moore.

The fame of this melodramatic farce, as it is termed, has become country-wide since the New York premiere under the management of Cohan & Harris at the Gaiety Theatre, January 28, 1912. The engagement at the Gaiety marked a record for the season and soon additional companies were formed to visit Chicago, Boston and other large cities.

More Road Companies Formed.

These were not sufficient to cover the country adequately, however, and in 1913, Cohan & Harris organized a number of additional road companies with the result that the play in stage form is known to practically every audience in the country.

"Officer 666" was the first play by Augustin MacHugh, an actor who drew upon his actual stage experience in constructing a technically perfect rapid-action farce, combined with exciting melodrama. It happens to be exactly the type of farce that is best suited to screen presentation. The three acts are replete with action from start to finish and the clearly drawn characters are of the kind that may be clearly portrayed in motion pictures.

Another Title for Dempsey Serial.

Every week a new title is announced for the Pathe serial in which Jack Dempsey, world's champion heavyweight, is making his screen debut. First it was "Dead or Alive." This was changed to "Daredevil Durant," and now the final title is announced as "Daredevil Jack."

Dempsey has two leading women with almost equally important parts. One is Josephine Sedgwick and the other is Ruth Langston. The heavy is Hershall Mayall, a well known screen actor. The rest of the cast includes Lon Chaney, Frederick Starr, Frank Lanning, Edward Hearn, Albert Cody and Al Kaufman. W. S. Van Dyke is directing and Charles Chick is his assistant.

Prisoners See Motion Pictures.

For the first time in twenty-five years the regular routine of the Kingston, Ontario, was disturbed in order to provide a pleasant diversion for the guests, when, on December 30, a moving picture performance was conducted in the assembly hall of the prison. The films were provided by the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, and the pictures consisted of Canadian scenics. The views included interesting and picturesque spots in all parts of the Dominion. A number of the prisoners, who were doing long sentences, had never seen moving pictures before, and the presentation was received with enthusiasm.

Report Small Sells Theatres.

Ambrose Small, of Toronto, until recently owner or lessee of a score of theatres throughout Ontario, has been forced to take a complete rest from business affairs because of a breakdown. The Small circuit of theatres has had a combination policy, pictures and vaudeville being presented and accommodations being provided for road shows. The whole chain, it is declared, has been sold to the British-Canadian syndicate which has been organized under the name of Trans-Canada Theatres, Limited, with headquarters in Montreal. The sum of $2,000,000. is reported to have been paid for Mr. Small's holdings.

Realart Plans Exchange Building in Los Angeles

REALART will build a $100,000 structure in Los Angeles to house its local exchange. The acquisition by Realart of its own building, which will be modern in every detail, is cited as being in keeping with the rapid progress which this corporation has made since its inception six months ago, and as substantial indication of the company's intention to remain a permanent factor in the motion picture industry.

Oren F. Woody, Los Angeles manager for Realart, has just signed a ten-year lease on the property at 812 South Olive street for the erection of the exchange building. A large frame structure was recently removed to permit the beginning of construction on Realart's new building.

According to the plans now in hands of local contractors, Realart will have one of the best equipped exchange buildings in the country, thoroughly modern in every respect and designed with especial thought to the necessities and conveniences of exhibitors. The new structure is scheduled for completion by March 1, when Realart will leave its present location at 209 Knickerbocker Building.

Start Work on "Fighting Chance"

The opening scenes of "The Fighting Chance," Robert W. Chambers" novel, now being translated to the Paramount-Artcraft screen by a selected cast under the direction of Charles Maigne, have been made on location where the hunt, a feature of the earlier chapters of the story, has been staged. A number of notable players appear in this film, including Conrad Nagle and Anna Q. Nilsson in the leading roles, and such prominent figures as Dorothy Davenport, (Mrs. Wallace Reid) and Beatram Grassby. The scenario for the photoplay was written by Will M. Ritchey.

Mabel Normand Returns to Coast.

After a two-month's vacation in New York, Mabel Normand, the Goldwyn comedienne, has left for the Culver City studios. When she arrives on the Coast, Miss Normand will find everything in readiness for the beginning of work on her next production, which, it is announced at the Goldwyn offices, will be "The Girl With the Jazz Heart," a novelette by Robert Shannon published in Munsey's Magazine.

Oh, Beautiful!

Her Vacation Ends.

Corinne Griffith, who has been spending the Christmas holidays at Toronto, Canada, is back at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio, hard at work on "Deadline At Eleven," the newspaper story which was written especially for her by Ruth Byers. Rapid progress is being made on the picture under the the direction of Geo. Fawcett.

Meantime, Vitagraph will release another Griffith feature, "Human Collateral," based on "The Last Woman," a story by Frederic Van Renssealer Dey. This will be released late in January.

Salesman Praised for Courage.

R. E. Goldsmith, a film salesman attached to the Washington, D. C., branch of Realart Pictures Corporation, has been officially praised by the United States Railroad Administration for courageous work in a wreck on the Norfolk and Western Railroad at Walton, Va., on Dec. 18, in which five persons were killed and eleven injured.

Mr. Goldsmith, who was practically unharmed, has written a letter to W. H. Rippard, Realart manager at Washington, telling of his experiences.

Score of First-run Theatres Book Louise Glaum in Read Production

BY all odds the most noticeable thing about J. Parker Read, Jr., productions is the rapidity with which they are booked by the big first-run theatres of the largest American cities. This young producer, who divides no responsibility with other for the big pictures he makes, has so thoroughly established his standards of production and dramatic construction that his market expectently awaits the issuing of his releases through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, his distributors.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter," the biggest and newest of the Louise Glaum productions under the Read imprint, commanded "time" in the nation's biggest houses. Managing Director Edward J. Bowes, of the Capitol Theatre, New York, booked it for presentation the week of January 18; T. L. Tally booked it for a prompt first-run at Tally's, Los Angeles; W. C. Dineen, general manager of the Harry Moir theatres in Chicago, gave it a day and date American premiere at the Boston and Rose Theatres; Stillwell's Casino, Spokane, began playing it when uncertain whether the necessary accessories would arrive for the opening day, and Tom Moore, Washington's big exhibitor, opened it for a three-weeks' continuous engagement at his big Rialto.

Two Pictures in a Year.

Mr. Read, a year ago, determined to make Louise Glaum one of the great artistic and commercial successes among screen stars and to deny her nothing in stories, production and technical resources that would delay her progress. In a year he has made but two productions, "Sahara," a summer and fall season success that continues to command important bookings, and "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," by Louis Joseph Vance.

Among the first-run bookings announced for "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" during the current week are: The Blackstone, Pittsburgh; Colonial, Toledo; Strand, Nashville; Poli's Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; William Penn, Chester, Pa.; Cosmo, Gary, Ind.; Avon, Decatur, Ill.; Park, Champaign, Ill.; Empress, Ottumwa, Iowa; Victor, McKeesport, Pa.; Poli's Theatre, Scranton, Pa.

Universal Has Replica of Mosque of St. Sophia

A MASSIVE interior set has been constructed at Universal City for a single sequence of scenes in "The Beautiful Begger," the story by H. H. Van Loan now benig produced by Universal with Priscilla Dean as star and Tod Browning as director.

The set is a faithful reproduction of the interior of the mosque of St. Sophia in Constantinople and is 142 feet wide and 228 feet in length. The walls are of imitation marble and there are thirty-two huge marble pillars in four stately rows. Every detail of the famous mosque has been carried out, even to the intricate mosaic designs, bronze doors and delicate scroll work.

There are no seats in this edifice, but long prayer cushions are laid along the floor in parallel lines, and on these the Mohammedans kneel and pray. No women are permitted to enter the mosque and one of the big situations in the story rests on the entrance of Sari, played by Priscilla Dean, a beggar girl of Stamboul, into the house of worship, where witnesses a crime committed.

More than forty sets have already been constructed for this big production, which will cost upwards of $250,000, Universal claims.

Bal Masque in New Rolin Comedy.

An elaborate Bal Masque is a feature of "Slippery Slickers," the new Rolin comedy, which will be released by Pathe January 18. "Snub" Pollard is starred, with Eddie Boland appearing as the sly sleuth on the trail of the "slickers." An unusually large company, gorgeous gowns for the Masque, and a number of beautiful sets, were used.

"Fighting Cressy" Booking Fast.

The popularity of "Fighting Cressy," the Jesse D. Hampton production starring Blanche Sweet, which is released by Pathe January 11, will exceed all of the star's former pictures, according to reports coming in daily from the different Pathe Exchanges. Exhibitors who have realized the star's drawing power since her return to the screen in "A Woman of Pleasure," are looking forward to a winner with this new Pathe Special and are adding it to their lists of big picture bookings.

Famous Players' Studios in Hollywood Are Active

THIS is one of the busiest seasons that has ever been experienced at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Hollywood, Cal., as a result of the fact that during the next few weeks five or six new productions will be started and all require a geat number of special sets.

Each of the big studio stages is filled with framework, sets just begun, others in different stages of construction and still others completed and decorated. These sets will be later employed for interiors and some exteriors for forthcoming productions, including "The Round-Up," "Thou Art the Man," "The Dancin' Fool," "Held by the Enemy," "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" and "The Prince Chap."

Charles F. Eyton, general manager; Fred Kley, studio manager, and the other executives are busy every moment of the day for the present activities are, it is understood, but a fore-runner for the actual activity at the big plant in the months to come.

Serial Making Startles Staid Natives of China

MOVING picture production in the Far East is not without its humorous side. From Shanghai, China, comes a clipping of the North China Daily News relating to the progress which Marie Walcamp's party is making in the Orient.

The party, headed by Henry McRae, is filming the Universal serial, "The Dragon's Net," with Marie Walcamp doing stellar honors. The plot of the serial takes the party to Shanghai and then further afield to Peking and the Gobi desert. From there they will go to Hong Kong and Manilla and afterwards to India, where they will be engaged on a separate picture.

On the trip across the Pacific to Japan, the screen artists were a source of continual wonderment to the passengers and crew because of the thrilling stunts they were pulling off occasionally. The staid travelers were alarmed when Miss Walcamp, in evening dress, dived off the side of the ship.

In Japan a number of places were used as settings for parts of the serial. Yokohoma, Tokio and Kamakura all play parts in the picture while Miss Walcamp in the character of a pilgrim acted one episode with the great Daubutsu as an important part of the background. Even Fujiyama figures prominently in the play and scenes are taken on and about the mountain.

Bruggy Inherits Fortune With Advent of Leap Year

JACK ROOSEVELT BRUGGY, formerly director of projection for First National Exhibitors Circuit, is now one of the richest men who ever operated a projection machine. The news that he had been left a fortune by an uncle in Ireland reached him along with a cablegram from attorneys in England, advising him to sail immediately for Great Britain to attend to the details connected with administrating the estate, which, it is said, approaches the six-figure mark.

A number of offers to place Mr. Bruggy at the head of a motion picture corporation have been made, but thus far he has declined them in favor of applying for stock worth nearly $500,000 in the Greater First National Theatres.

Mr. Bruggy's acquaintance in New York City embraces practically every distributing and producing concern. He has traveled widely in England, Ireland, France, China, Egypt and South America and is considered a keen student of all phases of the motion picture industry.

Mr. Bruggy received word of the legacy about the time he was observing the advent of the New (Leap) Year. He is unmarried.

Fine for "Flu-Closing" Illegal.

Nearly a year ago George J. Schade, a Sandusky exhibitor, was fined $100 for keeping his house in operation when the City Health Director Schoepfel ordered him to close. Manager Schade carried the case through all the intermediate courts until it came to an appeal before Judge Williams who ruled that city authorities did not clothe the health director with power to make his order hold good.

Community Picture Bureau Director Back from Russia

HOWARD CONKLIN, JR., overseas director of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, has arrived from London and has brought with him many interesting sidelights on the work of the bureau in supplying films to all American soldiers overseas. During two months just prior to the evacuation of Archangel by American and Allied forces, Mr. Conklin directed motion picture showings in Russia. As chief of the staff in Archangel Mr. Conklin was responsible for keeping in circulation 150,000 feet of film a week in forty-five army camps in Russia.

Films from the bureau were shown not only to American soldiers, but also to Russian, French and British fighters in the northland, and the pictures sometimes had to be titled in Russian or French.

"Keeping films in circulation presented a problem. First, it was hard to get new stuff into Archangel on account of the uncertainty of ocean transportation. Then, we had to make our own transportation in Russia, and we called into use dog sleds and reindeers," said Mr. Conklin.

Mr. Conklin says that pictures in Russia have met with such success that, in spite of the abrupt termination of American and Allied field service, local governments are carrying out the work. "The one great effect the film has had on the Russian is making him want to live the life he sees in pictures of American communities."

Advertising for Exhibitors, the department conducted by Epes Winthrop Sargent, is full of live suggestions this week. Read it.

Exhibitors in Small Towns Find Pathé's Specials Box Office Winners

AN example which should prove convincing to the small town exhibitor that big feature productions can be shown to advantage in the small towns as well as the large cities, and swell their box office receipts at the same time, is shown by the record established by Pathe's Minneapolis branch.

Within a month's time the little town of Portland, N. D., although having a population of only 581, saw the following features and special Pathe features: "The Gay Old Dog," "The World Aflame," "The 13th Chair," "A Woman of Pleasure," "Oh Boy," "The Right to Live," "The Moonshine Trail," "Dawn," "Prince and Betty," "The Virtuous Model," "The A. B. C. of Love," "Twin Pawns," "Damsel in Distress" and "The Master Man." In Northwood, N. D., which has a population of 769, fourteen Pathe features were shown within a month's time.

The Northwood exhibitor was more than pleased with the result of his bookings and said, "I certainly believe I owe a great debt to Pathe for convincing me that bigger and better pictures would not only be a big asset from a box-office standpoint but would also increase the local interest in picture plays."

Republic to Distribute Six Enwood Films a Year

AMONG the important contracts entered into by Lewis J. Selznick, advisory director, and Briton N. Busch, president of the Republic Distributing Corporation, is one with the Enwood Feature Picture Company through O. D. Woodward, president and general manager, whereby this organization will produce and distribute through the Republic a minimum of six super features each year.

The Enwood Feature Picture Company has its studios located in Denver. The building and appliances are of a most modern character. President Woodward is scouring the motion picture field to secure the highest degree of talent possible among the directors who have made notable pictures. Mr. Woodward proposes to impose no limit on the price that he will pay for popular successful plays and novels for picturization purposes. Negotiations are under way with several stars whose work has won them preeminence. Stories and plays will be secured whose locales particularly lend themselves to production in and around Denver. The scenic opportunities offered by Colorado will be utilized to the fullest degree.

Mr. Woodward is now on his way East. Upon his arrival in New York, he will be ready to make announcements as to the personnel of his producing organization.

Resigns from Agriculture Department.

The Department of Agriculture has announced the resignation of Don Carlos Ellis, who for the last two years has been in charge of the motion picture activities of the department. Before joining the Department of Agriculture, Mr. Ellis was in charge of educational work for the United States Forest Service.

Mr. Ellis, it is understood, has resigned to accept a position as superintendent of educational work for a New York film company.

Loew to Spend $10,000,000 in Erecting or Acquiring Theatres in the South and the Middle West

ABOUT $10,000,000 will be expended by the Marcus Loew interests through the southern office in Atlanta during 1920, in building new theatres or acquiring new theatres that have recently been built in the South and Middle West. Announcement of the company's plans for 1920 was made to a correspondent for Moving Picture World by Lionel Keene, assistant southern manager.

Virtually all of the new theatres will employ the usual Loew policy, which includes late high-class feature pictures and Loew vaudeville, booked through the Southern Circuit in Atlanta. One exception will be the Palace Theatre at Memphis, which will show pictures exclusively.

Plans for the coming year, Mr. Keene said, include building operations in Memphis, Birmingham, New Orleans, Nashville, Chattanooga, Knoxville, Norfolk, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, St. Joseph, Mo., Tulsa, Okla. and Des Moines.

Two Planned for Memphis.

Two new theatres are already being constructed by the Loew interests at Birmingham. Theatres in Knoxville and Nashville are being completely remodeled, and definite plans are in progress for building new theatres in the near future at New Orleans, Chattanooga and Norfolk.

The two new theatres at Memphis are the Palace and the Metropolitan. The Palace will have a seating capacity of 2,700, and will be ready to open about January 1, 1921. It will show high-class motion pictures exclusively, with a big symphony orchestra in connection. The cost of the theatre will be about $1,500,000 and it will be one of the finest in the country.

The Metropolitan will have a seating capacity of 3,000 and will be completed by September 1, 1920. The cost is $1,500,000. It will operate on the usual Loew policy of pictures and vaudeville.

The new theatre being erected at Birmingham will be ready to open about January 1, 1921. The cost will be $500,000 and the seating capacity 2,700. No name has been selected yet, but Mr. Keene said he thought it would be called Loew's Metropolitan. Like the Metropolitan and Palace at Memphis it will be one of the finest and most up-to-date theatres in the South, showing high class feature pictures and Loew vaudeville through the Southern Circuit and exchange.

Edward A. Schiller, southern manager for Marcus Loew, recently visited Norfolk in company with Mr. Loew to inspect a site for a new theatre in that city. He announced that a lot was purchased and a new theatre would be built there in 1920.

On account of labor troubles and shortage of material the Vendome Theatre at Nashville and the Staub Theatre at Knoxville did not open on January 1 as had been planned. Both of these houses were recently purchased by the Loew interests through the southern office and are being completely remodeled. They will be ready to open about February 1, Mr. Keene stated, when they will show motion pictures for the first time in their history. They will also run the usual Loew vaudeville.

Other Announcements.

Definite announcement by other interests have also been lately made of motion picture theatres to be erected in various southern cities during the coming year.

The new Howard Theatre in Atlanta, which will be completed the early part of this year, will be one of the finest exclusive picture houses in the South. It was recently taken over by the S. A. Lynch Enterprises. The New Victory Theatre at Decatur, Ga., an Atlanta suburb, has been entirely completed, and opened for the first time on January 5. It was built by Colonel Thad S. Troy and Robert L. Troy is the manager. The seating capacity is 400.

A new theatre to cost $20,000 will be erected at Toccoa, Ga., by the Star Theatre Company. It will seat 800. The Chamber of Commerce of Raleigh, N. C., is promoting a project for a new theatre to be erected in that city. Ross Barkley and R. A. Cooper plan a $75,000 house at Statesville, N. C.

The Liberty Film Company plans a two-story theatre and office building at Cedar Grove, La. The auditorium will seat about 500. At Greenville, Mass., the People's Theatre Company will shortly erect a modern theatre and office building that will cost about $120,000. The contract has already been let.

Reports from all over the South indicate that an era of general prosperity prevails, and this, of course, is to the advantage of the theatrical interests. Business during the holiday season was better in every city than last year, in some cases attendance figures being three times as great as they were in 1918 for the corresponding period. In Atlanta and New Orleans, reports show that motion picture theatres exceeded 1918 attendance figures by about 50 per cent., while in Birmingham almost three times as much business was done. In Memphis, about double the business was reported for 1919 over 1918.

Selznick Plans to Invade South Africa

SELZNICK pictures are about to invade South Africa, it is announced, a deal having been recently closed by Louis Brock, export manager, whereby the South African Film Trust will distribute Selznick pictures in its market. The deal involves the entire star series of the Selznick studios for the coming year and is considered one of the biggest transactions in the foreign market this season.

The South African Film Trust is one of the largest and most powerful motion picture companies on that continent and the acquisition of this year's output of Selznick pictures insures the organization of the full amount of advertising and service that the attractions warrant.

New Serial Breaking Booking Records.

"The Invisible Hand," the new Antonio Moreno serial, is running true to form in breaking all previous records for bookings in Vitagraph chapter plays. More than 5,000 theatres throughout the United States and Canada are now giving weekly installments of the new serial or have contracted to do so. It has been booked in every big centre in this country and Canada.

Samuel Goldwyn Announces New Rex Beach Production

A PICTURE which won the heart of the exhibitors was Rex Beach's "The Girl from Outside." Consequently there has been a great demand for the next picture by this author. Samuel Goldwyn announces that the next release for Rex Beach will be "Going Some." This is a comedy of the Southwest from the stage success of the same name and reproduced under the direction of Harry Beaumont.

Four beautiful young women play equally good parts in "Going Some" and three comedians have a regular picnic all through the picture. Cullon Landis plays J. Wallingford Speed. His trainer is Willard Louis. Walter Hiers also figures in what promises to be one of the funniest photoplays of the year.

Hallmark Buys Grossman Feature.

Hallmark Pictures Corporation has purchased from Grossman Pictures, Inc., the American and Canadian rights for "Wits vs Wits," the first of a series of detective story features starring Marguerite Marsh. The picture was recently completed at the Grossman studios at Ithaca, N. Y., and is said to be an absorbing story of the most interesting brand of detective fiction.

Strand Houses in Greater New York To Show Zane Grey's "Desert Gold"

MOE MARK, president of the Mark-Strand enterprises, and Jack Eaton, managing director of the New York Strand, have booked for two weeks Benjamin B. Hampton's Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold," opening it in New York on January 11 and in Brooklyn at the Strand on January 18. This production was held out of the metropolitan territory for sixty days because Mr. Mark wanted it for its Broadway first-run and was congested with New York Strand bookings.

Only four of the largest cities of America remain open to book "Desert Gold," and contracts are being closed for these, making a clean sweep of first-run bookings in every one of the larger cities except one, where temporary trust domination bars good product from being presented to the public through contracts of an organization with certain companies, it is announced.

First Runs Everywhere.

On their values and power, Mr. Hampton's initial productions, Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners" and Zane Grey's "Desert Gold," have received first runs in the biggest first-run houses of the nation, even in certain cities where there was one-man domination of the city's first-run exhibition places.

First National franchise holders, with much fine product of their own, and exhibitors committeed to a sustained volume of the product of other companies, have on the merit of the Hampton productions booked them through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation with heavy patronage for stories made by a careful producer who ranks his story and its making as being of first concern, regardless of the fine stars he selects to play in them.

Among the important first runs just completed or about to begin on "Desert Gold" are the Empress, Akron; Majestic, Tulsa, Okla.; Rialto, Atlanta; Alhambra, Los Angeles; Strand, Chelsea, Mass.; Strand, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

Book Display Aids Sale of Film.

E. J. Drucker, branch manager of Hallmark Exchange, Denver, informs W. F. Rodgers, general sales manager of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, that in anticipation of the receipt of the prints of Hallmark's Famous Directors' Picture, "High Speed," screen version of the automobile racing story by Clinton H. Stagg, he has interested a Denver dry goods store in placing in its window a display of "High Speed." In exchange for this courtesy, Mr. Drucker writes that he arranged with the theatre owners to announce on their screens by slide that copies of the book could be obtained at said department store. "High Speed" is scheduled for release January 12.

Does Special Work for Selznick.

It has been announced that Louis Winters, writer of short stories and novelettes which have proven universally popular, is now engaged in special work in the Selznick scenario department. Miss Winters wrote "The Spite Bride."

More Scenario Writers for Christie.

The Christie Film Company has secured four new scenario writers for its ever-growing staff. The list includes Keene Thompson, Jack Jevne, from the Goldwyn studios; Nan Blair, writer of screen continuity of many years' experience, and Harry B. Loos, playwright and writer for humorous magazines and the father of Anita Loos.

Ince Fire Prevention Film Wins Him Honor of Chief

MOTION pictures have been a source of entertainment for a number of years, but it is only recently that they have come into their own in a practical way, for the benefit of all, and a great stride forward along this line was made by Thomas H. Ince, when he produced a picture depicting methods of fire prevention.

Mr. Ince turned his studio equipment to the task of turning out this film, and then presented it to the Fire Prevention Bureau of the Pacific, which has shown it all over the West, before Rotary Clubs, Chambers of Commerce, Boy Scouts City Councils, schools, Women's Clubs and other organizations.

The Fire Chiefs Association of the Pacific Coast, which includes chiefs from nearly every town in the three coast states, met in a convention this week, and with a unanimous vote, by acclamation, made Mr. Ince an honarary member of their organization, the first time in its history a layman has been so honored.

Recognition

Mayor Snyder of Los Angeles presents Tom Ince with badge making him honorary Coast fire chief.

Before practically the entire body of coast chiefs, Mr. Ince was made an honorary fire chief with appropriate ceremonies, presided over by Mayor Snyder of Los Angeles, who, on behalf of the Fire Chiefs, presented the famous producer with a gold badge of office set with diamonds, after which Chief Scott, of the Los Angeles Fire Department, presented him with an aluminum fire helmet.

Picking the Cast for "Pollyanna" Was Mary Pickford's Hardest Job

MARY PICKFORD found a new job and a hard one when she endeavored to cast the parts for her latest production, "Pollyanna," which will be released by United Artists on January 18. In former productions she had made suggestions as to who would play parts, but in this picture she decided that she would choose them herself, since the production was being made from one of the country's greatest "best sellers" and she wished no one to be the least bit disappointed in their ideals.

"Casting an ordinary picture properly is difficult enough," said Miss Pickford, "but when it comes to selecting players for the dramatization of a story which is known to hundreds of thousands, you are up against a mighty troublesome proposition, one that will give you many a wakeful night, if you are of the worrying kind.

"The thing that stares you in the face constantly is the realization that myriads of prospective motion picture fans know all about your character already, and with their imaginations helped out by the author's elaborate description, have made a living reality of it."

A "Veteran Juvenile."

The cast Miss Pickford finally picked was a capable and well balanced one, including some of the best established players in the industry. The juvenile lead is played by Howard Ralston, a veteran "trouper" 15 years of age. William Courtleigh, cast as Mr. Pendleton in "Pollyanna," is an actor of twenty-nine years' experience. The principal feminine role, besides Miss Pickford's part, is that of Aunt Polly, played by Katherine Griffith, one of the most capable actresses in the picture world. Mrs. Griffith has been before the public twenty-five years, eighteen years in the spoken drama and seven years in the shadow realm.

For the first time in several years, Herbert Prior again appears with Mary Pickford. He is the village doctor in "Pollyanna." Ten years ago Prior entered pictures under D. W. Griffith at the old Biograph studio, where Little Mary was then in the swaddling clothes of her fame. Later these two photoplay veterans worked together at the old Majestic studio, and again during the picturizing of "The Poor Little Rich Girl."

The other players who are participating in "Pollyanna" have all had a wide and varied experience.

Minneapolis Turned Out En Masse to See Pictures

MORE than 4,000,000 paid admissions were received at the box offices of the fifty motion picture houses in Minneapolis during 1919, according to computations made following announcement by the internal revenue department officials of the federal tax received by the offices during the year. These figures do not include the attendances at playhouses combining motion pictures and vaudeville.

Of the total government tax paid by theatres here, $250,000, representing box office receipts of $2,500,000, nearly one-third, or $77,000, came from purely motion picture houses. When the estimated population of 400,000 for Minneapolis is taken into consideration, it will be seen that the city maintained an average of attendance of nearly every, man, woman and child once a month.

The popularity of motion pictures in the city can perhaps be more appreciated when it is considered that the motion picture theatres played to more persons during the year than the combined attendance of the Metropolitan, Orpheum, Gayety, Shubert, Pantages and New Palace, representing high-class drama, vaudeville, stock, burlesque and popular combination of pictures and vaudeville. The comparison is all the more remarkable when it is realized that the theatres named above represent a large proportion of the seating capacity of the total theatrical facilities of the city.

Sybert Broke Speed Law When Road Show Failed

WHEN he was notified recently that a road show booked in for a two-day run could not appear, O. J. Sybert, of the Hippodrome, Marietta, Ohio, broke the speed laws substituting a picture show. He had been given only twenty-four hours notice of the cancellation, due to train connections, but he got in touch with the Cincinnati exchange of the First National, booked in Katherine MacDonald for a week and arranged to have paper and other material rushed to him by auto truck.

The following morning he had the town papered and huge advertisements in the local papers announcing the substitution and offering to return the money of any who desired. So thoroughly had he billed the new star that the demand for refunds was practically nothing and the box office record previously held by "The Hoodlum" was broken. Instead of a loss, through exploitation, he made a positive gain.

Is Made District Head of Publicity.

J. S. Gillespie, director of publicity in the Northwest for Universal, has been appointed district manager of publicity for the company, according to an announcement this week by Harry Rice, New York, national director of publicity for the company. Mr. Gillespie will have charge of the publicity in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska and Missouri. Under his direct control will be the Kansas City, Omaha and Des Moines offices.

Morris Now at Culver City.

For the production of his first Eminent Authors Picture, Gouvernuer Morris left New York on December 28, enroute to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City with the continuity for "The Penalty." He will spend the next six months in California, working at the Goldwyn studios in co-operation with the director and actors. "The Penalty" is the sixth production for Eminent Authors so far announced by the Goldwyn Company.

Exceptional Pictures Corporation Is Latest Ally of Robertson-Cole

ONE of the important announcements of the many which mark the beginning of the new year in the motion picture industry is that of the formation of the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, which has already completed plans for the production of several big features in the coming twelve months. At a single bound the new company leaps to a notable place in the business, for coincident with the announcement of its formation comes the news that it will be one of the producing allies of Robertson-Cole.

The first production news of the new organization indicates that the financial strength back of it is determined to drive ahead in a big way. One of the first moves was the purchase of "Grumpy," the theatrical play which netted much money for its owners on the speaking stage. Irvin Cobb's well known story, "A Smart Aleck," has also been purchased and "Chic" Sale, vaudeville and Winter Garden favorite, will make his screen debut in it.

Strong Financial Backing.

Robertson-Cole acted for the new organization in the acquisition of these early plays and in the signing of "Chic" Sale and for this reason the activities of the company were kept from public discussion. It was desired to have the company well organized before announcing it and this has now been achieved. The organization, complete in every detail, is about to start on the actual work of producing and the first Exceptional picture, "Chic" Sale in "A Smart Aleck," will be commenced within two weeks.

The financial interests backing the new enterprise have not been reveale but it is understood that Boston and New York capital is interested in addition to some of the men who backed the Martin Johnson South Sea pictures, which are among the money makers of 1919. The company is a Delaware corporation capitalized at $1,200,000. Clifford L. Lyall, vice president and treasurer of the State Street Trust Company, of Boston, is president.

Announcement will be made shortly of the executive staff. The scenario and production units have been organized and will be assembled in the California studios. For the immediate future the company will utilize leased studios.

Melford Starts His Special Production, "The Round-Up"

ACTIVE work has been started at the Lasky studio on George Melford's production of "The Round-Up," Edmund Day's stage play, which will be brought to the screen as a Paramount-Artcraft Special. The stage success of the thrilling Western drama will be surpassed, it is believed, by the Melford picture, which will have for its setting the real hills, valleys and mountains of the West.

Great interest, of course, centers in the announcement that Roscoe Arbuckle, by special arrangement with Joseph M. Schenck, will tuck his wide trouser legs into typical Western boots and play "high comedy" as the good-natured, self-sacrificing sheriff, the featured role of the play.

Another interesting feature of the production concerns Tom Forman, who plays the juvenile lead. Forman, it develops, wrote the scenario and is said to have turned out such a finished product that even professional scenarists were warm in their praise.

Mr. Melford had begun some of the scenes in which Mabel Juliene Scott, who was engaged to play the feminine lead, appears.

Beautiful Skating Scenes in "The Harvest Moon"

THOUGH Doris Kenyon, because of her Broadway theatrical engagement, can devote only part of her time to acting before the camera in her forthcoming W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Harvest Moon," from Augustus Thomas' stage play, work on the new Dietrich-Beck production is progressing rapidly at Arthur F. Beck's studios at Cliffside, N. J., under the direction of J. Searle Dawley.

Last week was one of the busiest ever in the life of Miss Kenyon. In addition to appearing nightly in the Al. Woods' play, "The Girl in the Limousine," Miss Kenyon made daily trips to Dutchess County with Theodore C. Dietrich and Director Dawley and discovered a large lake, the nearest one to New York where skating is possible.

Upon its smooth surface, Miss Kenyon and a score of members of her company disported all day long on skates before the camera. Some of the most beautiful scenes ever photographed for a picture were secured and promise to be one of the artistic features of the forthcoming production.

Among the prominent actors engaged to support Miss Kenyon are Wilfred Lytell, Earl Schenck, Marie Shotwell, Stuart Robson, Peter Lang and Grace Barton.

Garson Picks Strong Cast for "Forbidden Woman"

HARRY GARSON has again assembled a strong cast for his next Equity picture, starring Clara Kimball Young. "The Forbidden Woman" is to be the title of the second release, and supporting Clara Kimball Young are Conway Tearle, Jiguel Lanoe, Kathryn Adams, Winter Hall, Milla Davenport, Stanton Williams and Jack Mackinnon. In addition to appearing in "The Forbidden Woman," Mr. Tearle has been placed under a long term contract by Garson for future Equity films.

The production is from the book by Lenore J. Coffee, and is being given the same elaborate treatment accorded the "Eyes of Youth." Big dramatic moments, unusual situations, gorgeous gowns, magnificent sets, and new and splendid locations are to characterize the production.

Early in February has been nominated for release time, through the special franchise holders of Equity Pictures Corporation.

Famous Players Buys McCutcheon Novel.

"The City of Masks," one of the best known novels written by George Barr McCutcheon, has been purchased by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it was announced yesterday by Jesse L Lasky, vice-president in charge of production.

The book will be used as a starring vehicle for Robert Warwick, who is now working on "Thou Art the Man."

Campeau to Continue in Support of Fairbanks

FRANK CAMPEAU who has the enviable distinction of having played more villain parts than any person on the screen, and in more pictures with Douglas Fairbanks than any other player, was handed a real New Year's present by "Doug" in the form of a long term contract. Other companies had been making all kinds of bids for the services of "the bad man," so he was contracted for "a long, long time," as the athletic star put it.

Mr. Campeau's latest work is seen in "When the Clouds Roll By," Doug's second United Artists' release, in which he plays the role of "Mark Drake" and is directly responsible for many unique comedy situations. Prior to this picture he appeared in six others in which Fairbanks was star. There are few other men on the screen who are so well and favorably known for their portrayal of villain parts and certainly very few quite as capable of the same finished artistic naturalness. His work has given him the enviable reputation of being called "the beloved villain."

The lovers of the legitimate stage will always remember him for his great character, "Trampus" in "The Virginian," and the hit he scored in "Within the Law" as "Joe Garson." Many other Broadway successes are to his credit, but it has been in Fairbanks' productions during the past year that he has gained his greatest popularity.

If you have been helped by others through these pages, be honest and pay back with your own ideas. Make it fifty-fifty.

Feist Leaves On Tour of Country, To Talk Conditions With Showmen

FELIX FEIST, vice president and manager of sales for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, left New York on Monday, January 5, for a tour of the country which will last through January and February and during which he will visit the most important motion picture centers in the West, Middle West and South. His object is to talk with exhibitors, among whom he has a wide personal acquaintance, and to make a close study of conditions as they exist in various sections of the country.

Since Mr. Feist made his last tour of the Goldwyn branches, there have been many vital changes in the Goldwyn organization, due to the inclusion of powerful new financial and producing interests that have made it possible for the company to realize its highest ideals in the making of photoplays. In his trans-continental tour, Mr. Feist plans to deliver personally the Goldwyn message for the year 1920, and to explain to every exhibitor that he meets the exact nature of the policy under which pictures now are being made and distributed.

Sees Many Changes Coming.

All of Goldwyn's twenty-two exchanges are in smooth running order, so that instead of devoting his time to the details of office business Mr. Feist will be able to spend most of his time to meeting exhibitors and getting information about conditions.

Before leaving New York, the Goldwyn vice president said that the importance of the coming season, which is liable to see many changes of great moment to the industry, is recognized and that the opinion of the exhibitor is bound to carry more weight in guiding the policies of producing companies than it ever has in the past.

Many of the country's most far-sighted showmen are too busy conducting their own affairs to come to New York to talk things over, yet it is necessary to receive from them a candid expression of opinion if the executives of a producing organization are to have a thorough knowledge of the trend of feeling in the country at large.

Felix Feist.

Itinerary Announced.

Mr. Feist will get in touch with managers of theatres, large and small; he will learn just what type of pictures they are counting upon to draw business during the coming months, and if there are any defects in the present system of distribution he will be on hand to rectify them.

Following is the approximate itinerary announced by Mr. Feist: Chicago, January 6, 7, 8; St. Louis, 12, 13, 14; Kansas City, 15, 16, 17; Omaha, 18, 19, 20; Denver, 21, 22, 23; Salt Lake, 24, 25 26; Seattle, 29, 30, 31, February 1; San Francisco, 2, 3, 4, 5; Los Angeles, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10; Dallas, 13, 14, 15; New Orleans, 16, 17, 18; Atlanta, 19, 20, 21; Cincinnati, 22, 23, 24.

Dr. Stickell, Cameraman, Returns from Guatemala

DR. J. D. STICKELL arrived in New Orleans on New Year's day with the negatives of Willemsen & Co.'s recent productions in Central America. The doctor brought back a quantity of Guatemalan curios, which he has been collecting for the past month and which will be used for lobby display in the above company's future releases.

Willemsen & Co. is the producer of "Cosmopolitan" films and is highly elated over the comment of movie goers who witnessed its initial picture, "On the Trail of the Conquistadores," when it recently had a nine-day run at the Lafayette, in New Orleans.

Dr. Stickell will remain in New Orleans indefinitely as he will supervise the titling, etc., of the balance of "The Tales of the Tropics" series which Willemsen & Co. are now releasing at regular periods.

Spacious Hall Settings in "The Right of Way"

THE entire lower floor of a palatial Montreal mansion was built on one of the indoor stages at the Metro studios in Hollywood for scenes of "The Right of Way," Bert Lytell's new Screen Classics, Inc., production. Many of the scenes during the early part of this novel by Sir Gilbert Parker take place in four of the mansion's spacious rooms, which were constructed under the technical direction of Edward Shulter.

One of the most beautiful is the drawing room. It is very lofty and the walls are made of Caen stone.

At one end of the room a large archway, draped with blue velvet, opens into a small alcove, the back of which is of colored glass. Suspended from the ceiling is a large square lantern.

A doorway opens into the library, which is finished in dark oak panels. A large fireplace is in the center of one side. It is capped by a massive hood, the lower cornice of which is supported by pillars of Caen stone. On each side are tall colored windows. Spacious book cases are built into the walls and ornamental lights hang from the ceiling.

Take Over Revere Theatre.

Griffith & Mitchell, who operate the Raphael and Truxton theatres, and who are two of the coming film men in Washington, D. C., have increased their string by taking over the Revere Theatre, formerly operated by V. Day Shreve. These two young men have already made an enviable reputation for themselves with the two theatres they have been operating, and will conduct their new house along the lines which have given such satisfaction to their patrons.

"The Prince of Avenue A" Shows Bowery As It Was

THOSE of us who love O. Henry's tales of old New York are going to find a wealth of familiar scenes in the Universal Special Attraction, "The Prince of Avenue A." The Bowery, the rickety houses, the decrepit old horse-drawn street cars, the corner saloons, the lazy lamp-post loafers are all depicted in this latest vehicle for the starring of James J. Corbett.

Election Day and the Tammany Ball, given on the eve of the election, with its grand march and its clam chowder, its ancient plug hats, frock coats, checked trousers, wide soled brogans and green vests add a realistic touch of local color to the picturization of New York's old neighborhood political squabbles.

Corbett, in the role of Barry O'Connor, is known as "The Prince of Avenue A" because although he lives on that cosmopolitan thoroughfare he patronizes a Fifth avenue tailor. He is the leader of political faction. A plumber by trade, he and his father mix politics with pipes and guide the political destiny of the ward.

Complete "Let's Be Fashionable."

The final scenes of "Let's Be Fashionable," the fourth Thomas H. Ince production for Paramount-Artcraft co-starring Douglas MacLean and Doris May, have been completed, and the picture is now in the cutting room, where it is being edited.

The story, by Mildred Considine and picturized by Luther Reed, tells of the happenings of a newly married couple who move into a fashionable New York suburb, where they attempt to break through the so-called upper crust, resulting in a series of complications and situations which make for the kind of comedy made popular by this stellar team in "Twenty-Three and a Half Hours' Leave."

Mizner Wrote for Flynn.

It became known last week that the personal acquaintance of William J. Flynn, ex-chief of the United States Secret Service, and Wilson Mizner, well-known author and playwright, was instrumental in writing for production the short picture dramas to be released by the Republic organization under the title of Flynn series. These two-reel dramas were made by the Oliver Productions for Republic distribution and introduce William J. Flynn to the public through the medium of the screen. Herbert Rawlinson, well known actor, is featured in these productions, which are of the sustained-suspense type.

A one-sheet in the lobby is worth two in the bill room.

Christie Christmas Fete in Weeklies.

Three news weekly photographers, representing the International, Gaumont and Fox screen weeklies, photographed scenes of the entire Christie studio family on the beach at Venice, Cal., where in bathing suits the Christie stars frolicked on the sand around a Christmas tree. Al Christie played Santa Claus in a bathing suit and long whiskers, while Eddie Barry, as Father Time with an alarm clock, bathrobe and scythe, was hurled into the sea by a squadron of Christie girls.

Realart January Release Will Be "The Fear Market"

ALICE BRADY'S production, "The Fear Market," is announced as the first January release of Realart Pictures Corporation. Kenneth Webb was the director.

The picture was adapted by Clara Beranger from the play of the same name by Princess Troubetskoy, which had a successful run on Broadway four years ago. With a plot that was written around a society sheet blackmail scandal, the first offering of Miss Brady under Realart auspices gives the actress varied opportunity for emotional and dramatic acting and provides her with constant opportunity to display costly gowns, furs and hats.

Playing with Miss Brady is Richard Hatteras, who has also had a notable stage career with Mrs. Patrick Campbel, Ethel Barrymore and Margaret Illington, Henry Mortimer, Frank Losee, Frederick Burton, Alfred Hickman, Bradley Barker, Nora Reeck, Edith Stockton, Sara Biala, Captain Morrison, Nellie Parker and Mrs. Dealy.

Mr. Webb was assisted by his brother, Roy Webb, in the direction of the film. George Folsey was the cameraman.

Picks "Law Bringers" for Ince.

Following the announcement that Myron Selznick, of Selznick Pictures, would present through Select distribution a series of specials known as the Ralph Ince Production, in which the director will appear as star, it is announced that the first of these features will be "The Law Bringers." This is a screen adaptation of the well known novel by G. B. Lancaster, described as a strong and thrilling story of the Northwest, full of romance and love.

The leading woman to appear with Mr. Ince will be announced soon.

Although appearing in the series as star, Mr. Ince will supervise the production. A director will be engaged, i is stated, who will carry out the Ince suggestions.

Men with Degrees in Industry.

The claim that the motion picture business is overcrowded by uneducated individuals, often made, is amply refuted by statistics compiled by the Community Motion Picture Bureau. In the New York offices of the Bureau alone, among twenty-nine departmental executives, fourteen are possessors of college degrees and practically all others have had from two to six years of college education. Bachelors of arts, masters of arts, doctors of law, and doctors of philosophy are represented, and one individual carries the burden of five degrees, earned in universities on both sides of the Atlantic.

William Fox Begins the New Year With Twelve Productions in Work

WILLIAM FOX, with the opening of the new calendar year, had twelve full-sized screen productions under way, including both the eastern and the western companies.

Among the twelve are three special features which will be included in the finest screen entrtainments offered by Mr. Fox within the next quarter. First of this trio may be mentioned the superproduction of Premier Clemenceau's celebrated book and only novel, "The Strongest," under the direction of R. A. Walsh.

Next of the big specials is the five-part Sunshine Special upon which the entire Fox Sunshine Comedy personnel in Hollywood is centering its best efforts. This is something along bigger lines than anything hitherto done on the Fox comedy lot and is promised as a new departure in seashore comedies with the Sunshine widows in their sunniest moods. Fanciful costuming and bridght snappy humor are said to be features of the film, and Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of Fox Sunshine Comedies, is directing this Sunshine Deluxe himself, with the assistance of every comedy director on the lot.

A Surprise Promised.

Another of the Fox specials now in course of making in the East, is being directed by Charles J. Brabin, of "Kathleen Mavourneen" fame. Very little in the way of publicity is being issued on this picture, but the producer announces that it will bring "a big surprise to the screen." It is an all-star production, adapted from the work of a well-known author, and will introduce, it is understood, many startling effects and novelties.

William Farnum, who has just completed "Heart Strings," has started work upon a new vehicle as yet unnamed. The production is said to be of a lavish nature and the story gives the magnetic star the role of a romantic adventurer. J. Gordon Edwards, who has directed Mr. Farnum in all his recent successes, is with the star again in the forthcoming play.

The remainder of the twelve pictures being made in one or another of the Fox studios include "The White Moll," adapted to the screen by E. Lloyd Sheldon from Frank L. Packard's story, in which Pearl White makes her debut under William Fox management; "Find the Woman," with George Walsh as star; "The Penalty," an adaptation of a well known stage success, with Madlaine Traverse in the stellar role; Charles Reade's "White Lies," starring Gladys Brockwell; Shirley Mason in her first Fox vehicle, "Her Elephant Man," and William Russell in the Harold Titus story, "Shod with Fire." Buck Jones is working on another Harold Titus western story, "The Last Straw," and Tom Mix completed the first of his six H. H. Van Loan stories, "3 Gold Coins," just after the new year opened.

Screening Down the Lid.

Not satisfied with the fact that the Sunday lid is clamped tight in South Carolina, the churches of Columbia are circulating petitions seeking to have it still more tightly clamped. Sunday blue laws prevail in South Carolina, as they do in Georgia, and there has been a suggestion that churches of the latter state will follow in the footsteps of those in South Carolina if the move succeeds. No theatres are permitted to open on Sunday either in South Carolina or Georgia.

"Street Called Straight" Is Next Eminent Authors Film

BASIL KING'S story "The Street Called Straight" is the photoplay that Goldwyn will release as the second Eminent Authors picture. Mr. King spent six weeks at the Goldwyn studios working with Wallace Worsley, the director of the production, and the result is a masterpiece of the screen.

The clash of four strong wills in a situation which changes the course of three lives is presented in a photoplay that has both power and quality. It is a story of sacrifice and goodwill.

Naomi Childers plays the part of the heroine. Milton Sills, Irene Rich and W. Lawson Butt are members of the distinguished cast which includes Sydney Ainsworth, Charles Clary and Lydia Yeamans Titus.

Gayety Comedy Releases for January.

Four new Gayety Comedies are released this month through independent exchanges. Three of the comedies feature George Ovey, with Lillian Biron and the Gayety Girls, and one features William Bletcher and Vera Reynolds.

"Ladies Must Dance," introducing George Ovey as an amateur dancing master, was directed by James Clemens.

Craig Hutchinson directed the next two Gayety Comedies, "Bounced," with George Gvey as an amateur dancing Saphead's Sacrifice," with Bletcher and Vera Reynolds; while Clemens directed the fourth January release, which is entitled "Ruined by Love," featuring George Ovey, with Miss Lillian Biron.

New York State Exhibitors' League Will Watch Legislation in Albany

THE executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the State of New York held an important session on January 2 at the Iroquois Hotel, Buffalo. The meeting of the committee was preceded by an informal luncheon at which prevailed the same unity of spirit which was afterward reflected at the business meeting.

There was a very full attendance, the following members being present: Jules Michaels, Buffalo, chairman; J. N. Schwartzwalder, Auburn; Emmet Cornell, Syracuse; Mr. Kress, Buffalo; Walter Hayes, Buffalo, W. H. Linton, Utica; Ira Mosher, Buffalo; Charles Hayman, Niagara Falls; Irving Salyerds, Rochester; Dave Cohen, Binghamton; Morris Silverman, Schenectady; William Calihan, Rochester; Joseph Schuchert, Buffalo; Wm. A. Dillon, Ithaca; A. A. Fennevesey, Rochester; Harold Franklin, Buffalo; Sydney S. Cohen, Samuel I. Berman and Charles L. O'Reilly, of New York City.

The meeting was called to order by the chairman, Jules Michaels, of the Academy Theatre, Buffalo. Reports were received on the successful Sunday campaign in Schenectady and on the question of screen advertising.

The report on the latter subject was made by Charles L. O'Reilly. He went into the subject exhaustively and was listened to with great interest. The two reports were approved unanimously.

It was decided to start without delay a campaign for either the repeal or the modification of the five per cent. film rental tax. The league will at once get into touch with other states and in conjunction with them get to work on the proposition.

Executive Secretary Berman reported on visits to Washington and on the failure to get even the slightest relief or concession from Congress. He also reported on his visit to Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, on the question of aiding in the Americanization work which is to be undertaken in response to a joint resolution of the House and Senate Committee on Education. Mr. Berman's report was adopted unanimously.

Committee Goes to Albany.

The question of legislation at the coming session of the state legislature received much consideration at the hands of the executive committee. A special committee consisting of Harold Franklin, Buffalo, chairman; Charles Hayman, Niagara Falls; W. H. Linton, Utica; Irving Salyerds, Rochester; Emmet Cornell, Syracuse; Fred Elliot, Albany; J. Schwartzwalder, Auburn; Henry Manus, Brooklyn; Sam Sheer, Queens, and J. J. Wittman, of Bronx, in conjunction with the officers of the league, were designated to meet at Albany to discuss the legislative program as affecting the exhibitors of the State of New York.

The men who had proven themselves friends of the motion picture exhibitors and the vast public which is served by the exhibitors were by no means forgotten at this meeting. A resolution of thanks to Senator (now Surrogate) Foley was passed unanimously for his splendid co-operation in the matter of the Sunday Bill Enactment. On motion of Mr. Franklin, Mr. Charles L. O'Reilly was appointed a committee of one to call upon the Surrogate and present the committee's engrossed resolutions to him.

A telegram of thanks and of congratulations was also sent to Mayor Lunn, of Schenectady, who in the recent mayoralty campaign in that city took such a fearless and outspoken stand in favor of Sunday shows.

Millard Webb to Manage Mayer's Western Studio

MILLARD L. F. WEBB, widely known in filmland for his ability as an executive and assistant director, has been named manager of the new $250,000 studio of Louis B. Mayer, 3800 Mission road, Los Angeles.

Webb's career in the pictures has been phenomenal. Five years ago he started in as property man and assistant director with the Franklin brothers, in the making of "kid pictures." After two and a half years he went with Fox, where he remained nearly a year. Webb then went to the Douglas Fairbanks studio as co-director with Joseph Henabery in the production of "The Man from Painted Post." He later assisted John Emerson in the making of "Reaching for the Moon."

After assisting Tod Browning in Edith Storey's Metro productions, he went into the acting end of the game, playing the juvenile lead with Margarita Fischer, star of the American Film Company. On the opening of the Mayer studios, Webb became assistant director with Joseph Henabery in the directing of Mildred Harris Chaplin.

Equity's Plan of Exploitation Brings Big Results to Showmen

ENTERTAINMENT is entertainment and exploitation exploitation, but when the two are allied they form a strong combination. Equity Pictures Corporation, one of the new producing and distributing concerns, plans to do its advertising and exploitation not only in trade papers, but also directly in small towns, and in only such ways as will couple the money spent with the theatre at which one of Equity's productions is announced for presentation.

Harry Reichenbach, head of Equity's exploitation department, has been struggling for years to experiment with a pet idea—viz., to follow a print of some subject, from town to town and use in each succeeding place, the better elements of exploitation from the preceding towns. And after eight weeks of this form of absolutely direct co-operation, the following financial results are announced as having been achieved in various places.

Chicago, having been the first to open, received initial attention from Equity. The first Equity picture, "Eyes of Youth," broke records in the Windy City. Then came Louisville, where the Big Feature Rights Corporation got behind the preliminary work with a zest, and the result was that Christmas week, one of the real bad weeks of the year, was converted into a record breaker at the Strand Theatre and the picture, "Eyes of Youth," is being returned to the same house for an additional run.

Pittsburg, where the Grand and Rowland & Clarke's Liberty theatres ran the film day and date.

Worth remarking upon preliminary to the Pittsburg showing was the daily paper results secured by Mr. Connelly, of the Grand, and Samuel Sivitz, of the Clarke & Rowland offices. On Sunday January 4, the five newspapers published that day in Pittsburg carried from five to eight stories each on the engagement, and from three to five pictures of Miss Young or scenes from the play.

The Woodlawn Theatre at Chicago, the first residence house to play the picture following the loop engagement, was forced to play midnight shows to take care of the hold-out crowds.

At Atlanta, where "Eyes of Youth" opened for an indefinite engagement at the Criterion Theatre, more people attended the opening day than during any one day in its history, and the second day fell off less than two per cent. Reports from Atlanta, as the week goes, state that the house record will be broken by almost fifty per cent.

At Cleveland, after playing two houses simultaneously, in the heart of the city, "Eyes of Youth" was brought back to one of the houses for a repeat booking, then played another house directly across the street.

Paul Gusdanovic, who controls the house at which the Cleveland repeat was played, is considering even a fourth return to one of his houses.

The policy of exploitation and advertising is to continue and Reichenbach will leave for Minneapolis, St. Paul, New Orleans, Washington and other key cities after February 1 to continue this direct to the theatre co-operation.

"Natives from Surrounding Tribes Would Come Down to See the Queer Whites."

Martin Johnson writes us that his new pictures on "Wild Men of Malekula" will surpass all his others. Mr. Johnson found a race of Monkey People, living in the jungle like animals.

Goldwyn Praises Creative Ability Of His Assemblage of Directors

RECOGNIZING the director as the great factor in bringing a story to the screen, and realizing that the strongest plays ever written and the most inspired acting may be ruined by poor direction, Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and Abraham Lehr, vice president, located at the Culver City studios, have enrolled what they consider the greatest force of directors ever placed under contract by any one company.

The work of building up the organization of directors who will picturize the famous plays and novels secured by Goldwyn has been conducted quietly. One by one, men who have risen to the top of their profession have been added to the Goldwyn roster. All of them have proven their worth before they became connected with the organization, and now they are being given every encouragement to develop individual genius in the making of the greatest screen stories that creative brains and technical efficiency can produce.

Attesting to the quality of the minds behind Goldwyn pictures today are such directors as Reginald Barker, Frank Lloyd, Clarence Badger, Victor Schertzinger, William Parke, Wallace Worsley, T. Hayes Hunter, Tom Mills, Harry Beaumont, E. Mason Hopper and Paul Scardon. Every member of this group has won a reputation either as a director of drama or comedy.

Universal Provides Laughs.

With the booking of "Naughty Lions and Wild Men" at the Capitol Theatre, New York, and "A Baby Doll Bandit," featuring Mrs. Joe Martin, on the Loew Circuit, the Universal-Century comedies continue to play an important part in supplying New Yorkers with laughs.

The popularity of these pictures is causing a steadily increasing demand for them from all parts of the country. When Loew booked the monkey picture he made provision to take the remainder of the series to be produced.

The next picture in the lion releases will be "Tiger Rose and Dandy Lions."

Three American Films Due for Early Release

THE next special feature about to be distributed by the American Film Company is "The Valley of Tomorrow" which has just been given its first press and trade showings. Stephen Fox was both the writer of the script and the scenarist. A talented camera in the hands of George Rizard did full justice to the scenic grandeur of Lake Tahoe where the company spent several weeks. William Russell takes the leading part, supported by Mary Thurman, Harvey Clark, Pauline Curley, Frank Brownlee, Fred M. Malatesta, Frank Clark, Jeffrey Sloan and Lewis King. Emmett J. Flynn was the director.

Following "The Valley of Tomorrow," a new "Flying A" Special—unnamed as yet—will be put on the market. It is a romance by Daniel F. Whitcomb. The cast includes Margarita Fisher, Harry Hilliard, Beatrice Van, Harvey Clark, George Periolat, Neil Hardin and Mary Talbot. Artistic titles and effective art work, a matter to which the American gives particular care, are about completed.

The coast print of "The Honey Bee," by Samuel Merwin, has just been shipped from Santa Barbara to the American's Chicago laboratory. With Madame Marguerita Sylva, the famous prima donna, in the leading role, this de luxe picture is expected to be a great success. Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, put in long hours at the Santa Barbara studio during the filming of "The Honey Bee," while Rupert Julian, widely known as the director of "The Beast of Berlin" and other big photoplays, wielded the megaphone.

Completes Studio Scenes.

Harry T. Morey has completed all the studio scenes for "Detective Jim" and is waiting for the weather to moderate before starting on the outside locations. The greater part of the action in the play takes place in the open, and Mr. Morey will have at least a month's work on Long Island and nearby New Jersey points. Edwin Hollywood is directing the picture.

Fox's "Evangeline" and "Checkers" Still Go Big

ACCORDING to reports received at the executive offices of Fox Film Corporation, both "Checkers" and "Evangeline" still continue to crowd motion picture theatres in all parts of the land.

E. M. Tracy, who manages the Empire Theatre at Storm Lake, Iowa, of which he and W. S. Skiff are owners, extends his appreciation of the money-making value of "Checkers" in a letter which he sent to Mr. Fox after playing the big racing melodrama for two days —a good stand for his house. The Nemo Theatre, in Johnstown, Pa., under the management of L. W. Barclay, did an equally exceptional business with "Checkers" for four days, and both Mr. Barclay and George Banagotacos, director-general of the Nemo, have joined the ranks of "Checkers" enthusiasts.

In Moberly, Mo., the Grand Theatre presents only the most distinguished screen attractions. J. Earl Hayes, manager, in a letter to Mr. Fox, says: "'Evangeline' is a wonder—in my opinion one of the sweetest, most beautiful film productions I have ever seen."

The Ottawa Local has jurisdiction over the towns throughout the Ottawa Valley, and quite a number of its members are found in the outside theatres.

Select Artists for "The Hope."

Jack Mulhall, Marguerite de la Motte and Ruth Stonehouse have been engaged by Metro for principal roles in "The Hope," the great melodrama of England, India and Italy that is to be made a Metro Screen Classic production. With Frank Elliott—last week chosen to play Major Hector Grant, the "heavy"—these talented screen players will head the all-star cast that will picturize Cecil Raleigh's and Henry Hamilton's Drury Lane thriller.

Skirboll Buys Rights.

Equity Pictures Corporation announces the purchase by Joseph Skirboll, First National Exhibitors exchange, Pittsburgh, of the rights to Harry Garson's special production, "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives," starring House Peters, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The Rocky Mountain States including Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico and Utah, have been bought by Walter and Sol Lichtenstein, of the Equity Distributing Company, Denver.

Price to Visit West.

C. B. Price, president of the C. B. Price Co., Inc., will leave for the west the latter part of January to interview state rights buyers, and will spend some time at Los Angeles meeting friends and closing negotiations for several features he has under consideration.

Mildred Harris Completing New Play.

Mildred Harris Chaplin, who is starring in "Polly of the Storm Country," a Grace Miller White story written especially for her, will complete the picture during the coming week. Cutting of the picture will be finished within a day or so after the completion of the filming as Director Arthur Rosson has cut the film during the progress of production.

Moore's Exploitation Wins for "The Capitol"

SCORE one for a powerful social and political melodrama in which Leah Baird is the star and score two for the enthusiastic, human and local way in which the exhibitor smashed this picture over to a success in his theatre. The picture is Augustus Thomas' screen drama, "The Capitol," filmed from one of his stage successes, and the exhibitor is Tom Moore, owner of a chain of first-run houses at the national capital.

A fine example of the Tom Moore analysis of a motion picture and its possibilities occurred. "The Capitol" was the all-week attraction at his Strand Theatre. It is a story of love and political intrigue and many of its scenes were photographed in Washington in and around the Government buildings, with scenes of particular beauty taken in the capital grounds and in the parks.

How He Did It.

The Tom Moore exploitation was designed to make the people of the entire city feel that they were actors in the picture. In all the newspapers of Washington the following panel appeared conspicuously emphasized in half page space: "'The Capitol' carries a double interest for Washingtonians, for, aside from its beauty and excellent cast, it depicts a story of political and social life in our city and the greater part of its tense and thrilling scenes were filmed right on our own doorstep."

Backing up Mr. Moore, Miss Baird stopped off in Washington and appeared at the Strand on New Year's night and remained over till the following day to appear at the earlier performances on that day before leaving for Florida, where she is at work on her next picture for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," from the popular novel by Louis Joseph Vance.

Becker Visits New York.

Bruno J. Becker, general manager of the Model Comedy Company, producers of the Gale Henry comedies, left Hollywood recently to attend a meeting of the Bulls Eye Film Corporation officials in New York, which concern is handling his releases. Many important matters relative to the company's future activity are expected to be announced by him following the meeting. On his return to the coast General Manager Becker plans to visit film exchanges west of Chicago that are handling the Gale Henry comedies.

"Help" Is Title of New Gale Comedy.

"Help" is the title of a new two-reel comedy featuring Gale Henry, work upon which started this week at the Bulls Eye studio in Hollywood. The picture deals with a family's troubles in keeping a housekeeper. Tom Gibson is directing, while the comedienne's support includes Billy Franey, Hap H. Ward, Blanche White and George Jeske.

Van Meter in "Judah."

Harry Van Meter has been engaged to play Tozer in the Metro-Screen Classic production of "Judah," the drama by Henry Arthur Jones in which May Allison will be starred. Tozer, whose alias is Majalah, is a clever faker who poses as a Hindu healer and thus fleeces the rich of their money.

Hobart Henley Will Furnish Purpose and Action to Screen

EVERY effort is being made to make Hobart Henley Productions truthful and artistic portrayals of the stories upon which they are based," says Mr. Henley. "My present plan is to produce four pictures each year and I feel that by limiting myself in this respect I shall gain by giving plenty of time ot each individual story.

"The success which 'The Gay Old Dog' is now enjoying throughout the country is but the beginning of what I intend to do. Its popularity, however, is gratifying for it served to prove that my plan to produce subjects of a psychological nature is not without its value.

"To be a success a story must have action equivalent to its plot. I mean there must be sufficient action, not merely to carry the story but to add human, intimate touches that make productions real and not just movies. Action is the one thing that has kept the movies alive. I have no intention of trying to produce pictures without it—but I do want to see real, living things produced without being distorted."

Big Theatre for Des Moines.

Plans for the erection of a million-dollar theatre and office building in Des Moines this summer are announced by a group of business men headed by Abe Frankle, owner of the Rialto, Majestic and Casino theatres in Des Moines, and two smaller Iowa houses. The men have secured a ninety-nine-year lease on the corner, 88 by 144 feet, at Locust and Eighth streets, at an annual rental of $20,000.

The site is now occupied by the Majestic and Royal theatres and is directly across Locust street from the Rialto. Other men in the deal are Sol Panor, president of Panor Shoe Stores, Inc., and Ben F., Harry and Alfred Cohen, of the Cohen Lumber Company.

Le Vino Scenarioizing London Novel.

Albert Shelby Le Vino of the Screen Classics, Inc, scenario department, at the Metro studios in Hollywood, has started work on the screen adaptation of "Burning Daylight," by Jack London, which will be Mitchell Lewis's first Metro production for C. E. Shurtleff, Inc.

"Burning Daylight" was first published as a serial in the New York Herald and later appeared in book form and ran through twelve editions. In the picturization of the novel Mitchell Lewis will have the part of Elam Harrish or "Burning Daylight," as he is nicknamed. It is a story with most of the scenes laid in far Northern Alaska and New York City.

Select Cast for Next Williams Picture.

Earle Williams' supporting cast for "Capt. Swift," his next Vitagraph feature, has been completed. It will include Florence Dixon, who will play opposite Mr. Williams, Alice Calhoun, Adelaide Prince, Edward Martindale, Downing Clarke, Barry Baxter, James O'Neill and Herbert Pattee.

"Capt. Swift" is an adaptation by Lucien Hubbard from the drama of the same name by C. Haddon Chambers, and is being directed by Tom Terriss. It was very successful in London when List "Edgar" Comedies for March.

Director E. Mason Hopper has completed the first two-reel episode in the series of Booth Tarkington "Edgar" Comedies being made by Goldwyn at the Culver City studios and the film is now being cut and edited. Most of the titles have been supplied by the author himself, who has adhered to the inimitable style familiar to the readers of the Penrod and Billy Baxter stories. It is announced at the Goldwyn offices that distribution of the Edgar pictures will be started about the first of March. Johnny Jones has the title role.

Morey Begins Another.

"The Birth of a Soul," another of Vitagraph's features in which Harry T. Morey appears as a rugged mountaineer, will be one of the January releases. He has a dual role, both of the characters belonging to the mountains in the South where moonshine whiskey is more than an incident and feuds not altogether a thing of the past. Mr. Morey's next feature, on which he is now at work, will be called "Detective Jim." It was written especially for him by Frederick Van Rensselaer Dey, author of the Nick Carter detective stories.

Hickman Finishes "Just A Wife.

News has reached New York from the Coast to the effect that Howard Hickman, who has been directing "Just A Wife" for distribution as a National Picture Theatres, Inc., release, finished shooting the last scenes. The announcement carried the further information that the production is now being assembled and cut and will probably be ready for shipment East in about two weeks. This would mean that "Just A Wife" should reach the Seventh avenue offices of National in New York about January 12.

Metropolitan Opera House Scene in Goldwyn Picture

IN "The Paliser Case," one of the early 1920 Goldwyn releases, the diamond horseshoe of the Metropolitan Opera House has been transported to the screen. The huge semi-circular promenade where New York's greatly augmented "400" stroll between the acts of the opera is the scene of a murder in this photoplay version of Edgar Saltus's recent novel.

The story is a powerful melodrama, in which each of the principal characters confesses to murder. The early scenes in the photoplay show that each of the confessed murderers had a motive for committing the crime; while the later scenes disclose the efforts of the police department to prove that neither of them was the murderer.

Pauline Frederick has a role demanding an infinite variety of emotional expression. The leading man for Miss Frederick is Albert Roscoe. Other players in the cast are Kate Lester, Hazel Brennan, James Neil, Warburton Gamble, Carrie Lee Ward and Alec Francis.

How Radicals Should Be Deported.

In Pathe Review No. 35, released January 11, Dr. Ditmars illustrates in his animal study, "A Few Hints on Deportation," the proper manner in which all radicals should be treated. The New York Zoo recently shipped some bears overseas—a straight business deal, with a foreign zoo and strenuous methods of capturing the four-footed beasts and caging them would give most appropriate hints for loading future "Soviet Arks."

Universal Men in San Francisco.

J. McFadden, traveling auditor for the Universal Film Exchange, spent the holidays in San Francisco going over the books of the branch. R. R. Gardner, traveling auditor for the International Film Service, with headquarters in New York, was also here checking up the "Big Three" news reels with Universal.

Big Exploitation and Advertising Aids on Mary Pickford's "Pollyanna"

"POLLYANNA," Mary Pickford's first production for United Artists Corporation release on January 18, lends itself to a wide range of exploitation, advertising and publicity, and the "Big Four" certainly has taken advantage of every angle in its exploitation folders which have just been issued to exhibitors booking the production.

There are five complete folders contained in the large envelope, one on posters, lobby display, slides, window cards and special outdoor accessories; another on program, advertising and exploitation suggestion; another on newspaper advertising, a fourth on newspaper cuts and an eight page publicity folder of unusual ideas and suggestions.

Everything issued in connection with this campaign on "Pollyanna" is complete in its every detail, and so arranged that the material can be handled by the theatre manager or publicity man with the greatest dispatch and efficiency.

In the publicity folder many of the stories are printed four times, it being explained that the preparation of these identical sets of publicity stories is to save time for the theatre staff, making it possible for the publicity man to simply clip as many of the stories as there are newspapers in the community, fill in the blank spaces with the name of the theatre and the date of the run and hand them to the newspaper editors. Besides, there are a large number of stories, all different, that can be used as exclusive articles. A number of stories are also printed to be used in connection with the photographs that are issued with the picture.

How to Get Aid of Merchants.

The folder with program, advertising and exploitation suggestions is an eight page affair and each page is filled with money-getting helps. The first page tells of the picture's general possibilities together with a complete synopsis of the story; the second page is devoted to what Dr. Frank Crane, the well-known philosopher and statesman thinks of "Pollyanna" together with a reproduction of his editorial of "Pollyanna," permission for the use of which Dr. Crane has specially granted Miss Pickford, and from which a very attractive and original three-sheet has been made by United Artists. Page three is devoted to how and why John Wanamaker, one of the country's leading merchants, boosted "Pollyanna," with suggestions showing how exhibitors in their respective communities can get their leading merchants to do the same thing.

Publishers to Co-operate.

What the ministers of the country have done to bring the "Pollyanna" philosophy to the attention of their congregations is given a portion of page three which is also devoted to the wonderful "Pollyanna" message delivered by Leigh Mitchell Hodges, the well known "Optimist" of "The North American" of Philadelphia, with suggestions for the use of similar material.

The publishers of the book, "Pollyanna," are co-operating with the advertising and publicity departments of United Artists in a concentrated exploitation campaign on the book and the picture. They have communicated with their thousands of dealers throughout the States and advised them to get in touch immediately with the theatre managers who have booked the picture.

One complete folder of eight pages is devoted to advertising cuts of the production, prepared lay-outs in one, two and three column sizes, of which cuts and mats are supplied. A feature in this folder are the reproductions of artists drawings and borders which exhibitors can use in connection with their lay-outs for special advertising.

Another folder of four pages represents the exact sizes of all of the newspaper star cuts and the newspaper scene cuts for which mats are also issued. Scattered through these pages are many suggestions also for copy for advertisements to be used in connection with the cuts. The other folder has artistic lay-outs of the twenty-four sheet, the six sheet, two three-sheets and two one-sheets; two 22 by 28's, eight 11 by 14's and ten 8 by 10 lobby display.

This prepared publicity should greatly help showmen in playing the film.

New Capitol Comedy Announced.

Goldwyn announces for release on January 25 the newest Capitol Comedy, "Two Dollar, Please." Neal Burns, who has recently joined the Capitol Comedy forces, is featured and Marie Arline, the diminutive comedienne, plays the leading feminine role.

Sidelights and Reflections

TWO pictures opening in one week on Broadway is the unique record of Norma Talmadge "A Daughter of Two Worlds," at the Strand, and "She Loves and Lies," at the Rivoli, were shown the week of January 4. Her initial First National release proved an excellent picture from every point of view, and the Select release permits Miss Talmadge to exhibit her versatility in a part that is principally light comedy.

There have been a number of shipwrecks in pictures this season and the directors have set a new standard for such scenes. A slip of detail in one of the wreck scenes brought forth a humorous remark from one spectator who was familiar with seamanship:

"No wonder the captain lost his ship: he's being blown onto a lee shore in the middle of the night with all the awnings up. They are always taken in before nightfall, even in clear weather. With a storm raging no captain that knew his business was ever wrecked with the boat's awnings still in place."

The most matter of fact among us has at least one pet superstition—even if he does deny it. The fellow who claims "There's nothing to that Friday the 13th thing—nothing at all!" will generally add, "And Friday's my lucky day, anyhow," and then smile smugly at the chap who dodges into a puddle rather than walk under a ladder. In his latest production Fairbanks, who is responsible for his own scenario, holds up to laughter every known superstition, with one exception: he does not spill the salt. And the reason is quite plain: that is his own pet superstition and he doesn't want it laughed at.

How many of those who laugh at the superstitions in the picture will go home and gravely waste the usual amount of time kicking off their left slipper in order to put on the right one first because they are still chuckling at the foolishness of anyone getting back into bed so that he can get out again "on the right side?"

This latter superstition is another of the funny incidents in "When the Clouds Roll By." WEITZEL.

"The Cinema Murder"

Cosmopolitan Production Starring Marion Davies Is Released By Paramount-Artcraft.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MARION DAVIES is still as beautiful as ever. In the "Cinema Murder," she plays the part of a moving picture actress who sees a fight between two men going on at the side of a canal and takes a snap shot of the affair. One of the men is supposed to be murdered, but this is not the murder mentioned in the title. That crime takes place at the opening of the picture, when the heroine is acting in a lurid melodrama for the movies. The main story, written by E. Phillips Oppenheim, is along the lines of his previous novels. It is a fairly entertaining tale, but has not been adapted to the screen with any too much skill. Marion Davies does well enough in the quieter scenes, but her lack of adequate dramatic force prevents the stronger moments from being impressive. Her gowns and her good looks are attractive, and she is supported by an excellent company, with Nigel Barrie, Anders Randolf, Reginald Berlow and Eulalie Jensen as its leading members. The production is satisfactory.

Story by E. Phillips Oppenheim.
Directed by George D. Baker.

The Story.

"The Cinema Murder" takes its title from the opening scenes of the picture, and refers to the rehearsal of a murder in a movie drama. Elizabeth Dalston, the heroine of the story, is an actress who has a moving picture engagement when the story starts. Sylvanus Power, a wealthy married man, wants to force his attentions on Elizabeth and arranges to have her discharged by the picture producer. He then offers to build her a theatre and star her in a new play. She accepts and goes to Europe to study dramatic art. A chaperon accompanies her. Returning through England, Power joins the party with his touring car.

Philip Romilly, a young English playwright, lives in a village situated on the road over which the Power party is traveling. Philip's cousin, Douglas, has stolen the funds of a leather company and is about to flee to the United States. A young girl to whom he is engaged, learns of this and wants to go with him. Philip comes upon them while they are talking at the side of a canal, and takes the girl's part. She leaves the cousins alone and a fight follows. Douglas is knocked, unconscious, into the water. Thinking he has killed him, Philip takes his passport and papers and starts for America, passing himself off as Douglas Romilly.

Elizabeth, from a nearby bridge, takes a snapshot of the fight. She meets Philip on the steamer and shows him the picture, but tells him from what she saw she knows he acted in self-defense. The two young people fall in love, and Philip lets Elizabeth read the first act of a play he is writing. When they arrive in New York, Philip finishes the play, and Elizabeth gets Power to open the new theatre with it. The play and the new star are both hits. Power finds out that his playwright and his star are in love, and is wildly jealous. While he is trying to get Elizabeth for himself, detectives arrive from England in search of the murderer of Douglas. Philip is placed under arrest, but the reappearance of Douglas, who was only stunned and who managed to reach shore and hide for a time, brings matters to a satisfactory end.

"The Triflers"

Edith Roberts Gives Pleasing Portrayal of Girl With Social Ambitions in Universal Feature.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Universal six-part production, "The Triflers," featuring Edith Roberts, is an entertaining adaptation of a story by Joseph Franklin Poland, carefully directed by W. Christy Cabanne. It may be truthfully said that the star is the picture's chief charm, so accurate is her conception of the character of the shop girl whose scheming to taste of life among the four hundred leads her through paths which she has not contemplated. The contrast between the humble life to which Janet Randall is accustomed and that which she meets among the gay set is well drawn. The discriminating vision which she betrays in judging of the merits of the two methods of life is a happy thought removed from the usual fallen angel proposition so often presented. David Butler, as the policeman sweetheart, is also one of the pleasant figures of the picture. And little Ben Alexander, although not as busy as usual, proves his worth in jacking up the scene in which he appears. Forest Stanley, as Monte Moreville, makes the most of a good opportunity.

"The Triflers" is a sure attraction for an adult audience.

The Story.

Janet Randall, the star performer in "The Triflers," is a shop girl whose dream of true joy lies on the plane of the four hundred. She stands in the street on her way home from work and watches the ladies of the social game as they flit by in their limousines, and wishes herself one of them.

When vacation time arrives she has devised a plan whereby she hopes to enter, for a brief period, the enchanted circle. With money saved during the busy season, she takes a room at a fashionable hotel, and plays the lady for a week. At the end of which time she discovers, to her dismay, that the accommodations have cost her twenty-five dollars a day, instead of that sum per week, as she had thought.

Monte Morville, a society favorite, noting her predicament, asks to be allowed to assist her, and in return asks her to pose as his wife for a day, for the purpose of ridding him of a chorus girl who claims money for broken promises. This escapade leads to some amusing situations which finally drive Janet back to her sweetheart and her former plan of life, a wiser and better girl.

Exploitation Angles: Your best angle here is to brief the story and tell that it is the tale of a girl who saves for a year for a week of fashionable life and comes to grief because she did not realize that the hotel terms were $25 a day and not for a week. Get people interested in the story and sell that. Then play on such of the cast as are local favorites.

"A Daughter of Two Worlds"

First National Attraction Presenting Norma Talmadge in a Beautiful Characterization.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A STORY derived from a novel by Le Roy Scott and made intensely interesting by a talented star and a highly intelligent director, the motive of "A Daughter of Two Worlds" is to show the influence of environment on character, or that there is no excellence without opportunity. Norma Talmadge is superb in the role of a girl who is compelled to live down a faulty early life, dispel the natural distrust of the man who loves her and overcome the prejudice of his family. She is always convincing, a veritable artist of the first rank.

Her support is admirable, Frank Sheridan as Black Jerry Malone, Jack Crosby as Kenneth Harrison, Virginia Lee as Sue and William Shea as Slim Jackson taking the honors. But to James Young, as director, must be accorded praise without stint for his skilful handling of material and situations somewhat hackneyed. He has heightened the lights and deepened the shadows until some powerful contrasts are reached. He may well feel proud of his work, and the First National of this brilliant premiere, for the picture held a packed house at the Strand profoundly interested.

The Story.

Jennie Malone is a "Daughter of Two Worlds." Her father is a dive keeper, and one of her associates a crook who uses her in a forgery for which she is arrested and released on bail. Her father now realizes that she must have better opportunity. He arranges through her uncle for her to go to a boarding school under an assumed name, as her uncle's ward from the West. There is a strong attachment between father and daughter, but Jennie takes to her new life seriously and forms a warm friendship for her room-mate, Sue Harrison.

Jennie is invited to the Harrison home during the holidays and becomes warmly interested in Sue's brother, Kenneth. She has a narrow escape while at supper in a fashionable restaurant, being recognized by the crook who implicated her in the forgery while he is among the professional dancers. She is also discovered by a faithful adorer of the underworld, but escapes both. Hungering to see her father, she goes to his place and is caught by the detective who first arrested her, but is released at the importunities of her father.

Still under a cloud, she continues her school life until she graduates among the best beloved. All is ready for an honorable marriage to Kenneth Harrison, and their engagement ball is in progress, when she is summoned to meet her humble adorer at nine-thirty, the moment at which a murder occurs. The unfortunate boy from the other world is framed by the real murderer, arrested, tried and convicted. To save him, Jennie must reveal her true identity. She sacrifices all her hopes to save the innocent man, but Kenneth Harrison and his family appreciate her nobility. In saving the boy she is cleared of the false charge against herself and restored to the arms of the man she loves.

"The Valley of Tomorrow"

Six Part American-Pathe Release Features William Russell in Strong Mountain Tale.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A LARGE amount of new and entertaining business has been brought forth in this six-part American-Pathe subject, entitled "The Valley of Tomorrow." It is a story of the mountain feud type, but dips down into human nature a little further than usually happens. The Morgans of Morgantown are a peculiar and mighty interesting lot. They have high notions of personal honor, and while "no Morgan can sleep" until he has revenged himself for a wrong against the family, there are mitigating circumstances which get due consideration.

William Russell, in the role of Dabney Morgan, is excellent. There are a wealth of character studies that are really close to the soil.

The scenic effects are genuinely attractive throughout this subject. Whether one is willing to admit the possibility of a love affair between Dabney and the sister of his enemy, the developments bring this about. Such a conclusion seems permissable amid the tragic scenes depicted, and it is not the first time that the blood shed by members of two families has united the survivors.

On realizing that the artist is already married, Sissy May has thrown herself over a cliff.

Upon receiving this information, Dabney presents the case to the sheriff and prevails upon that official to release him temporarily, promising to return for trial after he has settled with Colonna. While crossing a river, on horseback, Dabney and his mount become mired in quicksand. Dabney's life is saved by an approaching stranger. This man turns out to be none other than Colonna, who is fleeing from his pursuers.

Dabney's intention to kill Colonna is tempered by a resolve to give the artist a chance in return for having saved his own life. He lends him a horse and tells him to ride. A rifle shot, sent after the artist, brings him down to earth badly wounded.

The artist's sister appears and demands that Dabney try to save her brother. "Fang" Morgan, a cousin of Dabney's, insists that Colonna be finished outright. "Pegeen"

Bessie Love Is Happy Hearted Waif in Well Handled Vitagraph Picture.

Reviewed by Jane McCloskey.

THE adaptation of the Vitagraph picture, "Pegeen," written by Eleanor H. Brainerd, is an appealing bit of simplicity. Its opening, with a forlorn child, too old and too kind for her years, as the central character, is familiar enough. Neither is there any very startling novelty about the ensuing play, but somehow or other it grips your heartstrings, and you find yourself growing more interested in the straightforward charm of a plausible story, until the climax is actually felt rather than observed.

Bessie Love is child-like, unaffected, vivacious and natural, in the name part, although she does seem to be growing up in spite of herself. Indeed, the whole production makes no play for heavy dramatics and breath-taking thrills; it is simple almost to a fault, and moves easily to a conclusion. The character parts are well enough managed, with proper understanding, but a trifle stiffly by Ruth Gordon as Nora Moran, and artistically by George Stanley, the demented father.

Ed. Burns, as the New York artist and successful suitor of the "Smiling Lady," is good looking and fairly convincing. Charles Spear, as Jimmy, an untutored but good-hearted country lad, and Juan de la Cruz, as a man of the world who knows his limitations, all do themselves credit.

The settings are without particular interest, except that they are kept in unison with the modest tone of the characters. There are a few good fire scenes and some fast riding. Incidentally, doesn't there seem to be a tremendous amount of masked night riding being done in pictures?

The Story.

"Pegeen" is a bud sprung from Irish soil, the constant attendant of her poverty-stricken father, Danny, whose mind has been shattered by the loss of his wife. His days and nights are spent searching for her, until, in his madness, he sets fire to a number of barns in Happy Valley, thinking that by the light of their flames he can find his vanished Mary. The valley people trace the conflagrations to one Ezra Watts, a known chicken thief, and seize him for punishment, but Pegeen, knowing the real culprit, interferes and attests to Ezra's innocence.

In the excitement, Danny slips from her care, and after a futile search for him Pegeen is taken into the household of Nora Moran, the "Smiling Lady," whose self-appointed task in life is to cheer and encourage and befriend. Danny wanders to the cabin of Watts, who, remembering Pegeen's act and figuring that she would be happier without her father, hides the old man at his own peril. Meantime, Pegeen has endeared herself to the village folk and to a young New York artist (name unmentioned). Through his little housemaid, the artist meets the "Smiling Lady," but their mutual attraction is clouded by her engagement to an absent friend of her dead father's.

Soon, a second fire turns suspicion again upon Ezra and again Pegeen comes to the rescue and manages to interfere, but when still a third attempt is made, a band of masked villagers go for the "firebug" with bloodhounds, and Pegeen, terrified, traces her father to Ezra's cabin. Although the shack is surrounded with armed riders, she manages to make her way in under the floorboards, and there finds her father dying from a gun wound. He believes her to be his long sought wife, and despite the fact that the besiegers have set fire to the cabin, the child refuses to flee until her father is beyond all calling. She is rescued before it is too late by the artist and Jimmy, her country sweetheart. The "Smiling Lady's" romance is assured when her fiance, realizing her affection for the heroic artist, gracefull withdraws from the field, and Pegeen and Jimmy wander off like happy children to plan their future.

THERE is no doubt that Owen Moore has returned to the silent drama for a prolonged stay, and if his coming pictures are as good as "Piccadilly Jim," there will be a great many expectant theatre goers waiting for his productions. He has injected his personality into this story so forcefully that the whole thing is irresistible and a laugh from first until the final reel. The original story was written by P. G. Wodehouse, whose supply of wit and ability to develop laughable situations appears to be inexhaustible. The subtitles are very funny and add greatly to the spirit of the play. This picture is a good clean comedy, with an abundance of human interest, and is sure of meeting with widespread approval.

James Braithwaite Crocker, alias "Piccadilly Jim," is cleverly played by Owen Moore, who has caught the spirit of the story in fine style. As Ann Chester, the dainty heroine, Zeena Keefe is well cast and gives an excellent portrayal of the role. In the supporting cast are Alfred Hickman, George Bunny and other capable players.

Length about 5,000 feet.

The Story.

"Piccadilly Jim," otherwise known as James Braithwaite Crocker, is an energetic young man, once a star newspaper reporter in New York and now visiting his father, Mr. Bingley Crocker, and his step-mother in London. He runs wild through cabarets, theatre parties and is a general good sport. An account of his activities gains for him headline stories in the New York dailies. They are read with much disgust by his aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Pett, who claim that they kill their social standing.

The Petts visit England with their corpulent young son, Ogden, and try to persuade "Jim" to return home. Mr. Pett's pretty niece, Ann Chester, meets them and is seeking revenge on "Jim" for some reason or other, although he has never seen him. All of the time, "Jim" is wise to their actions, and when he hears Ann tell the Petts that she will secure passage on the Acquatania, he, too, makes reservations. Ann meets him on the boat and friendship springs up. During a conversation, she tells him that "Jim" Crocker is no good, so this necessitates his going under the fictitious name of Bayliss.

Before they arrive in America they are deeply in love with each other. After landing, all sorts of complications set in. Ogden Pett becomes unbearable in the household, so Ann seeks aid in having him kidnapped. The plan is all set, and from the time the kidnapping begins until the end of the play, when "Jim" embraces Ann, after she has forgiven him for criticising her poetry when he was a reporter, there is a continual line-up of laughable situations.

"The Willow Tree"

Metro Classic Starring Viola Dana Is Charming Story of Japan, Beautifully Produced.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ALTHOUGH closely related to "Madame Butterfly," the Metro Screen Classic, "The Willow Tree," starring Viola Dana, is a moving picture novelty of rare beauty and charm. The production is always correct in atmosphere, and the customs and habits of the Japanese are shown in all their quaintness and engaging simplicity. The principal set, the garden of a house occupied by a young Englishman, is a veritable feast for the eye; and the interiors of the dwelling are almost as attractive. An artistic device for introducing the different scenes of the story proper is employed, and the acting of the star and support blend in perfectly with the spirit of the picture. Not one jarring note is struck.

The story itself is a deft mingling of legend and fact, and contains not only a pretty love interest, but teaches a lesson of self-sacrifice and loyalty with much force. "The Willow Tree" will delight everyone that cares for the best in moving pictures. Adapted by June Mathis from the stage play by J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes and directed by Henry Otto, the screen version is superior to the original, the story lending itself to the wider latitude of the silent stage with great pictorial effect.

Viola Dana has never done anything better than her characterization of O-riu, the little Japanese heroine who teaches the young Englishman that love of country comes before everything else. Edward Connelly as Tomotada is remarkably lifelike, and Pell Trenton and Harry Dunkinson are capital as the two Englishmen in the story. The Japanese actors are all excellent.

The Story.

"The Willow Tree" relates to a Japanese legend which Tomotada, an image maker, tells a young Englishman, Ned Hamilton, when he wants to purchase a life-sized image of a beautiful young girl carved from the heart of a willow tree. According to the legend, in ancient times a warrior named Itomudo, growing tired of battle, went to live in the forest, and a beautiful woman, who was in reality the heart of a willow tree, became his mortal wife. When Itomudo was called again to fight for his country he refused to leave his Willow Princess, but she would not let him sacrific his honor and returned to her tree. Left alone, the warrior seized his sword and answered the call of duty.

Tomotada refuses to sell the image of the Willow Princess. But when his daughter, O-riu, who has fallen in love with Hamilton, runs away from a marriage arranged by her father, and her brother spends the wedding portion of the would-be groom, the image maker is forced to part with his masterpiece. After it is sent to Hamilton's home, O-riu wanders in and takes the place of the image in the cabinet. Having been told that a mirror placed in the bosom of the image will endow it with life, Hamilton tries the experiment and is well pleased when the pretty Japanese maiden pretends to come to life. The two become very fond of each other, and when a friend of Hamilton's arrives and tells him of the Great War which has just broken out he will not leave his Willow Princess. But O-riu contrives to make him believe that she has gone back to her image state again and Hamilton leaves for England. After doing his duty to his country, he returns to Japan and finds O-riu waiting for him.

"The Fear Market"

Alice Brady in Well-acted Society Play Produced by Realart.

Reviewed by Jane McCloskey.

"THE FEAR MARKET," by Amelie Rives Troubetsky, is a strong story on a new theme, ably starred by Alice Brady. The plot deals with the menace of society papers, whose scandalous expositions drive their victims to disaster, sometimes to death. The developments in this case, although intricate, are clearly carried through, and there is sufficient action in it to make an interesting film. Besides that, it is worthy propaganda and the subject has not been over-worked in previous pictures, so that it has the attraction of a novel idea well put forward.

Alice Brady, as Sylvia Stone, gives a good performance; she seems to have lost all her girlishness, but is good to look at in her grown-up way, and acts with understanding. The feminine element in a theatre will enjoy her lavish wardrobe. Frank Losee's Maxwell Stone, the human leech, who thrives on the public's misery, but has yet a spark of genuine humanity, as shown in his intense love for his daughter, gives a very polished presentation. The character of Dicky Wilkes, a "society lapdog," is excellently played by Alfred Hickman. The rest of the cast are as good, with the possible exception of Richard Hatteras as Oliver Ellis; he is good-looking and manly, but not particularly convincing. Special mention is due Henry Mortimer's delineation of the coward tenor.

The stage settings are adequate—beautiful hotels and lavish apartments both furnished in excellent taste. On the whole, the picture will be found entertaining. It's not amusing at all, quite the contrary—but the events are plausible and follow logically.

Directed by Kenneth Webb.

The Story.

This play opens with a conference between Maxwell Stone, publisher of a scandal sheet called "Society Chatter," and

Jim Carson, his tool, who to all intents and purposes heads the group of vultures and provides the "personal touch," as Stone's ownership is kept hidden, and the paper's business attorney. The occasion is an announcement by Dicky Wilkes, society scout the news of Mrs. George Hill's departure and gossip collector, of a choice morsel in for an Italian health resort, whereby hangs a tale.

Stone's daughter Sylvia, is also stopping there, and by the time her father arrives on the scene to pay her his annual visit, and incidentally to look over the "fear market," Sylvia has made friends with Mrs. Hill, wtih Milly Sayres, a rash, but good-natured society butterfly, with the latter's husband and with her brother, Oliver Ellis, owner of a New York morning daily. At the hotel, EEttore Forni is resting up from his operatic season, and Sylvia's infatuation for the artistic tenor leads her to the indiscreet step of elopement. Although she stops the affair at the discovery that Forni has no idea of marriage in his mind and escapes by making up a story of the Evil Eye, she is worried by her foolishness, but circumstances prevent a confession to her father. The scandal story about Mrs. Hill is printed after a futile attempt by "Society Chatter" to obtain money for its suppression. Not daring to face her husband after the exposition, Mrs. Hill kills herself, and Sylvia sets sail for New York with her friends, vowing to avenge her death by stopping the vile attacks, through the influence of Ellis' paper. The only come-back for the "leech league" is the possibility of getting something on Ellis himself. An opportunity comes when, at an artists' frolic, his sister Milly and Sylvia wear identical dominos, and one of the two is seen to go to Forni's apartment at midnight.

When Ellis is faced wtih that fact by Carson he makes inquiries, and Sylvia, with whom he is now in love, tells him that it was not Milly, but herself who was seen, that Forni was dying from the dagger-thrust of a cast-off sweetheart and had sent for her to lift the curse of the Evil Eye before he dies. Ellis trusts her explanation, and together they trap Carson as a blackmailer. Cylvia is heartbroken at the disclosure of her beloved father as the real power behind the throne. However, the shock of his own boomerang and his love for his daughter combine to reform him, and after a promise to stop the journal, she agrees to return to him for always and divide her love between Oliver and himself.

"The 13th Commandment"

Ethel Clayton Starred in Paramount-Artcraft Production Written by Rupert Hughes.

Reviewed by Herbert J. Hoose.

INSTEAD of calling Ethel Clayton's latest starring vehicle, "The 13th Commandment," it might have been safely named "Money," because that is what the whole story is about. The working of the drama is confined to the circles of refined society folk, and the splendor of their surroundings is always in evidence. The story will undoubtedly please most spectators. The writer had in mind the idea, why shouldn't a woman become self-reliant before she marries and be able to earn her own living.

Aside from one or two overdrawn scenes, the story is well told. Ethel Clayton is admirable in the role of Daphne Kip, the heroine. Anna Q. Nilsson does excellent work as the high-flying wife of Bayard Kip. The part of the husband has been successfully entrusted to Monte Blue. Charles Meredith plays the part of Clay Wimborn to perfection, and the remainder of the supporting cast consists of capable players.
